RUSSIAN ARMIES ALMOST IN SIGHT OF POLAND

Other Units Less Than Fifty Miles From Rumania

Whole German Line From Korosten to Berdichev Appears To Be Crumbling

150 TOWNS RETAKEN

By JAMES M. LONG
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 3—(AP)—Driving within 15 miles of the Polish border, advance Russian forces today captured Novograd Volynski, last major obstacle between the Russian armies and the old frontier in the Zhitomir region, Premier Joseph Stalin announced tonight.

The Russian drive toward Poland thus became a race between two advance columns of Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's army. The second column, farther north in the Korosten area, was reported earlier to have smashed into Poyaski, only 18 miles from old Poland.

Novograd Volynski, railway bastion 40 miles southwest of Korosten and the same distance northwest of Zhitomir, fell to "a decisive offensive of tank and infantry information", Premier Stalin said in the special order of the day, broadcast by Moscow. Marshal Stalin termed the town "a large railway junction and important stronghold of German defences."

London, Jan. 3—(CP)—Russia's 1st Ukraine Army sped on today almost in sight of Poland following the capture of Poyaski, last main fortified strongpoint on the Kiev-Warsaw railway 10 miles from the border.

At the same time other units of the victorious 1st surged southwestward toward Zhmerinka, key rail junction on the Odessa-Warsaw rail line serving the lower Ukraine, less than 50 miles from the Rumanian frontier.

The whole German line from Korosten south to Berdichev appeared to be crumbling before the unflagging Red Army onslaught and the exhausted remnants of Gen. Fritz Von Mannstein's once imposing army of 22 division were being slashed to ribbons.

The Moscow radio, in a broadcast recorded in New York by the Federal Communications Commission, quoted Stockholm sources as asserting that Gen. Kurt Zeitzler, chief of the German Army General Staff, and Gen. Alfred Jodl, Adolf Hitler's personal military adviser, had arrived at Von Mannstein's headquarters on the Russian front.

Given Wide Powers

Jodl, the broadcast said, has been given "very great power" by Hitler, including authority to remove army commanders from their posts.

The rampaging Soviet forces also were reported advancing far to the north in White Russia. There, the 1st Baltic Army was said to be less than 45 miles from Latvia.

In the drive on Poland west of Korosten, Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's northern wing yesterday swept up more than 150 towns and villages for a gain of 17 miles, the Moscow communique reported.

Vatutin's southern wing, striking simultaneously, captured Andreevichi, 15 miles northeast of Novograd-Volynski, important rail junction, and was threatening that vital German stronghold with imminent encirclement.

Fall Expected Hourly

Other fast striking spearheads swept through areas northwest of Berdichev, former headquarters of Von Mannstein, and fall of that strategic centre 25 miles below captured Zhitomir was expected hourly.

Below Berdichev, now outflanked, Soviet columns were racing down the Kiev-Zhmerinka railway, with only the towns of Kalinovka and Vinnitsa standing before the Odessa-Warsaw railway which feeds the German armies in the Dnieper river bend to the southeast. Zhmerinka, the junction point of the two rail lines, was but 35 miles distant, dispatches said.

Severance of the Odessa-Warsaw line would leave the enemy with a few inferior escape roads from Odessa into Rumania and could conceivably produce another major German debacle.

STRENGTHEN RELATIONS BY UNIVERSITY VISITS

Canton, N.Y., Jan. 3 (CP)—In a move designed to strengthen Canadian-United States relations, officials of St. Lawrence University announced today that two prominent Canadians will be invited to visit the university each semester.

Partisans Occupy Half of Banjaluka

London, Jan. 3 —(CP)— Yugoslav Partisans have occupied half of the city of Banjaluka, mining and agricultural city in central Bosnia and staff headquarters for the 2nd German Tank Army entrusted with the defence of the Nazi-held Adriatic coast, the Yugoslav Liberation Army announced today.

Marshal Josip Broz' (Tito's) war bulletin, broadcast by the Free Yugoslav radio and recorded by the Associated Press, declared bloody fighting was raging in the streets of Banjaluka, and that many German officers and men have been taken prisoner.

The German garrison in Novo Mesto, 40 miles east of Zagreb in eastern Slovenia and 30 miles from the Italian border, also was being besieged, and Tito's communique said all German attempts to break out had failed.

The Yugoslav communique reported hard but inconclusive fighting throughout eastern Bosnia, Hercegovina and Montenegro, with the Partisans on the offensive in the two latter provinces.

The German High Command Sunday claimed the capture of the island of Mljet off the Dalmatian coast in the Adriatic Sea, in what was regarded as a renewed flurry of Nazi naval activity reflecting their nervousness over the possibility of an Allied Balkan invasion by that route.

Other light Nazi naval forces were shelling the island of Logosta, midway between Korcula and Mljet, the Berlin radio said, evidently as part of a methodical campaign to cut off Tito's forces from their base of supplies in Allied-held southern Italy.

Allies Setting Stage for Invasion

Stockholm, Jan. 3 —(AP)— A Budapest dispatch to the Stockholms-Tidningen today said rumors circulating in Belgrade said the Allies were setting the stage for an invasion of Yugoslavia by making landings and establishing bridgeheads on the small islands off the Dalmatian coast in the Adriatic.

The dispatch added that a large majority or the Partisans and guerillas operating against the Germans in Yugoslavia and Greece have now been united under the leadership of Marshal Josip Broz (Tito).

The dispatch said many of Tito's divisions now were commanded by Allied officers, presumably British and Amercian.

13 Japanese Planes Destroyed in Burma

New Delhi, Jan. 3—(CP)— Allied aircraft shot down 13 Japanese planes and probably destroyed and damaged several others in a brisk air fight over Southern Burma Dec. 31, Admiral Lord Louis Mountbatten's headquarters announced today.

The communique said the battle broke out when Japanese aircraft attempted to attack Allied light coastal forces which were returning to base from operations including a bombardment of Japanese defence positions on Ramree island off the west coast of Burma.

Chungking, Jan. 3—(AP)—United States bombers opened their 1944 activity with a bombardment of Teho Va in French Indo-China and raided Japanese headquarters, barracks and communications in Central Burma the following day.

A communique said large fires were started at Teho Va. All planes returned safely.

10th Raid Of Obliteration Assault On Berlin Staged

334 CANADIANS AWARDED HONORS AT NEW YEAR'S

No More Civilian Recommendations Until Question Is Further Reviewed

SERVICE LISTS

Ottawa, Jan. 3 (CP)—The new year brought awards to 334 Canadians in the King's Honors List but also notice from Prime Minister Mackenzie King that the government will refrain from recommending decorations for civilians under the question of recognizing outstanding service is further reviewed, perhaps after the war.

Mr. King said the government's action does not affect further awards to members of the armed services.

The army received 126 awards in this year's Honors List against 103 for the air force, 59 for the navy and 46 for civilians.

The list for the Canadians was accompanied by a supplementary list of 20 awards to members of the R.A.F. for service in Canada.

The highest decorations conferred were 15 Companionships in the Order of St. Michael and St. George for civilians and nine Companionships in the Order of the Bath for members of the forces—four to the army, four to the air force and one to the navy.

Both civilian and service lists recalled acts of valor and fine service in cases of danger and in the face of enemy action, those for civilians including awards for bravery to merchant seamen. The navy list contained 43 operational awards for service in action, the army three commendations for valor and the air force a number of similar decorations.

Prominent Civilians

Prominent civilians receiving the C.M.G. included Dr. E. H. Coleman, Under-Secretary of State, C. Fraser Elliott, Deputy Minister of National Revenue for Taxation, Graham Towers, Governor of the Bank of Canada, and Donald Gordon, Prices Board Chairman.

The navy's operational awards included one George Medal, one Distinguished Service Cross, 26 Mentions in Dispatches and a number of officers of the Order of the British Empire, members of Order and British Empire Medals. The navy also received 16 Non-Operational Awards.

Three Distinguished Flying Crosses and 40 Mentions in Dispatches—all in the nature of Operational Awards—were in the air force list. The army awards included several recipients of the C B.

Twenty-three awards went to women, most of them to members of the forces.

The list did not include the recently-authorized Canada Medal and Mr. King said further consideration was necessary before it could be awarded.

Maniac Slasher Beats, Binds and Slashes Woman

Chicago, Jan. 3 — (AP) — A slasher who police assumed to be a maniac set upon a 27-year-old woman last night in the laundry of her home, beat her head against the wall until she became unconscious, tied her to a washing machine, and then ripped her body with a razor blade.

The victim, whose condition was termed fair today by hospital attendants, was Miss Florine Henry, a comptometer operator in the Federal Reserve Bank. She told police all she could see of her assailant was a "hairy hand."

She was found by her sister, Pauline, who summoned police.

Tail Gunner Continues to Fire From Bomber's Severed Tail Till It Sinks

Washington, Jan. 3—(AP)—The United States War Department today revealed the story of courageous Staff Sergeant Ben P. Colecchi, a tail gunner who continued firing at strafing enemy Zeros from the severed tail of his bomber until it disappeared in the ocean.

Witnesses on the Sept. 11 Paramushiru-Shimushu bombing mission brought back the word.

The four-engine bomber was attacked simultaneously by two Zeros and crashed. Fliers in the formation said the tail section of the sinking plane broke away from the rest of the wreckage and remained afloat momentarily. Sgt. Colecchi, sitting in that tail, continued a steady stream of fire at Japanese strafing planes until the compartment went out of sight.

He is listed as "missing in action." The Air Medal has been awarded him.

TORONTO VOTERS REJECT C.C.F. BID: CONBOY MAYOR

Lewis Duncan, Former Board of Control Member, Beaten 19,000

LARGE VOTE OUT

Toronto, Jan. 3 — (CP) — Toronto voters, rejecting the first organized bid of the C.C.F. in the city's political history, returned a full slate of non-party candidates in a New Year's day election which also sent Mayor Fred Conboy into office for his fourth term.

The mayoralty contest was a straight non-party fight between the 62-year-old mayor and Lewis Duncan, controller since 1941. Mayor Conboy rolled up a majority of more than 19,000 votes in a total of approximately 137,000.

This aggregate, representing 37 per cent of the city's 363,185 eligible voters, was the largest turnout since 1939 when more than 146,000 went to the polls.

All C.C.F. Candidates Beaten

All 23 candidates named by the C.C.F. were defeated—12 for aldermanic posts, 10 for Board of Education and one for Board of Control. Two C.C.F. 1943 council seats and three on the Board of Education were lost. In addition, William Dennison, 1943 alderman, failed in his bid for a Controllership, finishing seventh in a field of nine.

The 1944 four-man Board of Control will be made up of three members of the old Board — Robert H. Saunders, Fred Hamilton and William J. Wadsworth — and one newcomer, David A. Balfour.

Stewart Smith, Labor Progressive, who served as alderman in 1943, placed sixth in the Board of Control contests. Two of the same party were elected to aldermanic seats, Norman Freed and Charles Sims.

In all, 18 aldermen and 18 members of Board of Education were elected, two to each body from each of the city's nine wards.

Still Vote January 1st

The electorate turned down a plebiscite proposal to change the date of election from New Year's Day to the first Monday in December. Incomplete returns showed a majority of some 13,000 against the plan.

In suburban areas, C.C.F. candidates also met defeat, none of the party's four nominees in East York Township or the three in York Township being elected. Of five C.C.F. members who were candidates in York — although running outside the party's slate — only one was elected, Mrs. Mary A. Endicott who was named a Board of Education member in ward 1.

HEAVY DAMAGE CAUSED BY U. S. DAY RAID

London, Jan. 3 — (AP) — The American daylight bombing raid on the suburbs of Paris and Southern French air bases Friday did heavy damage to the big Hispano-Suiza airplane engine plant and two cam ballbearing plants, and destroyed at least 25 grounded planes, reconnaissance photographs revealed today.

The airbase at Cognac-Chateau Bernard, one of 3 fields similarly hit was blanketed, with hangars damaged heavily. Ten planes were smashed on the ground.

Tug Missing for Day In Icefield Towed Back to Erieau

Erieau, Ont., Jan. 3 —(CP)— Missing for a day and found in the ice fields off the southwest shoals near Point Pelee in Lake Erie, the steam tug Morgan, owned by the Detroit River Construction Co., and headed for Amherstburg from Erieau when she got caught in the ice, has been towed back to Erieau.

The Morgan came in behind the tug Beverley R., piloted by Capt. Herbert Goodison who, with Harold Goodison, had broken her out of the harbor ice here to make the rescue after the tug was sighted.

It was late Wednesday when the Morgan left Erieau. The boat came here about noon New Year's day, after the Beverley had taken all morning to make the return trip. She had gone down the lake the night before after the lost tug had been sighted by an airplane.

No worse for their experience were the captain, Bertram Fry of Berieau, and his crew.

The Morgan will remain locked in ice perhaps all winter at Erieau and will complete its trip in the spring.

HARBOR AIRSTRIP AT SAIDOR TAKEN BY U. S. TROOPS

Third Offensive Strike in New Guinea in Last Eighteen Days

OPEN SEA ROUTE

Allied Headquarters, New Guinea, Jan. 3 (CP)—United States soldiers landed at Saidor, New Guinea, captured the harbor and airfield and pinched off Japanese forces struggling in the jungle against advancing Australian troops, it was announced today.

The landing third offensive strike by Allied forces in 18 days, is a testimonial to the swelling striking power of Allied arms against the Japanese.

First reports from the landing scene, on the north coast of New Guinea, indicated the Japanese offered no opposition to the landing and only slight opposition after the airstrip fell.

The new American beachhead lies 55 airline miles southeast of the big Japanese supply base of Madang. Saidor is more than 100 airline miles from Finschhafen, nearest Allied-held coastal base to the south of Huon Peninsula.

Between Saidor and Finschhafen on the coast is a battered force of Japanese being steadily pushed northward by Australian fighters.

Move Toward Madang

Another force of Australians is moving toward Madang by pushing up the Ramu Valley, across the towering Finistere mountain range from Saidor, and was last reported within 15 miles of Bogadjim, a coastal base linked with Madang by a modern 20-mile highway.

American 6th Army forces swept ashore at Saidor yesterday morning after an air and naval bombardment had dumped 200 tons of explosives on the area.

In addition to their lack of ground defences, the Japanese were unable or unwilling to send up any aerial interceptors. Landing observers said long after the troops had swept ashore, enemy planes had failed to arrive from Madang or Wewak or any other Japanese airdrome, and the Americans had things their own way.

Capture of Saidor, less than 150 miles across the Vitiza Straits from the American holding at Cape Gloucester, gives the Allies a firmer grip on the choppy sea passage which opens the doorway to the sea route to the Philippines.

U. S. Plane Crashes Into Hwo Homes

Chattanooga, Tenn., Jan. 3 — (AP)—Three fliers were killed last night when a four-engined United States army plane crashed into two fashionable homes on famed Missionary Ridge, two miles from the centre of Chattanooga.

A wingtip of the plane knocked three stone columns from the front of the S. S. Price residence, and then exploded against the next-door home of Dr. David P. Houston, setting it afire.

The Houston house, a heavy stone structure, withstood the impact but was gutted by flames.

Both families were at home but no one was hurt.

BRITISH UNITED AS EVER SAYS PREMIER DREW

'It Makes One Proud To Be Canadian to See Our Men Everywhere' in U. K.

PREMIER BACK HOME

Toronto, Jan. 3—(CP)—Premier Drew of Ontario today returned to his home after a month's visit to England and said details of plans for the reopening of Ontario House in London would be discussed immediately with the cabinet.

The Premier, who came here from New York by train after a trans-Atlantic bomber trip, discounted a report that Lt.-Col. W. Basil Wedd, now with the Canadian Army overseas, would be named agent-general for the province in Britain. The appointment and the personnel of the staff of Ontario House—closed under the premiership of Mitchell F. Hepburn—will be discussed at the cabinet meeting.

It was expected at Queen's Park that the cabinet meeting would be held tomorrow and that the premier would also report on plans for post-war immigration from Britain and post-war markets for Ontario produce in Britain.

Young People Interested in Canada

In an interview today the Premier said there was much interest among younger people in Britain about coming to Ontario after the war.

"There is no doubt that we can have as many as we can handle of the best type when we are ready to absorb them."

The Premier had Christmas dinner with Canadian troops overseas and he spoke highly of the Dominion servicemen.

"It makes one extremely proud to be a Canadian to see our men anywhere in Britain. They carry themselves well, behave well and are extremely popular wherever they go. They have given Canada a wonderful name among the people of Britain."

Conditions "Extremely Good"

He described conditions in Britain as "extremely good" and while buildings are in need of repair and paint, the war has had no effect on the spirit of the people.

"Everywhere you find confidence but little loose optimism about an early end of the struggle. I found them just as united as ever in their war effort and in spite of the lack of and dispersal of war plants, their per capita production of war

21 Hours Elapse Between 2 Attacks Of Great Strength

More Than 1,000 Tons Bombs Dropped in First Raid on Sunday Morning

20 BOMBERS LOST

By GLADWIN HILL
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 3—(AP)—Berlin, the R.A.F.'s first target for 1944, was given its second seething bath of fire and bombs of the New Year today by British and Canadian airmen who delivered their 10th great blow against the charred capital.

The newest attack came while fires still were burning from a 1,000-ton or bigger assault that was made early Sunday and while German rescue workers were digging dead and injured from the ruins.

The Air Ministry, describing today's attack as "heavy," said 28 aircraft were lost in the Berlin raid. Mosquito stabs in Western Germany and Northern France and minelaying operations in enemy waters.

Two large concentrations of fire were left roaring in the city, the communique said, and Swedish dispatches declared the tortured German capital had had its worst night since the "destroy Berlin" campaign began Nov. 18.

Suburbs of Nice Attacked.

At the same time the Vichy radio said the suburbs of Nice in Southern France had been attacked by British or American planes. The broadcast gave no date for the attack, however.

About 21 hours elapsed between the two attacks on Berlin, but Swedish correspondents said the menace of delayed action bombs had kept residents of the city in shelters until 3 p.m. yesterday and that less than eight hours later the sirens were shrieking again. The main blow fell several hours later however.

Hitler's Palace Hit.

Swedish reports said Hitler's luxurious new chancellery on the Wilhelmplatz was one of the places hit in the aerial barrage which struck first at the outlying industrial areas and then worked to the official and residential areas in the heart of the capital.

It was regarded as extremely doubtful Hitler was near to witness the damage, however, and the dispatches did not say how badly the building was wrecked. The Tempelhof airdrome area was reported to have been hit heavily again.

Berlin has now received upwards of 14,000 tons of bombs in the 10-raid knockout campaign, and between 20,000 and 25,000 tons of explosives and incendiaries since January, 1943. As an example of the destructive power of the explosives dumped on the Nazi nerve centre, only about 11,000 tons of bombs were used in practically wiping Hamburg from the map.

A Berlin announcement said briefly "fresh devastations were caused in several districts" in the "terror attack against the population of the Reich capital".

In spite of bad weather, the R. A. F. and R.C.A.F. struck around 3 a.m., hurling down a terrific load of high explosives and incendiaries which greatly augmented the previous devastation of official and residential sections.

Swedish reports indicated that Berlin's defences were being thoroughly disrupted by canny strategy.

A Swedish expert in air raid protection in Berlin during the Nov. 22 attack when 2,300 tons were dropped said enormous fire damage was done because the German fire fighting organization was slow in starting to work. He said a special force of R.A.F. planes circled the city for 90 minutes dropping small bombs and keeping the German services under cover, until the heavy bombers roared over with their blockbusters.

Then the concussion of the big bombs formed a Hurricane that made buildings burn like blowtorches.

The newest attack came while fires still were burning and German rescue workers still were digging dead and injured from the ruins left by a raid early Sunday morning in which more than 1,000 tons of bombs were dropped.

About 21 hours elapsed between the two attacks, but Berlin correspondents of Swedish newspapers reported that the menace of delayed action bombs kept residents of the city in shelters until 3 p.m. yesterday and that less than eight hours later the sirens were shrieking again.

The Jan. 1 raid cost the R.A.F. 28 bombers, of which two were Canadian.

R.C.A.F. fliers returning from the New Year's night attack told of smoke rising 25,000 feet above the battered German capital. Three squadrons of Lancasters — the Goose, Thunderbird and Leaside—took part in the raid.

Sgt. G. R. Sweetzir of London, Ont., turned in a good night's work as he shot down a Nazi fighter which attempted to interfere with the armada. Others on the raid included Sgts. Jack Cobbett, of Hamilton, Ont., Rennie Dupuis, of Rutter, Ont., Vern Muser, Wallenstein, Ont., John Kennedy, Brockville, Ont., and Vic Racher, Hagersville, Ont.

With R.A.F. Lancasters went FOS. J. G. Thompson, Brampton, Ont., and R. W. Braid, Hamilton.

14,000 Tons Since Nov. 18 Dropped

By the series of heavy attacks, beginning Nov. 18, the R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. have carried at least 14,000 tons of bombs to the German capital, half of this destructive weight being delivered during the four big raids in December.

While the big bombers were over Germany, R.A.F. aircraft at home were chasing a handful of German planes which raided England. Four of the attackers were shot down. Bombs fell in a southeast England residential district injuring a few persons. Some of the planes got through the London area, causing an alert but accomplishing little else.

One woman was reported killed in the raid on England.

One of the attacking German planes was chased back to France before it was shot down.

The R.A.F.'s cross channel pursuer was Wing Cmdr. John Cunningham. It was his 19th night victim which put him in a tie with Wing Cmdr. J. R. D. Braham as the R.A.F.'s star night fighter pilot.

Captain, 3 Officers, All Canadians, Share in Victory in Bay of Biscay

By ROSS MUNRO
Canadian Press War Correspondent

A British Port, Jan. 3 — (CP Cable) — Three Canadian officers including her Commanding Officer, Capt. H.T.W. Grant of Halifax, shared in H.M.S. Enterprise's roaring victory in the Bay of Biscay when the grand old lady of the British cruiser fleet teamed up with the cruiser Glasgow to engage a flotilla of 11 German destroyers, sink three and rout the others in disorder.

Gunnery officer in charge of the seven six-inch guns which blasted the enemy ships for more than two hours in the engagement last Tuesday was 30-year-old Lt.-Cmdr. Geo. Graves of Vancouver.

Lieut. Walter O'Grady, 25, of Toronto, was air defence officer directing ack-ack guns during and after the surface fight.

The 18-year-old Enterprise, one of the Royal Navy's oldest cruisers, now is back in port after the action and the ship's company is somewhat aghast now the shooting is over at the audacity with which Grant closed with the powerful enemy force which might have sent both cruisers to the bottom had the destroyers stuck together and fought as a team.

"The Enterprise is a proper old dowager and we do not like to think too much of her age because it makes us feel we are expendable in action," said one officer, laughing. "But the way Capt. Grant handled her was magnificent. The Enterprise just lifted up her skirts, rolled up her sleeves, waded in and handed out her heavy punches."

For most of the personnel in the ship, including Capt. Grant, who is a son of a former Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, MacCallum Grant, this was the first action.

Grant, 44, has been in the Royal Canadian Navy all his life and now is on loan to the Royal Navy. He took command of the Enterprise last August, the only Canadian commanding a cruiser.

The action began with destruction of a German blockade runner with which the German destroyers probably came out to rendezvous.

Capt. Grant paid the highest tribute to the work of Capt. C. P. Clarke in the Glasgow who was the senior officer in the action.

"Capt. Clarke did a very excellent job in placing us between the enemy ships and the French coast," Capt. Grant said.

"I am particularly proud too of the Enterprise's company, the great majority of whom were new sailors, bolstered with a sprinkling of old salts."

The sea was moderately rough for the action and it was "Bay of Biscay weather," Grant said.

"We manoeuvred about and the action was at various ranges with our cruisers closing in all the time. The Germans employed evasive tactics under a smokescreen. The two cruisers finally crippled three destroyers and then we sank them by gunfire. There were hits on others before they withdrew late in the afternoon."

The Enterprise, whose only other action in this war was covering the evacuation of Norway in the spring of 1940, showed few signs of battle. Her only casualty was a bugler who

Capt. W. E. Smith Reports for Duty With the O.P.P.

After serving nearly three and one half years with Canada's armed forces both in Canada and overseas, Captain W. Everett Smith of this city returned to civilian life and resumed his position as constable with the Ontario Provincial Police at District Headquarters here on New Year's day, Acting Inspector Harry Storey announced today.

Provincial Constable Smith was attached to No. 8 District Headquarters of the O.P.P. at the outbreak of war and enlisted in the Royal Canadian Artillery here, he gained his commission as a lieutenant. After training at Petawawa Lieut. Smith proceeded to England with the R.C.A. where he was promoted to the rank of captain. He was retired to civilian life some time ago owing to ill health.

Jas. G. Phillips, Of Phillipston, Dies at Ottawa

The passing of Mr. James Gardiner Phillips of Phillipston, in his 85th year, which occurred at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. McGregor Easson of Ottawa, on December 31st, has brought deep feelings of regret to a large circle of friends.

The late Mr. Phillips, the third son of Marcus B. Phillips, and Catharine Garrison, was a descendant of Asa Phillips, a United Empire Loyalist, who with many relatives came to Hay Bay from Massachusettes, and later to the section of Thurlow Township, afterwards called Phillipston.

During his long life he was deeply interested in the affairs of the community. In his early life he showed a great interest in music which continued for many years until ill-health forced him to retire from active life. He was leader of Bethel Choir for about 55 years, and with his wife took part in concert work in the Belleville District.

In 1886 he was married to Cornelia Comins, youngest daughter of D. L. Comins and Mary Fraser. His wife who shared an equal interest in community life and music, predeceased him six years ago.

Mr. Phillips followed in the footsteps of his father as trustee of Bethel Church. As a young man he evidenced a great interest in the manufacture of cheese. He was one of the original patrons of Zion Hill Cheese Factory, later occupying the position as president of the company. Politically he was a staunch Liberal all his life, but he never allowed politics to interfere with friendships.

Ten years ago he rented his farm and bought what was known for many years as the Wells home at Phillipston. Seven years ago Mr. and Mrs. Phillips celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, which was marked by the community in a fitting manner.

The funeral service was held on Monday, January 3rd, at his late home at Phillipston and was conducted by Rev. George McKenzie, pastor of Bethel Church.

WITH R.C.A.F.

Jim Follwell

"Jim" Follwell, brother of Alderman Frank Follwell and E. E. "Ted" Follwell of Belleville, who has for the past several months been Y.M.C.A. Recreational Supervisor at the 14th Street Military Barracks, Owen Sound, left that city on December 23rd, and will report to the R.C.A.F. with which he will have the rank of Flight Lieutenant, which may possibly take him overseas. "Jim" was exceedingly popular with all ranks, both officers and men, at the barracks. As said of him by his many friends, he "fitted in" and became a leader in all of the recreational activities at the barracks during his stay.

"Jim" is a graduate of the Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph, holds the degree of Master of Arts and during his student days distinguished himself in athletics. He was a star of the champion O.A.C. rugby team while at Guelph and later played two seasons with the Toronto Argonauts.

Well known in Belleville where he attended primary school and the Collegiate, this news of "Jim's" advancement and commissioning in the R.C.A.F. will come as a pleasant surprise to his friends here, as it did to those in Owen Sound where they thought so highly of him. Mr. M. B. Dulmage, managing editor of the Owen Sound Daily Sun-Times, most aptly said: "We got to know 'Jim' fairly well while he was here and his leaving was very much regretted by many friends. He is a fine type of young man, one of whom Belleville might well be proud."

New Year Given Appropriate Welcome in City

As predicted in Friday's paper, the New Year was ushered in in Belleville with ample noise and celebration to make the newcomer feel completely welcome. Many persons got off to an early start and approached the advent of the New Year with high and gay spirits in the various places where dances were held. Notably hilarious were the revellers who attended the dance at the Trianon Ballroom where, amid yards and yards of paper streamers, confetti, and to the raucous sounds from paper horns, the hour of midnight was greeted. Further demonstration of the turn of the year was exhibited at the Belleville Club where many of the city's prominent businessmen and their wives and friends gathered to speed the old, and tired year on its way and wish each other the very best and a victorious New Year.

Farther afield from the downtown section of the city, No. 5 I.T.S. held a dance and floor show to which hundreds of Belleville people had been invited. Between two and three hundred of the city's young ladies, the hostesses of the Red Triangle Hostess Club, attended this event as partners for the airmen stationed there. It is reported that the dance scheduled for the Sergeants' Mess at Trenton Air Station was a quiet and informal affair to which members of the mess and friends were invited.

A return to the city and a visit to the Armouries where two parties were in full swing disclosed that the officers upstairs, and the sergeants downstairs, were both enjoying themselves and having fun. Neither party was large due to the restricted quarters in which the dances were held. However, what was lacking in quantity was amply made up for in quality.

The three theatres welcomed in the New Year with packed houses and at least two of them greeted the midnight with Scottish tunes played by the Belleville Pipe Band.

Pte. N. F. Sager Killed in Action

Member of the British Columbia Regiment, Private Norman Frederick Sager, son of Mrs. Edith Sophia Sager, 97 West Bridge Street, has been killed in action, according to information received from the Director of Records, Ottawa. Private Sager was born 28 years ago in Saskatchewan where his parents had moved from Hastings county. The mother moved to Belleville two years ago following her son's enlistment. Private Sager was a nephew of Mr. Bert Mason, Geddes Street.

Some Timely Thoughts On New Year's Resolutions

How many New Year's Resolutions were made Friday evening, on the eve of 1944? How many resolved to do more than they did in 1943 to help win the war? How many pledged themselves to giving more generously throughout the new year to maintain the speeding toward victory which has been gaining momentum since the latter part of the old year? How many made resolutions only to laugh and say that resolutions are never kept, anyhow? These 1944 resolutions must be kept, there is no option unless one wants to see all that has been gained falter and stop for lack of co-operation from those whose job it is to keep them going.

In peacetime, resolutions such as to give up smoking, stop drinking, to be kind and considerate of our friends, to pay stricter attention to business matters, are splendid, but in peacetime these can be broken and no harm done to anyone excepting the person making the resolutions. In wartime, a resolution made before midnight on December 31st., is a promise made to others besides ourselves. When you resolve to save more money in the form of war savings certificates or stamps, you are promising to keep someone's boy in sufficient equipment and supplies throughout the year that he might be in a stronger position to protect himself, while protecting you and your rights.

Let us resolve, in this year 1944, that come what may, win or lose, we will not let those boys down. Then, let us examine that resolution: At the present moment, it is to provide them with the essentials of war, ammunition, guns, tanks, aeroplanes, food and most important of all morale, the feeling of security, that we at home are doing our all to back them up; it means that we must protect those whom they left in our charge while they crossed the seas to fight, the wives, children, aged mothers and fathers; it will mean that we will have a country for them to come home to and find those things they fought for not lost, but won.

They left a democracy, a country of which they were proud, which they loved to the degree of being willing to die for it, not simply to don a uniform and travel around the world at the government's expense, but with devotion in their hearts, therefore, let there still be a democracy when they return.

Let us resolve, each individual Canadian, each official of office whether it be government, or just business, that we will not steal their birthright during their absence. Let us resolve that there will be a place for them to wash the mud and grime of Africa, Sicily, Italy . . . and, finally, Germany, from their hands and faces in the pure water of freedom.

Let us resolve, that not one of them will ever turn to one of us and say . . . "SHAME!"

Let us resolve, that when the time comes, if it be 1944, or 1945, or whenever it may be, that we can hold out our welcoming hands and say to them: "Well fought, friends," and know that the hand will be accepted.

Let us resolve to make 1944 a year of victory even if that may not imply the end of hostilities.

Let us resolve to keep this the true "Home Front" and protect it as other fronts are being protected by them.

Let us resolve to give Canada to the Canadians and not to others.

Several City and District Men Represented in New Year's Honor List

Belleville and Belleville district service personnel were well represented in the New Year's Honor List containing the names of 384 Canadians, and in the R.C.N.V.R. promotions list, both announced over the new year.

Award of the Air Force Cross has been made to Wing Commander Herbert M. Wilson, son of Col. H. Wilson and Mrs. Wilson, Trent Road, who has recently been posted overseas following a long term of instructional duty in Canada. Born in Belleville W.C. Wilson attended Queen Mary School, Belleville Collegiate and Albert College and attended St. John's College at Winnipeg and also the University of Manitoba.

Attaining his civilian's pilot licence with Leavens Brothers at Barker Field, Toronto, prior to the war, he enlisted in the R.C.A.F. in November, 1939 and for his instructional service has been commended by the King. Prior to his going overseas he was acting commanding officer at Uplands, Ottawa.

A Trenton boy, Flying Officer Alex Kennedy, has also been awarded the Air Force Cross. FO. Kennedy is stationed at No. 6 Repair Depot.

Other district service personnel included in the New Year's list were Nursing Sister Flt. Lieut. Mabell Montgomery of Brighton who was named an Associate of the Royal Red Cross. She is stationed at the Trenton R.C.A.F. Station. The Air Force Medal has been awarded to Flt. Sgt. Harry Chipperfield of Woodstock, Ontario, now taking a course at No. 1 Flying Instruction School at Trenton.

Promoted

Naval promotions of interest to the Belleville district were that of Ewart M. Bassingthwaighte of Ottawa to the rank of acting lieutenant commander while holding present appointment. Lieut. Commander Bassingthwaighte formerly lived in Belleville where he was an executive official with the Stewart Warner Alemite Co.

Morton B. George of Tweed, Ontario, has been promoted to Surgeon Lieutenant Commander.

Five Babies Including Twins Born At Hospital on New Year's Day

1944 was well on its way before the first baby of the new year was born at 9.45 a.m. in the Belleville General Hospital. "Miss 1944" is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Gallagher 7 Mercia Street Trenton. Five babies in all were born on New Year's day in the hospital, four girls and one boy, the boy being one of twins. There have been no babies of Belleville parents born since the New Year up until eight o'clock this morning.

The second baby girl of the new year is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Burke of 186 Dundas Street East, Trenton, and was born shortly after lunch at 12.45. The third and fourth babies born were twins to Mr. and Mrs. John Panko, 8 Nelson Street, Batawa, a boy and a girl at 3.45 and 3.55 p.m. The fifth and last baby born on January 1st, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Nicholls of Frankford, and this youngster first saw the light at the highly respectable hour of 4.30 p.m.

A number of years ago a controversy was fought between two factions of people, medical men and astrologists, that more girl babies were born during Leap Year than boy babies. No one ever discovered the facts other than that on some Leap Years there are more girl babies born than on others, and, still, during other Leap Years, there were more boy babies born than girl babies. However, it is apparent that the girls are in the lead as far as Belleville and district is concerned, and the very heartiest birthday wishes go to the four misses and the single upholder of the male side.

The four doctors officiating at the births were, in order of the arrival of the babies, Drs. J. V. Byrne, J. W. Farley, E. A. McQuade (the twins), and Dr. Dafoe. The Belleville General Hospital reported, that no babies were born during the twenty-four hours of Sunday, January 2nd.

Not One Serious Motor Accident In City Over Entire Holiday Period

"It was most commendable the manner in which citizens in general responded to our requests of sober and sane driving during the Christmas and New Year's holiday periods. It is with pride I can announce there wasn't a single serious motor accident in Belleville during the entire holiday period, while the absence of serious motor accidents was also noted as our streets were free from such collisions," revealed Chief W. R. Probert today as he extended the thanks of the police department to all citizens for their safe and sane operations of motor vehicles during the holiday period.

Crime at Low Ebb

Crime in general was at an exceedingly low ebb both the city and Provincial Police authorities said after taking holiday stock today.

"Our department investigated a few minor matters and on Sunday a motorcar turned over at Latta, but no person was injured. Generally speaking the behaviour of the public in the county was on a par with the citizens of Belleville when it came to safe, sober and sane actions over both holidays," reported Acting Inspector Harry Storey of the Provincial Police headquarters today.

City police recovered a watch and camera that had been reported stolen last week the matter being purely a family affair. The first session of police court for the year 1944 will be held on Tuesday.

Business and Financial Outlook for Canada During the Next Year

By Roger W. Babson

(Copyright 1943)

Babson Park, Mass., Dec. 31—My forecast is divided generally into two parts: The period up to the defeat of Germany and the one following. I am fairly confident that the major battles will be fought before 1944 is too far along; hence, the hope that the year will justifiably divide into two periods.

General Business and Production

I expect my Babsonchart Index of the Physical Volume of Business will average about 190 preceding the defeat of Germany. With Germany out there will be a prompt transition leading to a sharp temporary drop in business volume. I should expect my Business Index, after the end of fighting in Europe, to touch at least the X-Y Line of Estimated Normal before resuming an advance to reflect concentration of war effort on Japan and the resumption of more civilian output. This would be a decline of only about 15 percent as a minimum. It will be eased by the irregularly downward business trends already experienced since the winter of 1942.

AGRICULTURE

We cannot expect much improvement in agriculture for the first half of 1944. However, a higher price structure for agricultural products would not surprise me. I also feel certain that farmers will feel even better in 1944 than they did in 1943. Considering labor, it is difficult to anticipate that the first half of 1944 will permit sowings and general farm preparation for larger crops than in the last two years.

On the other hand, the strength in agricultural commodity prices is a warning to expect larger crops even though estimates may be lower. In any event, purchasing power in the farm commodities will reflect the benefits from the 1943 large crops for higher prices. Labor shortage will remain acute but reaping should be satisfactory during the second half of the year.

MINING

I expect continued higher output in all non-ferrous mining (except precious metals) until the end of fighting in Europe. Then managements will be concerned with problems in reverse of those experienced up to now. Instead of finding new help, mine managers will decide which employees to keep through the temporary slump. Any prospects of prompt reversal to peacetime industries would lift the output of lead and zinc at the expense of shutdowns of curtailment in the copper mines. In general, the outlook for 1944 rests entirely on the timing of Germany's defeat. Earnings in the interval will be very poor

FUEL, ELECTRIC POWER AND OIL

In estimating next year's trends in the fuels industries, we must consider that Canada has considerable virility. The rate of growth estimated from data comprising my Index of the Physical Volume of Business amounts to over 3 per cent per year. Recalling that 1937 was the last boom year previous to War businessmen should appreciate that the readjustment ahead might still leave business well above the boom level of 1937. Thus, fuel needs will remain great.

It is difficult to anticipate greater output of coal due to the nature of Canada's coal industry but I expect coal output to decline less than the index of general business activity. Hydro-electric power output will continue close to maximum. After Germany's defeat a rather sharp reduction can be expected. The growing petroleum industry should continue to make gains. 1944 may give Canada a pleasant surprise as a result of intense prospecting. Imports of oil will increase substantially over the 1943 level.

FARM PRODUCTS

I believe food manufacturing will surpass the 1943 level by a slight margin. Flour mills for a time were at peak activity. I expect another instance of this in 1944. I do not expect substantial gains from 1943 levels in hog and sheep slaughtering, but the number of cattle and the prosect of good prices certainly should increase slaughter. A considerable gain can be anticipated in sugar meltings.

It is natural to expect a sharp increase in cheese and butter production. It will take at least two years after the War for Europe to meet even her most urgent dairy needs. The restoration of minimum inventories of food in Europe is a postwar job in which Canada will play a major part.

TEXTILES

Textile activity is likely to recede. Cost factors are not favorable. This I consider the major problem. Cost factors in cotton and wool textiles have surpassed the purchasing power gains of the average citizen. The industry will operate under certain handicaps. I expect some decline in activity, but it will not be great.

PULP AND PAPER

Recent energetic efforts to solve Canada's vital pulp and paper problems will be beneficial. While curtailment of consumption in the States will be needed, this does not mean that Canadian output will suffer. On the contrary, demand for newsprint and other paper and pulp products is so great that I expect 1944 activity to remain high both before and after the defeat of Germany. A gain of 10 per cent in newsprint output over 1943 would not be surprising. Lumber trends also remain fundamentally favorable.

TOBACCO

The tobacco products manufacturing industry will probably be able to hold much of its war gain. I would not, however, be surprised to see output in 1944 exceed that of 1943. Tobacco supplies are running short. Costs are rising. At the end of the German War, there will be a huge temporary demand from Europe.

BUILDING

I expect no further declines in building from recent levels. There should be a resumed uptrend in residential building. Back-logs of building supply orders are rising.

MONEY AND BANK DEPOSITS.

So far finances have been maintained in a more conservative and less dangerous position than in the States. Price levels and living costs have not been allowed to advance as much. On the other hand, financing methods for war funds have led to percentage increases in deposits as great as in the United States. Only Canada's much more rapid rate of growth in production compensates somewhat for this. Against the peak of $8 billions in demand deposits in 1929, the current figure is near $18 1-2 billions. Deposits with the Bank of Canada increased nearly 35 per cent within a year.

INFLATION

During a period of wartime restrictions it is difficult for inflationary forces to break loose. Now, price trends, political pressure and banking statistics all point to a loosening from the original excellent controls. The businessman or investor who in 1944 forgets to remain firmly convinced of the dangers of inflation (and the possibility that it will take place) is not looking at the facts. Recall the warnings preceding the current world tragedy. So it is with inflation. One must judge more by the actions or inaction of people than by one's hopes.

BONDS AND STOCKS

High-grade bonds will probably drift lower in price while medium-grades will hold at recent high levels. As a general rule, the trend of stock prices in Canada will continue to meet the supporting forces of an expanding monetary supply.

This trend is also backed by well-protected managerial efficiency, strengthened working capital positions and prospects of a postwar excess profits tax abatement when normal business volumes for Canada will exceed the prewar normals by about 20 per cent. There is not yet general appreciation of what these favorable developments will mean.

14 Fatalities In East Canada Over Weekend

By The Canadian Press

There were 14 New Year's weekend fatalities in Eastern Canada. Six died as a result of traffic accidents, three were killed in the crash of an R.C.A.F. plane in Prince Edward Island and one died from burns. A railway accident, electrocution, suicide and a falling tree limb claimed one life each.

Manley Martin, 45, of Gananoque, Ont., was killed on a highway near Kingston Saturday when his car struck a pole. Mrs. Bernice Anderson of St. Catharines, Ont., was killed there Saturday when the car in which she was riding collided with a street car. A double fatality resulted in Lachine, Que., Saturday when a car crashed into a Canadian National Railways train at a level crossing. Car occupants Jean Paul Lalonde and Henry Senecal, both 19, were the victims. George Fifle of Montreal, one of a carload of skiers, was killed Sunday in a collision with a Montreal-bound train at St. Sauveur, Que. Mrs. Elizabeth Johnson, 30, of Overbrook, Ont., was killed New Year's eve when the motor car in which she was riding struck a streetcar in downtown Ottawa.

Three airmen were killed Friday afternoon when an R.C.A.F. plane crashed on a farm two miles from a Prince Edward Island airport. Next-of-kin have been notified and their names will be released shortly.

Baby Burned

The 17-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. William Cave of Bolton, near Toronto, burned to death in his carriage Saturday when fire destroyed the dwelling in which he was placed.

The body of Pte. John Croker, 53, a member of the Veterans' Guard of Canada, was found Saturday night on a Canadian National Railways track in New Toronto by a railway yard employee after he had been killed by a passenger train.

Judith Ann Gooderham, eight, was electrocuted in her Toronto home Sunday morning when she came in contact with an electric toaster while climbing upon a metal sink.

William Durocher, 44-year-old foundryman awaiting trial on a murder charge, was found hanging in his Montreal jail cell Sunday by a rope made of strips of his clothing.

William Callan, 41, Toronto Parks Department employee, died Saturday in hospital from injuries received Friday when struck by a falling limb from a tree on which he was working.

PROPRIETOR CONGRATULATED

Los Angeles, Jan. 3. (AP)—Victor Voida wasn't certain he could fire a gun; he never had tried, until—two robbers tried to hold up his liquor store. Voida seized a revolver he bought two years ago for such an emergency. One robber fled, but the other fell, wounded in the shoulder and abdomen. Police congratulated Vioda and gave him more cartridges.

DOING SOMETHING ABOUT IT

Santa Monica, Calif., Jan. 3. —(AP)—Girls with broken hearts are doing something about it. The Women's Auxiliary of the Brush-Off Club has been founded for girls who have been jilted by Service men. United States army men in Algiers who had been rejected by girls back home formed the original Brush-Off Club. The idea is to bring about correspondence among the jilted of both sexes.

The King's New Year Honors

Three hundred and thirty-four Canadians are honored for services mainly in connection with the war in the King's New Year honors. 126 awards go to the army, 103 to the R.C.A.F., 59 to the Royal Canadian Navy and 46 to civilians. This is the last award of civilian honors until after the war or until the whole question of civilian awards is further reviewed. Military honors will continue to be made.

During the war according to Prime Minister King Canadians had been called upon for patriotic effort and for devoted service in every department of the national life and in all parts of Canada. Therefore there were more suggestions of persons worthy of awards made than there were awards to distribute. The Canada medal has not yet been granted to anyone and he said that further consideration was necessary before it could be awarded and also before action could be taken on the establishment of a distinctly Canadian order, recommended some time ago by the parliamentary committee.

Well-merited honors have been bestowed for the performance of noted service on behalf of the Dominion and Empire. The names of those so honored are well known to Canadians and the citations show in what capacity they have been able to do outstanding service in wartime.

Auspicious Opening of 1944

The passage from the old year to the new brought realism to the Germans that this is wartime. One of the greatest menaces to the German army has developed in the mighty Russian offensive which threatens to cause disintegration of the German front in the east. Germany is here looking upon the most serious developments since the war was launched against Russia in June, 1941. The Red forces are driving on close to the Polish border and to the Rumanian boundary.

On the last day of the year Canadians forced the Germans back in the area north of Ortona, and 3,500 planes went over Europe in a record air raid on the same day.

The surge of Allied power on all fronts in the last day of the old year gave Germany ground for grave anxiety as the hour approached of the entry of the new year which bears the greatest possibilities for victory for the Allies has been predicted in 1944 by General Eisenhower. United Nations might is everywhere on the offensive against Germany.

Hitler Grim and Gloomy

It is a far different tune that Hitler is calling the Germans to dance to than it was in 1938 and 1939. Things have changed from that day of Nazi hope before and after Hitler took the plunge which is bringing Nazism, Germany and Hitler to a defeat which will be so complete, the United Nations intend, that Germany will never be able to rise again to threaten the world.

On New Year's Eve nothing but gloom dripped from Hitler's message to Germany. Now he tells them that there will be no victors and losers but only the survivors and the annihilated. Like Goebbels he threatens to answer the Allied raids on Germany's war-industrialized cities. Hitler's messages become more and more progressively gloomy as season after season passes. It is not so long since that he told Germany Russia was beaten never to come back. But many things have happened since that prediction and now Russian heavy artillery is within range of the Polish border. Hitler may well be in jitters as the answer of Russia to the invasion of Russia by Germany in 1941 is about to be delivered on soil not far from Germany and finally on German soil itself. The man who declared the Russians beaten less than two years ago now sees the victorious Red legions marching on and on against what will ultimately be Germany herself. Russia's great victories of the past year have been among the greatest German defeats in their centuries of warfare.

Hitler no longer speaks of victory but of annihilation and survival. On the other hand Allied leaders see victory perching on the United Nations' banners within this twelvemonth just begun. The Allies have been growing in power and might and Hitler's forces have been dwindling and are everywhere long since forced to the defensive. It takes no prophet to see which side is winning for the stepping stones of Allied victory have been well laid. Smashing blows are falling and mighty blows are to fall continually without cessation upon the forces of Hitler's aggression.

Hitler's grim message is one that cannot stimulate the Nazi morale. He bewails the fate of Germany which he falsely says is defending the world against Bolshevism and he claims that the war was forced on Germany.

His reference to annihilation is exactly in accord with his mind of midnight gloom. He pictures a ruined world for the Germans and he is of the egotistical and maniacal type that would like to drag Germany and all the rest of the world into ruins with him. That is the arch-criminal type, the barbaric would-be conqueror speaking, who sees all his strength departing from him.

He is wrong—the real world is not going down to defeat and ruin. Of course Hitler's world of evil is to be annihilated as far as Nazism and militarism are concerned. But the world the Allies envisage is a free world, defended if necessary by powerful United Nations forces, to see that no other mad Adolf in the future runs amok among the nations. His sense of supreme frustration shows in this, that he talks of annihilation and mere survival while he knows at heart that the United Nations are planning to build a world in which the curse of tyranny and aggression will not be allowed, but the civilized world will exist.

Hitler sees all he plotted and planned is going down into ruin and that after the war, it will not be he who will dictate the course of history, but sane democratic states which love liberty and which will make impossible for the repetition of such a tragedy as this war has been through the all-selfish and all-brutal heart of Hitler and his gang.

Hitler must see his own doom. Any obliteration will be the obliteration of Hitler and Nazism, and the foul tyranny of the Nazi gang. Hitler has tried in vain to throw the world back ages into savagery. When the war ends it will be Hitler and his anti-social regime, and his hatred and envy that will be thrown to the discard.

Hitler's message to the Huns is a clear admission of Germany's sinking fortunes.

Tradition Covers 130 Years

(London Daily Sketch)

Lieutenant-Commander E. J. Lee, R.N., instructed to report to a new command, had one of the pleasantest surprises of his 17 years in the service when he found that his new ship was the destroyer H.M.S. Bulldog, for 130 years ago his great-great-grandfather was an officer in the sloop Bulldog.

Since the time of his great-great-grandfather there has been an unbroken succession of sons to carry on the family tradition.

The Lees fought with Nelson in the battles of the Nile and St. Vincent.

Most treasured heirloom of Lieut. Cmdr. Lee is probably the last letter written by Lord Nelson with his right hand.

It was penned the day before he fought in the Battle of Santa Cruz in which he lost his arm.

The letter was addressed to the commanding officer of another ship requesting the loan of ropes to haul guns into position.

Since the present Bulldog came under Lt.-Cmdr. Lee's command she has had a six months' spell escorting troop transports and has steamed almost without respite for 45,000 miles.

Lieut.-Cmdr. Lee's home is at South Brent, Devon. The Bulldog has been adopted by Battersea, S. W.

REGRET

Lord, so often we're postponing little matters near at hand
Thou must fancy need for friendship men will never understand.
For some far away tomorrow which we vision down the way
We keep putting off some kindness which we ought to do today.

Week by week the list grows longer of the deeds we could have done;
Letters promised to be written that were never quite begun,
Friends we meant to stop to visit and to do so set a date;
But death got there just before us, and we reached the door too late!

Just too late! And oh, so often! Vain is all we meant to say!
And those flowers we'd planned to carry; they had seen them yesterday.
Now unheard our words are uttered! Now our roses grace an urn!
Lord, I wonder, life is fleeting will we never, never learn?

Controlling The Common Cold.

Sometimes we may think that if we could move from place to place so that we would always be where there is warmth and sunlight, we would avoid illnesses due to cold damp weather. That weather has something to do with some ailments such as rheumatism and asthma is true but that it has much to do with the "common cold" is apparently not true.

A few years ago a nation wide survey of colds was made during a certain week and it was found that there were as many colds in California as there were in Maine during that week.

In the Journal of the American Medical Association, Dr. Chester S. Keefer, Boston, states that the infection known as the common cold is caused by a filtrable virus (a tiny organism) which promotes infection in nose, throat, and bronchial tubes. The common cold occurs in cycles, the three peaks or periods when most colds occur, being January and February, April and May, and September and October.

"The common cold is highly contagious, the most infectious period being the first day, and infection is most frequent where overcrowding occurs".

Just how important are cold, chilling, wetting of the skin, in causing or aggravating the common cold is unknown. "Studies carried out in Spitzbergen, an isolated community, and on the ship Carnegie, showed that a sudden drop in temperature was not necessary to develop an epidemic of colds. An epidemic of colds appearing in a community following arrival of the first ship of the season shows that virus introduced from outside is more important that climate.

Some years ago I wrote about a ship calling at an isolated port only long enough to exchange mail, yet an epidemic of colds in this isolated port followed within a few days afterwards.

What can be done to prevent the common cold now that cold vaccines help but a small percentage of patients?

Dr. Keefer states that at present there are no effective methods for prevention of the common cold although it may be worth while for each individual to use personal hygienic measures and avoid exposure to colds in others.

By personal hygienic measures is meant eating moderate meals, regular outdoor exercise such as a daily walk, avoiding exhaustion caused by mental and physical work, and establishing a regular bowel movement.

Mediterranean Cruise, 1943

By Johnny D'Arcy

(BBC Press Service)

London, by Mail — Before the war they would charge you twenty-six guineas as far as I remember, to enjoy a twenty-six days pleasure cruise in the Mediterranean, but I've just had a month there for nothing. Admittedly not on a luxury liner, but on an oil tanker carrying twelve thousand tons of aviation spirit, but then, you can't have everything.

We went a long way round to get there—mainly because nobody has yet found oil in England. We sailed from England bound for New York. There was nothing very unusual or very exciting in the passage, and nowadays it's no longer so essential that you take a parachute with you when you join an oil tanker. U-boats are getting what's been coming to them for some time. Apart from the blackout and bad weather and the constant reminder of the guns that are part and parcel of every merchant ship these days, it would have been hard to tell that there was a war going on at all. I got on very well, too, with the captain, who was a Dundee man also.

The journey across to New York was very peaceful and if we didn't do it in record time, we did it in good time and we got there with the ship. While she was lying alongside the wharf taking on the petrol, that we afterwards found we were to take to the Mediterranean, we went off to have a look at the city.

Coming from Britain it was nice to see the bright lights, which New York calls a dim-out, again. It was not so much the blackout at home but the black nights of the Atlantic that made them look very bright to me.

I must say there seemed to me to be a great deal more sense of urgency in the city than when I was there a few months back. America is in the war from a bellboy at a night club who told me how very keen he was to get into the Eighth Army Air Force to the watchman on the ship who, although aged sixty-three, had tried to enlist in the United States Navy.

Soon we were at sea again—tankers are never very long in port. You can load one with twelve thousand tons of oil in twelve hours and that's more or less what they did with us. Our shore leave was suddenly stopped and we put off to the convoy port, where, after a hurried conference of all the skippers, we were on our way to my first Mediterranean cruise—utility style.

* * *

When we sailed we were just one of over a hundred ships. It was one of the biggest convoys I have been in since the war began, although I have sailed in many great convoys. These ships were loaded with some hundreds of thousands of tons of petrol, food, guns, tanks, aircraft, motor trucks, trains, landing barges—in fact, all the frightful articles of war that are needed to maintain huge and powerfully equipped armies in the field. It was most comforting to think, as I did, that this armada was just one part of a huge maritime organization that was being brought to bear so that the United Nations could gain complete victory in the Mediterranean theatre of war. It was good to see all those ships riding the seas so proudly and triumphantly, especially as for so long we've been on the defensive, but now the merchant navy—along with the army, navy and air force—is on the offensive.

As I sailed in this convoy I could realize, perhaps for the first time, that if materials—overwhelming masses of materials—were going to win this war, then we were well on our way to winning it. For this has been a war where ships have been all-important; the seaman knows this better than most people. All through the war I've been sailing on ships which have been taking cargoes of munitions or petrol, and sometimes men, to Suez, Bombay, West Indies, Australia, and to most of the places, in fact, where we have a war on our hands. And here all of us who were in this gigantic convoy were doing it once again, not because we had to, but because it was our job to see that the armies in the field should have at least a fifty-fifty chance. I think I can fairly say that there is no one who admires the fighting men in uniform more than the merchant seaman who wears no uniform, but in his own way is a bit of a fighting man himself.

Well, there we were, one tanker in a score or more of them, one ship in a hundred of them, sometimes rolling, sometimes pitching, but always plodding steadily on towards the Mediterranean.

Eventually Gibraltar hove in sight and the Gateway to the Mediterranean, with Spain on the port beam and Spanish Morocco to starboard, was in front of us. We sailed through those Gates, some of the ships fanning out into Gibraltar, others coming out from Gibraltar to take their place, and for twenty-four hours we steamed on until it was time for us to leave the convoy. We entered Oran for further orders.

That was my first sight of the Mediterranean—what a difference it would have been a year before! Those were the days when to stick the nose of your ship past Gibraltar meant getting the whole of the Luftwaffe and the Italian air force on your neck—the days of the Malta convoys, which made history whenever a ship arrived there in one piece.

We all looked forward to going ashore after our long trip across the Atlantic, but this was not to be, as we received orders to continue on to Bizerte.

On the way we were twice subjected to air attacks from German bombers—presumably operating from Sicily and Sardinia. They were carried out with a lot of noise and splashes but did very little damage except to the fish.

Three days later we dropped the hook just outside Bizerte Lake. While we were still waiting for instructions, an Allied tanker dropped her starboard hook close to us. She couldn't drop her port anchor because it had been blasted away by the same torpedo which had smashed a huge hole in her port bow. Her flag was flying at half mast—more seamen had died for their country.

As I watched I saw launches come out from the shore and tie up alongside the ship. There were doctors aboard two of the launches which had come from a hospital ship lying nearby. That was all that happened. I don't suppose anybody on shore even noticed it, or if they did, I doubt whether they paid any attention. Just another ship. Just another drama of the war.

Going in it was my trick at the wheel. Normally steering is just a question of keeping the ship straight but on this particular occasion we had to zigzag in round the ships which had been sunk in an attempt to block the harbor when the enemy evacuated the port. Apart from the ships which the Germans had themselves sunk, the Allied air forces had also sunk quite a few ships, and the harbor still resembled a shipbreaker's yard in spite of the brilliant work done by our engineers. Anyway, we managed to manoeuvre the ship through the harbor and into Bizerte Lake.

Going into the lake we passed what was left of Bizerte and to me there seemed to be very little left. Allied bombers, German bombers and Italian bombers had blasted what was once a proud and beautiful city and a great port into rubble.

There were very heavy air raids the whole of the time we were in Bizerte, in fact, if we had been given a pound bonus for every one we would have made our fortunes. We were only there a short time discharging our cargo of aviation petrol into small tankers that presumably took it away to where the armies were fighting in Sicily. For the best part of the time we anchored between two ships carrying ammunition and high explosives. The Germans dropped a lot of bombs, most of which made an even bigger mess of what was left of Bizerte and certainly killed a lot more fish. Each morning the gunners used to dive off the side of the ship and come back with a load of fish which we then had for breakfast.

While we were there "Lord Haw Haw" announced that [illegible] tons of shipping had been sunk in Bizerte Lake during that time. For once I had a chance to see for myself how far from the truth these German claims are.

This Bizerte bombing was the worst of the trip but also it was a magnificent spectacle—the barrage ashore was terrific, with tracer shells, high explosives and flares dropping from the aircraft, all providing a wonderful mixture of colors, making it the most weird and beautiful display I have even seen.

Our next run from Bizerte was to Ferryville which still bore a lot of signs of the recent fighting. I managed to get in a good deal of swimming there and I sometimes took long walks along the foreshore looking for shells—sea shells—Who's ever heard of a sailor looking for sea shells when in port? Well, you have now. On one such walk I was digging in the sand when I uncovered a man's leg with a boot on the foot. This was a German boot. It was a nasty reminder of the war which had seemed so far away on the peaceful stretch of sand, and I hastily covered up the leg again and went back to the ship.

It was also at Ferryville that I met a sergeant of the Eighth Army. He wanted to go home, but he was convinced there was only one really good way to go home and that was by the shortest route—through Europe. He had a big basket on his arm and I asked him if he was going shopping, but he told me that he was going to send it home to his wife. Strangely enough he lived just a street or two away from me in London, so I took it home for him and gave it to his wife the other night.

* * *

I met lots of interesting soldiers, perhaps the most interesting was an Italian who had been in the desert for about three years. He was still officially a prisoner but he was doing a useful job making a road nearby the ship. He asked me for a cigarette and after this I had a long chat with him as he spoke very good English. He finished by giving me his Victory Medal which was given him not long before the the battle of El Alamein.

One night in Ferryville three soldiers took me in their motor truck to Tunis, which didn't seem to have been damaged very much in the fighting. I saw an extraordinary example of bomb-blast in the shape of a Mosque the sides of which had collapsed outward, allowing the dome to drop neatly and intact on to the ground amid the debris of the walls.

Coming back next day from Tunis I saw hundreds of German and Italian aircraft lying about an airfield—some seemed quite undamaged. Everywhere along the road there were still masses of equipment, tanks, trucks, guns, motor lorries and stores which the Axis armies had left behind. I even saw thousands and thousands of motor tires in huge piles.

When we reached Oran the native boys there were already speaking with an American accent and doing big business as shoestring boys and selling the newspaper "Stars and Stripes" at double the price.

As with everywhere in the Mediterranean ports, prices were sky-high and when I went into the local version of Woolworths I found that the price of the cheapest article for sale was sixty-five francs—about six shillings and six pence. There was a point system in operation, much the same sort of system as we have in Britain, but whether it was working or not I don't know, but I do know that at least a dozen people offered me as much as one hundred and twenty francs for a tin of condensed milk.

I did a real Cook's tour of the Mediterranean. I can't mention all the places at which we called, but each time we tied up we unloaded hundreds, and sometimes thousands, of tons of petrol and when we left we felt glad to know that we had done our little bit towards clearing the Mediterranean and shortening the war. There's many a seaman who has been sailing in ships for the past three years and more who has never been through the Mediterranean. We have always had to sail fourteen thousand miles around the Cape to get to Suez or India. Now our ships can go through the Mediterranean in a matter of days instead of weeks.

Helping to bring this about was the reason for my Mediterranean cruise—Utility Style 1943.—I am sure it was worth it.

NUGGETS OF KNOWLEDGE

The federal courts in the United States have no common law jurisdiction except when it is specially granted to them by Congress.

Thomas Jefferson, James Madison and James Monroe, known as the "Virginia Dynasty," in effect appointed their successors in the presidency. Madison, Monroe and John Quincy Adams were all three secretaries of state when they were chosen president, and all three, of course, had been appointed to that position by their predecessors in the presidency. Andrew Jackson was responsible for breaking up the practice of using the secretaryship of state as a stepping stone to the presidency, and no secretary of state since John Quincy Adams has stepped up directly into the presidency.

The ancient Greeks and certain other peoples had a god of flies, which received his name from his supposed power over flies, particularly in driving them away from the flesh of the animals being offered on the altars as sacrifices.

The Euphrates, "the great river" of the Bible, overflows its banks every year like the Nile and rises as high as twelve feet. The chief root word in "Euphrates" is "Phrat" or "Frat" and signifies "abounding."

"Kismet," the play that Otis Skinner made world famous, was written in 1910 by Arthur Knoblock. Oscar Asche first starred in the play in the Garrick Theatre in London in the summer of 1911.

There are more than a dozen species of rattlesnakes in the United States and none of them lay eggs.

Oaks are usually the last trees in the forest to shed their leaves in the fall.

Cordell Hull has been secretary of state longer than any other man. James Madison, John Q. Adams, William H. Seward and Hamilton Fish all served eight years as secretary of state.

A scheming servant is sometimes called a "scapin." This refers to Scapin, the chief character in Moliere's comedy entitled "Les Fourberies de Scapin," who is a knavish and intriguing valet who makes his master his tool.

Friendship Ties Strengthened By Canada and the U.S.

By C. R. BLACKBURN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Washington, Jan. 3 — (CP) — A number of outstanding events, climaxed by the exchange of ambassadors in early November, made 1943 a banner year in the progress of Canadian-American relations.

Not the least of these events and probably the most spectacular was the visit of President Roosevelt to Ottawa in August, after his conference at Quebec with Prime Minister Winston Churchill.

This was the fulfilment of a long standing promise the president had made to himself and to Prime Minister Mackenzie King on each of the latter's frequent visits to the White House in the war years.

Of course Mr. Roosevelt was no stranger to Canada, having spent his holidays since childhood at the Roosevelt summer place in New Brunswick. He had visited Canada on several occasions since assuming office. Only last summer, just prior to the Quebec conference, he had a fishing holiday at Manitoulin Island.

But the August visit to Ottawa was the highlight of all his Canadian visits — his first to the capital — and Ottawa gave him an ovation long to be remembered.

Increasing Solidarity

But there have been more tangible evidences of increasing solidarity between the two nations in 1943, some of them new and some a continuation of relations begun earlier in the war.

One was the election of Agriculture Minister Gardiner to represent Canada on the combined foods board with the United States and the United Kingdom, which brought Canada closer within the councils of both countries.

Another was the election of L. B. Pearson, minister-counsellor, at the Canadian Legation in Washington, as chairman of the all-important standing committee on supplies to advise the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration which will be conducted from Washington under direction of Herbert H. Lehman, former governor of New York.

Less spectacularly, but none the less effectively, numerous interchanges of thoughts and plans are being carried forward every day with Canadian cabinet ministers and heads of branches visiting Washington regularly and American departmental and board heads going to Ottawa.

Last Nov. 11 there was a simultaneous announcement in Ottawa and Washington that the two countries would exchange ambassadors.

This meant that the Canadian legation in Washington and the American legation in Ottawa, after about 16 years of operation, would become embassies.

Ray Atherton, distinguished career diplomat who had gone to Ottawa only a short time before as American minister, was at once nominated by President Roosevelt as first United States ambassador to Canada and the senate confirmed the appointment without question.

Ambassador to U. S.

Hon. Leighton McCarthy, former Toronto business man and one-time member of parliament who came out of retirement at 71 to become Canadian minister to the United States on Feb. 27, 1941, was given credentials as the King's ambassador for Canada in the United States, but actual presentation of his credentials was long delayed by the absence of President Roosevelt at the Cairo and Teheran conferences.

The year brought further additions to the rapidly growing Canadian representation in Washington, crowding the legation building on Massachussetts Ave., and the annex at the rear, an old apartment building facing on "N" street N. W.

A short distance away, at 1205 15th street, another four storey apartment house has been transformed into an office building for Canada. There J. B. "Jock" Carswell, Munition Minister Howe's chief representative in Washington, acts for Canada in the numerous procurement and distribution activities involving both countries.

There too the Washington branch of the Wartime Information Board functions under direction of J. Hugh Campbell, on loan from the Canadian Pacific Railway publicity branch, to see that Americans learn all they desire to know about Canada.

Many other Canadian officials are scattered throughout the capital serving on various standing committees and boards in which the two countries are engaged in joint war efforts.

BLIND MAN'S FEAT

London (CP)—A blind beggar offered to give up his "profession" if he could have a war job. He was put on a capstan lathe and in his second week at work he produced 11,500 units, 500 short of the factory record, held by a sighted turner.

Fashion Flashes

JUST LOOK at the clothes designed for late winter and early Spring. You'll soon see that brown and white is a very vital color scheme. It is used for a smart outfit, a brown wool cardigan suit with a topper in bold brown and white check bound in the suit material to accent the deep pockets and collarless neckline.

THE CLASSIC BEAUTY of black velvet is enduring. A beautiful long skirted, slim dinner dress has an off-the-shoulder neckline banded with a ruche of chiffon hyacinthe in very pale pink.

NEW BEAUTY in the new prints! A delightful afternoon frock is of white crepe with a bold leaf and stem design in deep black. The frock is molded through the bodice with snirring through which is laced black velvet ribbon. An attached scarf at one shoulder can also double as a hood.

Cannuck Girls Now Overseas Total 3,000

By MARGARET ECKER
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 3—(CP)—Canadian women who gave their services at frontline posts overseas learned what war was in the year 1943.

Some of them were wounded on foreign soil, had their ears deafened by gunfire, and knew the terror of bursting bombs. But for most of the nearly 3,000 women with "Canada" badges on their uniforms—the war has not been as dramatic as that.

The women in the headlines were those who served on the Mediterranean front; the nursing sisters in North Africa, Italy and Sicily and the Canadian Red Cross girls in the same theatre. Of the nursing sisters, 12 were wounded by a shell in Sicily; 100 were aboard a torpedoed ship in the Mediterranean and lost everything they had.

Canadian women were the first nurses in Sicily and they worked for weeks within gunfire of the front line, although no nurses are in the mobile nursing vans that move up behind the front line.

Women of the Canadian services in Britain have settled into English life. They have made friends with the people here. Many have married here. Some through educational courses are carrying on civilian careers interrupted by enlistment.

In Canadian Hospitals

More than 1,000 nursing sisters, under the command of Lt.-Col. Agnes Neill of Peterborough, Ont., are serving in Canadian general hospitals and casualty clearing stations in all parts of Britain.

They work hard, play hard and study the same way. Their quarters are in the hospitals where they are posted and they have their own messes. They're the glamor girls of the Canadian services.

More than 100 nurses have married since they came to England.

The girls in air force blue, members of the R. C. A. F. (Women's Division) are sampling English life a little more deeply than the other services. The 350 working at air force headquarters in London live in their own flats or boarding houses with the fun—and the headaches—of rationed shopping and living.

See British Life

Their commanding officer, Wing Officer Kay Walker of Montreal and Ottawa said:

"Living out has given our girls the opportunity to know London, to become better acquainted with the British people than they would in barracks."

The girls still prefer to play together as they work together, they have bridge clubs, theatre parties, sightseeing tours. Like women in all the services many of them are taking educational courses at the universities and through the war services. Most of the girls do a couple of nights a week of volunteer work at service club canteens, at hospitals, or assisting with child welfare work in the East End of London.

About two dozen Wids have married in Britain.

Most of the wids working in London are clerks of various categories. But out on the bomber stations the girls live the same life, and do most of the ground jobs the men of the R. C. A. F. do. They live in Nissen huts of tin. Most of their work is done outdoors.

They are the girls behind the bombing raids over Germany. They pack the safety equipment, the rubber dinghies for men who may have to bale out over the North Sea, they operate the wirelesses that are a bomber's contact with home over enemy territory; they are flight mechanics, making minor repairs on aircraft, aircraft instrument repairers, parachute riggers, photographers, drivers, barbers, cooks, messwomen, teletype operators.

Four times as many khaki-clad girls of the Canadian Women's Army Corps serve in England now than did when this year started. The majority of them work in London, at Canadian Military Headquarters, as switchboard operators, clerks, drivers, office workers. But two companies are in the field, at Canadian army camps where they live under active service conditions in tin huts and work as laundry employees, cooks, messwomen, drivers, as well as clerks.

CWACS in Barracks

In London the girls live in barracks, big comfortable mansions where they eat better than most people in England and have a well-rounded program of social life, educational courses, physical training, games such as baseball and basket-ball, welfare work, theatre-going and sightseeing tours. About three dozen have married since coming overseas.

Rookies to overseas service are the 32 girls of the Women's Royal Canadian Naval Service whose advance party arrived here on Sept. 1. The girls work in London at the offices of the senior Canadian naval officer as clerks and postal workers.

Theirs is a real Allied Nations' life. They live in quarters with British Wrens and the English girls are introducing the Canadian girls to Britain.

The 186 members of the Canadians Red Cross Corps serving here and in the Mediterranean know what service is. They come overseas with little financial reward other than their living. They are ready for any job that is given to them from peeling potatoes in a soldiers' leave club, office work in Canadian Red Cross headquarters here, transport driving, welfare work among the Canadian blind at St. Dunstan's handicraft work in Canadian hospitals here, welfare work in hospitals in the theatre of operation to ambulance driving in the Liverpool decks area.

Superior Cleaners Given Thanks For Ditty Bags Sent

Not much is heard about the Ditty Bags sent to members of the Royal Canadian Navy and the Canadian Merchant Marine, these two services being kept pretty busy with other things, but a letter has been received by Miss Hagerman of the Superior Cleaners expressing the appreciation and thanks of 3rd Officer Frederick Rowe of "S. S. Barrington Court".

3rd Officer Rowe says in letter, that he had received the Ditty Bag from Miss Hagerman and that it was nice for her to go to so much trouble for somebody she had never seen and probably never would. He said that acts such as these do more to cheer a chap than all the blazing newspaper headlines with stories of undaunted heroism and fortitude. He said that his mother often says; 'If it were only possible, we ladies would not only send you letters and comforts, but actually sail with you.' 3rd Officer Rowe remarked, that this was probably true, but considered that it is more necessary for people like his mother and Miss Hagerman to stay at home and just write and send, which is as all important as the actual fighting, he thinks.

He wanted to know how she managed to get so much in so small a bag. It contained all the handy things a fellow needs at sea and always forgets to bring along. He attributes it to a woman's instinct. He wanted to know if there is anything he could do in return for Miss Hagerman's kindness, something she might like from England as a souvenir. At the end of his letter, Mr. Rowe added his address and, with no intention to have 3rd Officer Rowe swamped with other Ditty Bag and two many letters, it is reproduced here: "Mr. Frederick Rowe, 3rd Officer, SS. Barrington Court, c/o Mrs. L. Rowe, 75, Kyle Avenue, Manor Way, Whitchurch, Cardiff, South Wales, Great Britain. Postage, fortunately, is not governed by the amount of writing on the face of envelopes.

Mr. Rowe's letter was not the only one received from men who had received Ditty Bags from Superior Cleaners' Employees, three other answers were received.

Invitation to G.O.P. Convention "Just Joke"

Port Huron, Mich., Jan. 3 —(AP)—Port Huron says thanks for the bouquets but it does not seek the Republican National Convention.

This came out today, hard upon the receipt of praise for its enterprise in offering to play host to the Republicans.

Frank J. O'Hara, secretary-manager of the Port Huron convention bureau, admitted that his invitation to Chairman E. Spangler of the G.O.P. National Committee was "just a joke."

A letter from O'Hara to Spangler was made public in Washington yesterday. Port Huron—population 32,759—immediately won plaudits for being willing to compete for the convention with such cities as Chicago, more than 100 times its size, and other cities.

O'Hara said he did not think he would be taken "seriously."

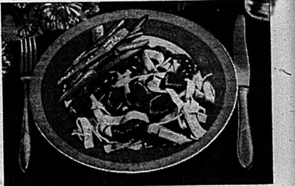
Borjupaprikas



Veal paprika, Hungarian style, is a good way to get an extra meal from a Veal Roast

If your husband is prejudiced against 'left-overs,' one way to keep him happy and still have the odd ration coupon left for something special is to serve your left-overs first!

What do I mean? Just this: When you buy a roast, trim off enough chops, fillets or steaks for one meal before you roast the meat. Wrap your trimmings loosely and store in the coldest part of the frig. Then surprise friend husband with a meal of broiled or braised un-left-over meat a day or two later. This week's recipe suggests a splendid way of playing this trick next time you have a veal roast:

For more ways of getting the most out of meat send 10¢ for your copy of Martha Logan's famous book of meat cookery, "Meat Complete," to Swift Canadian Co. Limited, Dept. OA51, Toronto.

Montreal Canadiens Celebrate Holiday Weekend by Winning From Chicago and Detroit

Bruins Gain Second-Place Tie by Beating Rangers After Losing to Leafs

CHICAGO PLAYER HURT

By ALAN HARVEY
Canadian Press Staff Writer

All the New Year's resolutions their National Hockey League opponents could muster were stowed away today as Montreal Canadiens celebrated holiday high jinks which stretched their victory string to six straight games.

Emerging from a schedule which called for three games in four nights, the Flying Frenchmen enacted a weekend coup by crushing Chicago Black Hawks 4-0 Saturday and Detroit Red Wings 5-2 Sunday to stretch their league lead to 5½ games over Toronto Maple Leafs and Boston Bruins.

Bruins gained the second-place deadlock by smothering New York Rangers 13-3 in Manhattan Sunday after dropping a 5-2 verdict to Toronto in Boston Saturday. The 15,518 Ranger fans, largest crowd of the New York season, saw the home team suffer the high-water mark in its string of 17 defeats as Boston equalled the league's high-scoring standard, set Nov. 21 when Canadiens trampled Bruins 13-4.

Large Crowd at Chicago

The season's largest crowd, 18,051 paid admissions, watched Canadiens record their shutout at Chicago as netminder Bill Durnan completed his second whitewashing job in 1943-44. Gerry Heffernan, Fern Majeau, Elmer Lach and Maurice Richard fired the shots which eluded Hec Highton in the Chicago nets.

Variations on a familiar theme were provided Sunday by Ray Getliffe who sank three goals against the derelict Detroiters while plastering the first loss in four games on 35-year-old Normie Smith, Red Wing goalie for most home games. Lach and Toe Blake neutralized Detroit tallies by Joe Carveth and Carl Liscombe.

Earlier at Chicago, defenceman George Allen of the Hawks was helped from the ice with torn leg muscles. His departure set off a crowd uprising in which the rink was showered with marbles, playing cards and dry navy beans.

Hamilton Scores Two

Youthful Jackie Hamilton teamed with linemates Jack McLean and Windy O'Neill to create most of the havoc at Boston, scoring two of Toronto's five goals and setting up a third by McLean. Ted Kennedy and Lorne Carr also scored for Leafs, while Bill Cowley and Norm Calladine counted for Boston.

JUNIORS READY TO OPEN SEASON AGAINST TRENTON

Coach Holway Will Not Select Team Till After Tonight's Workout

PLENTY OF MATERIAL

Canada's national game, hockey, moves to the sport horizon at the Hume Arena Tuesday night with the opening game of the junior O. H. A. series on the sports agenda, when the strong Trenton sextette meet Coach Toots Holway's Belleville juniors to pry off the lid.

Last year Trenton eliminated Belleville in the district junior O. H. A. group finals, but Skipper Holway today has practically all of his last year's squad intact and has added several new players to the local team. A strong practice was held over the week and following which Coach Holway announced he could not make public his starting team for tomorrow's inaugural.

"We had 26 keen and energetic boys out to practice last week, but I will not select our starting team until after tonight's practice," stated Coach Holway whose biggest problem is his starting defence combination. In the nets it will be either Dick Fitzpatrick or Maurice Rollins and strangely enough these two top goalies were in opposition last year, when Fitzpatrick minded the nets for Trenton and Rollins was between the gas pipes for the locals.

To name a few of the potential forwards there are the two Wardaugh boys, Harry and Jack, Russ Soule, Billie Holway, Rody Lyall, Johnny Semark, Al and Bernie Meagher, Paul Kringle from Calgary, Dick Rosetti, Colin LaVallee of Montreal, Doug Day, Bill Greatrix, "Hiker" Ostrom, Bruce Bishop and a few others too numerous to mention before the selection of but six is made by Coach Holway tonight. Yes, it's O. H. A. hockey at the Hume Arena Tuesday night.

New York, Jan. 3. (AP)—Instead of making high-sounding speeches about post-war plans, pro football leaders are busy planning for the 1944 season, war or no war. . .The Boston Club, which has nothing but a franchise, has hired Tillie Manton, the old Dodger back, to scout for players; the Philly Eagles, who probably will split away from Pittsburgh, recently signed Marvin Bleeker, ex-Southern California fullback, and Harry Thayer was looking for more prospects at Saturday's East-West game. . .And owners George (Wetwash) Marshall of the Red Skins and Harry Howren of the Norfolk Shamrocks have been talking over a "farm" deal if the Dixie League operates.

Pride Goes For a Ride.

Charles L. (Bumpus) Jones, who celebrates his major league baseball debut in 1892 by pitching a no-hit game for Cincinnati against Pittsburgh—and never won another National League game—is even more famous among old timers for his wildness than for that singular record. . . On one occasion Bumpus, pitching for Toledo, gave 15 bases on balls but the scorer recorded only 14. . . . Jones was so steamed up about the omission that he visited the newspaper offices to rebuke the writers and then jumped the ball club.

Winnipeg Esquires Win Six in Row To Head League

Winnipeg, Jan. 3. (CP)—Since hockey was sent under way in Manitoba six weeks ago only one team, Winnipeg Esquires, has been able to slide through its schedule of games without a defeat.

The Esquires who loom as choice threats for the North Division Junior Hockey League crown this season, have waltzed to six consecutive victories to take a firm hold on first place.

Canadian Ukrainian Athletic Club is second with four wins, St. Boniface Athletics are third with one and Winnipeg Air Cadets trail with none.

Winnipeg Monarchs, winners of the Dominion Junior Championship in 1935 and 1937, still dominate play in the South Division.

The Monarchs directed by LS. Hugh Millar, a former Detroit Red Wing farm hand at Omaha, have tallied five wins. St. James Canadians fill second place with three victories, while Winnipeg Rangers, who conquered Oshawa Generals for the O.H.A. Memorial Cup last Spring, are still without a success.

Future of the Winnipeg Senior Services League after Jan. 6, the last day Winnipeg R.C.A.F. Bombers may participate in competition leading to Allan Cup playdowns owing to a R.C.A.F. headquarters ruling, is still in doubt.

Meanwhile a three-way tie for first place exists between R.C.A.F. Bombers, H.M.C.S. Chippawa and Winnipeg Army. All have four victories in eight stars.

Only Junior Clubs have seen action at the Lakehead this season. The two team-War Workers Senior League embracing Port Arthur ship-builders and Canadian Car and Foundry has not yet swung into action.

National Baseball Congress Criticized by J. R. Millman

By The Canadian Press

James R. Millman, president of the Western Counties Baseball Association, warned in a New Year's message issued last night at Chatham against expansion in Canada for the National Baseball Congress.

"All amateur baseball organizations," Mr. Millman said, "should realize the danger we are facing in the operation of the National Congress. The Ontario Association, the Intercounty League, the Niagara Association and the Western Counties Association need to fight the proposed expansion of the Canadian branch of the American organization."

He said it was difficult for Ontario teams to secure sufficient dates for their own association schedules and playoffs during wartime. After the war, he said, when midweek games can be played, "it may be possible to revise our opinion of the Congress."

President Maurice Podoloff of the American Hockey League yesterday announced the suspension of defenceman Bob Dill of the Buffalo Bisons on a charge of striking referee Gordon Parsons during the game in Pittsburgh Saturday night. Parsons required medical attention.

Recently discharged from the Canadian Army, centre Murray Armstrong, formerly of the Brooklyn Americans, in the N.H.L., has been signed by Detroit Red Wings, it was announced last night by manager Jack Adams. Frank Bennett, rookie centre, has been released.

Billy Miller, 127 pounds, of Pittsburgh, extended his winning streak to 22 fights Saturday night at Detroit by vanquishing the 2-to-1 favorite, Benny Goldberg, 117½, of Detroit in a 10-round main bout of a holiday card.

Toronto, Jan. 3 — (CP) — First effects of King's Plate rule changes will be felt early this month. For the first time in history King's Plate eligibles may be taken out of Ontario before the big race and several are expected to be shipped shortly to Oaklawn Park at Hot Springs, Ark., to take advantage of training conditions there. Harry Hatch's plate nominees, Acara and Sayonara, will be among 18 head Hatch is shipping from his farm near here. Parkwood stable's two winter book favorites for the plate, Cyperac and Heulwen, are likely to be shipped south. To remain eligible these horses must not be raced prior to the plate but they will have the advantage of winter training in a warm climate, something denied plate candidates in previous years.

Southern California Upsets Dope by Beating Washington Huskies in Rose Bowl

LOUISIANA WINS

By JACK HAND
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

New York, Jan. 3 — (AP) — Whether it was Cpl. Jack "Shoeless" McKenna of Long Beach, Calif., scooting across the North African sand or Alvin Dark of Southwestern Louisiana Institute ploughing through the mud of Houston, Texas, the baby New Year has been welcomed with the traditional football bowl games.

Added starters to the usual coast-to-coast holiday schedule were the festivities involving G. I. talent known as the Arab, Potato and Lily Bowls in Oran, Algiers, Belfast, Ireland and Hamilton, Bermuda.

Navy won the Bermuda battle, 19-0, Army triumphed in Africa, 10-7, and the two services played a scoreless tie in Ireland.

Over 280,000 watched the games in this country where the form players took a beating as two underdogs won, two others tied and only three favorites came through in seven starts.

Southern California made the dopesters look bad with a decisive 29-0 decision over previously unbeaten-untied Washington at Pasadena. Jim Hardy's feat of throwing three touchdown passes stole the show and tied Russ Saunders' 1930 Rose Bowl record against Pittsburgh. A crowd of 68,000 was on hand.

Texas Aggies Beaten

Steve Van Buren ran for two touchdowns, and passed for another as Louisiana State upset Texas Aggies 19-14 in the Orange Bowl before 27,000 and cancelled an early season loss to the same Texans.

The favored Western All-Stars could get no better than a 13-13 tie with the underdog Easterners in what simmered down to a flashy display of youthful freshman talent before 60,000 in San Francisco's benefit sharing game.

Texas managed to avoid being upset by holding Glenn Dobbs to one touchdown pass and his Randolph Field eleven to a 7-7 tie at Dalls in the Cotton Bowl.

Georgia Tech was a winning favorite before the day's largest crowd, 69,000, in New Orleans Sugar Bowl. Tech beat Tulsa in the last quarter, 20-18.

Dark put on his show for Southwestern Louisiana and 12,000 at Houston where his club defeated Arkansas A. and M., 24-7, in the first Oil Bowl game.

Southwestern of Texas had to come up with a last period pass to beat underdog New Mexico 7-0 to the astonishment of 18,000 in the Sun Bowl at El Jaso. Tuskegee Institute downed Clark College, 12-7, in the Vulcan Bowl at Birmingham, Ala. And Allen blanked Winston-Salem Teachers, 33-0, in the Flower Bowl at Jacksonville, Fla.

TORONTO R.C.A.F., ST. CATHARINES WIN SENIOR TILTS

Victory by St. Kitts Puts Team in Second Place in Front of Majors

OSHAWA AHEAD

By the Canadian Press

Toronto R. C. A. F. had little difficulty Saturday night in polishing off Toronto Navy 6-4 in a scheduled O. H. A. Senior contest at Toronto, despite the introduction by the sailors of a new puck-chaser, Laycoe of Winnipeg, to Toronto fans. Laycoe was impressive, scoring one of the Gobs' goals, but the bluejackets merely sank further into the league cellar. Red Heron and Henderson were the scoring stars for the airmen with two apiece while Peanuts O'Flaherty and Norm Tustin accounted for the other two. Joe Klukay, who learned his hockey at the Soo, was a double scorer for Navy and Barlow earned the fourth counter for Navy.

The other Senior O. H. A. encounter of the evening, at St. Catharines, resulted in a 4-3 victory for the Saints over Hamilton, enabling the victors to move ahead of Majors into second place in the standing, with Kingston Frontenac Army undisturbed on the top rung. There was no score in the first period of this fixture but, before the close of the second 20 minutes, Peter Backor and Reynolds had counted for the Saints and Johnny Conick of Majors had notched the first of his two tallies. Each side found the net for two more in the third stanza, with Bellinger and Fritz doing the trick for St. Catharines and Conick and Shillington finding the spot for the visitors.

Two Players Absent

The Saints took the verdict without the services of two of their seasoned players, Jerome (Jud) McAtee and Joe Delmonte, who were out of action through injuries from an automobile accident early New Year's morning.

In the Junior series, Oshawa Generals made a runaway of the tilt in the Motor City against Toronto Marlboros with a 13-0 score, chief marksmen being Bill Ezinicki, for four goals and one assist, and Kennie Smith, with three goals and one assist. The game was marked by the appearance in a Marlboro uniform of the former Oshawa star, Red Tilson, previously with Kingston Army Seniors, whom the Generals had tried to sign earlier in the week.

A rough engagement at Brantford resulted in a 4-2 victory for the Lions over Toronto Young Rangers, a battle royal breaking out in the third period. Powell accounted for two of the Brantford scores, Hewson and Turner getting credit for the other two. At Stratford, the Kroehlers and St. Catharines Falcons battled to a 5-5 tie in overtime. In the game at Galt, the Kists took Hamilton Whizzers into camp 8-2, the top score being Curik with four goals, N. Podolsky accounting for two more tallies.

HERSHEY BEARS AND CLEVELAND WIN TWO GAMES

Leaders Beat Reds and Capitals While Barons Whip Reds and Bisons

ONE SHUTOUT

By The Canadian Press

Leaders of the American Hockey League, Hershey Bears, and second-place Cleveland Barons both won their two scheduled weekend games. Bears now have a total of 39 points from 17 wins and five ties in 26 starts while Barons have 35 points as a result of their 15 victories and five draws for the same number of games played this season.

The leaders defeated Indianapolis Capitals 4-1 Saturday night and Providence Reds 3-1 last night. Barons blanked out Reds 4-0 Saturday night and licked Buffalo Bisons 4-2 last night.

Pittsburgh Hornets whipped Bisons 5-1 Saturday night and last night Providence defeated Pittsburgh 4-2.

Bears' victory over Caps Saturday night was their 14th consecutive win on home ice. Peggy O'Neill, Hershey right winger, put Indianapolis in the lead when he rifled the puck into his own net after the rubber came off his stick at an angle. The goal was credited to Bill Thompson, Caps' right winger. O'Neill evened the score in the second, however, when he scored in the Caps' net. Bill Hudson, Walter Jarvis and Fred Hergert accounted for the other three tallies.

Last night Hershey scored their three goals in less than three minutes early in the third period when they defeated Reds 3-1. Ross Knowles started the scoring surge at 2:54. He was followed by Fred Hergert at 3:31 and George Patterson at 5:17. Defenceman Stan Kemp made the Providence tally 23 seconds later.

Scores Shutout

In the Cleveland-Providence encounter goaltender Paul Gauthier of Barons scored his first shutout of the season. Right winger Ed Prokop and defenceman Peter Bessone tallied on solo rushes, while the other counters were chalked up by Lou Trudel and Pete Horeck.

Tommy Burlington of Cleveland tied the score last night when Barons were trailing Buffalo by one goal in the second period. Trudel and Les Cunningham scored in the final period to give them a 4-2 victory. Lloyd Klein and Fred Thurier accounted for Bisons' two goals in the first period after Earl Bartholome scored for Cleveland. In the Hornet-Bison contest Tom Forgie collected two goals in the first period. Tony Hemmerling, Ross Knipfel, and Bob Gracie scored the other three. Walter Atanas made Buffalo's lone tally at 16:26 in the third period.

Alex Ritson and Bill Thompson both chalked up unassisted goals on breakaways last night when Capitals defeated Hornets 4-2. Tony Hemmerling scored the first tally for Pittsburgh at 19:38 in the first period, only to have Thompson tie the count late in the second. Centre Orville Smith collected Hornet's 2nd tally halfway through the final round, between scores by Thompson and Ritson.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 263

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

What are little slams made of? Tricks and things, with aces and kings, and plenty of trumps, or pictures in clumps.

Before trying for a slam, you should know there are at least 12 tricks in your pair. You should also know there are enough aces and kings in your pair.

But tricks enough with enough aces and kings are not all you need for safety of a slam. Your pair must also hold a good trump suit or nearly all the high cards.

So, to bid a slam that has a good chance for success, your pair must be sure of three separate departments of values. They make up lesson number 41 in Horse Sense bridge. Here it is.

To bid a slam, you need (1) to discover at least 12 tricks in your pair; (2) to know what will be the final trump suit, if any; and (3) assurance of enough aces and kings.

Pick your way through this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠A K J 7 5
♥A K J 7 5
♦5
♣J 5

NORTH
♠Q 6 4 2
♥Q 6 4 2
♦A J
♣A 4 2

South has seven tricks and north has five. They can show each other that many tricks in their early bidding. With 12 between them, they have enough tricks to hope for a slam.

South has two suits, either of which is at least biddable. North has adequate support for both suits. In the early bidding, north can show his help for at least one of them; if not for both.

In the two hands are four aces and two kings. With a singleton diamond, the ace will win it and other diamonds can be trumped. So, the king of that suit is not needed for a slam.

That leaves only the king of clubs as a threat. And a small slam can afford to lose one trick. So, with that much known, they have aces and kings enough for a small slam.

With values propitious, you should get slambitious.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Tish"

The year's comedy surprise starts tonight at the Capitol Theatre. You will meet Tish and howl! She goes hunting and a bear corners her! She goes fishing and lands in jail! She helps cupid and romance takes a detour! She'll rock Belleville with laughter. Don't miss "Tish," Mary Roberts Rinehart's famed character starring Marjorie Main, Zasu Pitts and Aline MacMahon with Lee Bowman and Guy Kibee, Susan Peters and Virginia Grey are also in the select cast.

"Truck Busters"

Only those who have never come unexpectedly face to face with a huge careening truck on a narrow stretch of a lonely road can fail to appreciate the drama and excitement that is to be found in the lives of the men who pilot those mighty freighters on all the nation's roads.

Warner Bros.' "Truck Busters," which opens at the Capitol Theatre tonight is the dramatization of those men's lives and loves. It shows the dangers they face, the hopes they hold and the hard and heavy work they do to speed the commerce of a war-busy world.

The picture stars Richard Travis, with Virginia Christine, who is co-starred, providing the love interest. The supporting cast consists of Charles Lang, Ruth Ford, William Davidson and others.

The Canadian Universal News completes the first of the many outstanding January attractions to play the Capitol.

AT THE McCARTHY

"Crazy House"

A fabulous comedy production, "Crazy House", starring Olsen and Johnson came Monday to the McCarthy Theatre. Universal, the company which made the hilarious picture, has succeeded in cramming more entertainment, more feature attractions and more laughs into one movie than would be believed possible. The astonishing parade of popular headliners seems to continue endlessly as the comical story runs its mad course.

Hollywood itself and a monster movie studio are the chief back grounds for the dizzy plot which shows how Olsen and Johnson go about making a screen successor to "Hellzapoppin." Seen prominently are Cass Daley, Martha O'Driscoll, Patric Knowles and Thomas Gomez. As the action proceeds, Tony and Sally DeMarco, Count Basie and his orchestra. Marion Hutton and the Glenn Miller singers make sensational appearances along with Chandra Kaly and his dancers, the Delta Rhythm Boys and Leighton Noble and his orchestra.

Surprising novelty sequences feature such well-knowns as Percy Kilbride, Richard Lane, Billy Gilbert and Edgar Kennedy together with Franklin Pangborn and Hans Conried.

A spectacular musical score in keeping with the magnitude of the film, is presented under the direction of Charles Previn and the lavish musical production numbers were staged under the supervision of George Hale.

Robert Lees and Frederic Rinaldo wrote the original screen play which ingeniously incorporates the appearances of such guest stars as Allan Jones, Leo Carrillo, Andy Devine, Robert Paige and Alan Curtis.

AT THE BELLE

"Best Foot Forward" in Color

Hollywood invades the campus of the Winsocki Military Academy with hilarious complication when Lucille Ball attends at the invitation of Tommy Dix in M-G-M's Technicolor musical, "Best Foot Forward," which is now on the Belle Theatre screen.

It's a publicity stunt for Lucille Ball and her press agent, William Gaxton when they accept Tommy Dix's invitation to the dance, but it's no joke to Tommy when they accept. For Tommy, confident that the glamorous Miss Ball could not appear, has also invited his best girl, Virginia Weidler. When Lucille arrives Tommy is unhappy, and when Virginia arrives on the scene to nurse him through his "illness" Tommy is more than just unhappy, he's miserable.

Complications set in and the fun flies thick and fast to the tuneful melodies supplied by Harry James and his Music Makers. Incidentally, Harry does a dance for the first time on the screen with Nancy Walker, filmdom's freshest young comedienne.

Making their film debuts are many members of the original cast from the smash Broadway hit. The picture introduces Tommy Dix, Nancy Walker, June Allyson and Gloria De Haven, youngsters you will be seeing frequently in the future, in bigger and better screen roles.

Lucille Ball shines brightly in the role of the movie star with a soft heart. William Gaxton is a natural in his role of the breezy publicity man, and Virginia Feidler makes the transition from pigtails to glamour bob without difficulty. Chill Wills has an exceptionally funny bit as the star reporter for the Winsocki Bugle—it comes out every Monday.

Edward Bubbell directed with deft touches, bringing out all the comedy lines for maximum results. Producer Arthur Freed has spared no expense in preparing a lavish production.

The Canadian Paramount News, a funny 'Our Gang' comedy "Calling All Kids" and a clever Pete Smith specialty "Fixin' Tricks," precede the feature. The engagement ends on Tuesday.

TUSKAR LIGHT CUT OFF

Dublin (CP)—The Tuskar Rock Lighthouse in County Wexford, was cut off from the mainland for third time in six years recently. It was relieved after a few days when the season died down.

By HYE BOSSIN

Rosalind Russell, who will portray the life of Sister Elizabeth Kenny on the screen, lived with the latter for a while and learned to administer the Kenny treatment. Sister Kenny is an Australian nurse who has a remarkably effective method for saving sufferers from Infantile Paralysis. . . Walter Pidgeon hated to give up the beard he grew for "Madame Curie." Like any man, it gave him a great feeling of luxury not to have to shave each morning. However, Monty Woolley, who makes a big thing of a beard, kidded Pidgeon about being a copy-cat. . . Still going along in films after 15 years is Monte Blue, a big star in his day, who now plays small parts. Monte made much money and lost it in the crash of '29. Other old-timers still getting a bit of work in Hollywood are Leo White, who was the French count in many Chaplin films; Hank Mann, who used to drive the car loaded with Keystone cops, and Paul Panzer, villain of "The Perils of Pauline."

• • •

It came as a surprise to Hollywood that soldiers overseas don't like Westerns. Meanwhile, the Western film is developing into a leading article. Almost every studio has a big-scale production in preparation and the lowly horse opera, long popular in small theatres, will occupy the screen of the first-run downtown houses with regularity. . . Gale Storm, who stars in "Where Are Your Children?" a film that deals with juvenile delinquency, is one of the few contest winners to make good in the movies. Gail Patrick and Ann Sheridan also came as the people's choices. Miss Storm's real name is Josephine Cottle and she won the "Gateway to Hollywood" stunt in 1939. . . Eleanor Powell likes to write songs between scenes and Jimmy Dorsey will play a couple of them soon. . . Marlene Dietrich will play opposite Walter Pidgeon in a remake of Hal Caine's "The Christian." . . A not uncommon experience is for a studio to spend a great deal of money for a certain story, then find that some other company has beaten it into the theatres with a similar yarn. That tactic doesn't always turn out badly for the first studio. Some time ago Fox spent $100,000 for the story rights to "Candle in the Wind" but another company, presenting the same idea earlier, proved that the theme was unpopular. So Fox shelved the film and saved production costs.

• • •

Ida Lupino, for a change, will do comedy in "Made in Heaven." . . Virginia Sale, who will appear in "Gambler's Choice," is a sister of the late Chick Sale. . . Michael Kirby, Toronto skating star of the "Ice Follies," has been signed as actor by MGM studios and will make his screen debut after he finishes his tour. . . One of the writers of "Riding High," the Dorothy Lamour-Dick Powell Technicolor spectacle, was ex-Torontonian Art Arthur, now of the USA Air Force. . . Hollywood doesn't always fool. For "Up in Mabel's Room" a colonial farmhouse was constructed and genuine furnishings put in. They were collected from homes and museums and are worth over $100,000. . . In 1932 Hollywood made a film of Katharine Brush's novel, "Red Headed Woman," in which the late Jean Harlow starred. Now Lucille Ball will appear in a new Brush opus, "Red Headed Woman in Washington."

Chic Johnson (L) and Ole Olsen, stars of "Hellzapoppin'," and "Sons O'Fun", have invented new laugh-gags and gadgets for their latest Universal comedy riot, "Crazy House," now playing at the McCarthy Theatre.

BRITONS PONDER POSITION AFTER MOMENTOUS YEAR

Plan for Peacetime Reconstruction Brought Down as Country Girds for Greatest Phase of War

By DOUG HOW
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Dec. 24. —(CP)—Britain during 1943 as a nation which scented victory with the enemy and, in reaction, moved to a gradual return to peacetime wars within herself in forms which were slow to take shape.

That was the inevitable reaction to conference upon momentous conference of Allied leaders, to virtually unstemmed triumphs of British arms in the field, to the collapse of Italy, the defeat of the U-boats and the aerial onslaught against Germany.

Against that background of events favorable to optimism, domestic Britain began to take stock of things at home after four tough years of conflict.

Britons looked with an unplumbed degree of satisfaction at the government of Winston Churchill and his merger of Conservatives, Labor, Liberal and neutral minds. That coalition born in the stress of 1940 had worked and after a couple of 1943 shuffles it was still working.

They looked at the King's speech of November ushering in the heaviest legislative session of the war and heaved a sigh of relief because it had appeared that Churchill was never going to get round to thinking of the peace. Now here were his proposals for social security, post-war employment, training of disabled persons, education, re-building of torn cities and towns, utilization of land, and reform of electoral laws.

Basis For Argument.

Britons weren't sure this was everything they wanted nor that what was suggested was the way they would like it. But here was the basis for argument about the sort of country Britain was going to be in the new peace.

They looked at politically neutral Lord Woolton and didn't envy this man of big business his tasks as minister of reconstruction. But they felt it was another stroke of Churchill wisdom in choosing to plan the new Britain a popular man who had fed them well and soundly when there wasn't much food to do it.

Major political parties they found were still embracing the electoral truce which meant that the House of Commons of 1943 did not differ greatly from the House of 1940.

They looked at the Labor Party and found the same old faces in the spots that meant something, whether within the party or without; Herbert Morrison as home secretary, faithful to the coalition, a little man alternately winning and losing; solid Ernest Bevin as minister of labor, a man who had been tough and honest and won her respect; Clement Attlee as deputy prime minister, and Arthur Greenwood as Labor Leader in the House.

Position of Labor.

They looked at Labor and thought that here was a party which would soon have to heed the call to battle, and that the way it decided—to dissolve the Coalition or to continue it—might well decide the issues of the next election, be it in peace or in war.

A look at the Conservatives revealed, too, many of the same old faces—the Churchills, the Edens, the Andersons, leaders of a party still predominant in numbers in a House that had entered its ninth year.

They looked back through the 12 months gone and thought of the men who had stirred their thoughts—of Beveridge and his plan just now beginning to bud in abridged form, of Wavell and India, of Sir Kingsley Wood and his death on the eve of the presentation in Parliament of the nation's first pay-as-you-go income tax—the plan he had fathered, of Beaverbrook and his return to the Cabinet, of Mosley, the ailing Fascist whose release from prison aroused parts of the country to fury, of Montgomery and Alexander and Mountbatten, and Cunningham going in for Sir Dudley Pound who had worked himself to death.

Then there were arguments about coal and controls and civil aviation, and looking ahead, Britons saw arguments about those and a hundred other things.

Ahead they saw the year Mr. Churchill had predicted would be the climax year of the war. They saw, too, the year that would thrash out the plans for the peace.

THE WAR TODAY

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

Russia's great new offensive, which is plowing into the German line with such devastating effect, represents the formal opening of the decisive and final phase of the European War—the beginning of the Allied land onslaught that soon will see the inauguration of the vital second front in France.

This time a year ago the Red Army at Stalingrad was putting the finishing touches on Hitler's hopes of winning the war.

In the intervening 12 months the Russians have forced the powerful German war machine back across the steppes until today the Muscovites are battling at the Polish border west of Kiev.

All that has been spade-work for the climax which now is boiling up. Russia's winter finally has come to the full aid of the Soviet forces. The Autumn mud has been frozen solid, and the great rivers are covered with ice strong enough to support military operations. For the Red Forces, who know the ways of winter, it's fine fighting weather. For the ill-equipped Hitlerites it's a period of misery, and often death. Today news from Russia tells of the capture of underfed Germans whose faces are grey from privation.

Big Russian offensive are under way in three sectors of the 1,000-mile front: in the Dnieper Bend, where the Germans are gravely endangered; in the Kiev Bulge, which now is a corridor to the Polish border; further north in the Vitebsk-Nevel zone, where the attacking forces are headed for the neighboring Latvian border.

The position of the Germans in all three sectors undoubtedly is serious. It would be a delectable morsel to roll under the tongue if we could say that catastrophe was imminent for the Hitlerites but, while they're certainly going to crack, one of these days, we shall be wise if we see more of the battle before assuming that this happy moment has arrived.

Talk of Invasion Clutters Outlets Of Nazi Propaganda

London, Jan. 3 — (CP)—German propaganda outlets poured forth a stream of invasion talk today as an increasing number of troops thronged the streets of London.

"Competent circles believe," said one Berlin broadcast, "that — compelled by political reasons—invasion armies which stand in readiness in Southern England may hit out earlier than would seem proper for military considerations."

In a broadcast reported by the United States Office of War Information, the Hungarian radio quoted a Budapest newspaper, Uj Magyarsag, as saying that "The Allies possess numerically superior forces" and are in a position "to start the invasion of Europe."

"In the past year the Anglo-American powers had only 80 land divisions," said the broadcast article, "and in the present year they will have 180."

At the same time, another Hungarian broadcast reported by the O.W.I. quoted Gen. Franz Szombathelyi, Chief of Staff of the Hungarian Army, as telling his countrymen:—

"The war is near its end, but only after costly fighting which will bring war ever nearer to our frontiers and may even spread across them."

WALLET MADE TRIP OVERSEAS.

Halifax, Jan. 3. (CP)—Thomas Rideout, Halifax stevedore, lost his wallet while loading a ship in port here last September. Crewmen—unloading the vessel in the United Kingdom,—came across the lost article and Rideout received the wallet by mail yesterday from a United States' port where the ship docked on its return Atlantic voyage. Intact were $110 and Rideout's waterfront pass.

AT THE BELLE — It's not so easy for Virginia Weidler to forget after Tommy Dix has disappointed her and invited Lucille Ball to the Senior Prom in M.G.M.'s youthful, brimful Technicolor musical, "Best Foot Forward," now delighting large audiences at the Belle Theatre.

December Drier Than Same Month of 1942

The month of December took on a dry aspect other than from the standpoint of Christmas celebrants seeking sometimes in vain to obtain their requirements of liquid refreshments at Government liquor stores, it is revealed by the month's weather statistics kept by officials of the Belleville Water Purification Plant, Trent Road. Total precipitation for the month was 0.72 inches as compared with 4.26 inches for the same period in 1942, it is stated.

In direct contrast to the exceptionally wet weather experienced during the autumn months there was less than one half inch of rain during December—0.43 inches to be exact—while snowfall for the month was 2.9 inches. Rainfall for December 1942 totalled 2.60 inches with 16.6 inches of snow. During the last month there were 22 days during which there was precipitation as compared with 26 days for the same period in 1942.

And temperature statistics bear out the fact that December was rather a pleasant month. Maximum temperature was 47.9 with a low of 11.5 below zero. This compares with a maximum reading of 39 degrees and a minimum of 24.8 below zero for the same period in 1942.

Precipitation for 1942 was 36.53 inches as compared with 35.50 inches for 1943, it was stated.

TAX LIEN FILED

Los Angeles, Jan. 3. (AP)—An income tax lien against actress Martha Raye contending she still owes $18,315 on her 1942 earnings, has been filed by United States Internal Revenue Collector Harry C. Westover.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was watching ma sewing on her sewing machine, and I said, Is that as much fun as it looks, ma?

I suppose that depends on how much fun it looks, ma said.

Meaning it probably wasn't, and I said, Well hay, ma, I had a fierce argument with Shorty Judge today. He had the nerve to claim his mother can make better doughnuts than what you can, and I told him his mother couldn't make doughnuts good enough for shipwreck sailors on a desert island, and he told me you couldn't make them good enough for starving flies on a raft at sea. Wasn't that a heck of an insult, ma? I said.

When you start giving insults you musn't be surprised if you're paid back in the same coin of the realm, ma said. Although the time when all the mothers of the nayborhood took their children on a picknick together, Mrs. Judge and I both happened to of made doughnuts, and I'm afraid I must admit there wasn't much comparison that wasn't in my favor, she said, and I said, Sure, ma, that just proves it, and then all the other fellows got in it and claimed their mothers doughnuts are the best, so the way it ended up we're going to have a big doughnut contest and find out for real. So will you enter it with about a dozen doughnuts, ma? I said.

And who's going to judge this precious contest?. ma said, and I said, That's going to be one of the best parts of it, we're all going to blindfold each other and take bites in the dark and then vote which bites taste the best. So will you enter it, ma? I said.

Why certainly, ma said.

Making me feel lucky, and ma said, Just as soon as I see the other ladies doughnuts spread before me in a concrete state of reality,

Making me feel doubtful.

NORTH TO DANGER by TOM GILL

CHAPTER 10

"Hey, Tennant!" On the upper deck a crowd of men was thronging to the rail.

Nate waved. "That's my consignment of trappers. Wild. untamed sons of the trap line."

Colin counted them. Thirty in all. Stocky, powerful men, deep of chest, broad of shoulder, and dressed in rough field clothes. Men whose minds and bodies were conditioned by a way of life that had disappeared from every frontier in America except the fur country of the North.

Colin turned to Tennant. "Where did you dig up that husky collection of playmates?"

Nate's eyes were noncommittal. "Oh, here and there."

"They look more like bruisers than trappers."

"They may have to be a little of both before the winter's out."

Walking over to the boat, Tennant was noisily received by the men who came trooping down the gangplank, shouldering duffel bags and bedding rolls, swaggering about the dock, glad to be ashore. A few minutes later Colin saw Olsen join them.

Steadily the unloading went on, for captain and crew were eager to start south before a sudden freeze might make progress difficult, or—worse, hold them prisoner throughout a long winter.

Busy groups, Benedict and Dove among them, were sorting piles of boxes, crates and packages and soon canoes filled to the gunwales were starting off for the back country, to trappers' cabins, Cree villages and lonely missions.

By far the largest pile of freight was marked for the Indian school; and, although the shape and size gave Colin no clue to the contents, it seemed to him that Dove and Benedict handled the boxes with special care. Dove checked off each one as they came out of the hold, then called his Indians to begin carrying the freight up to the small tractor that stood ready to transport it to the school.

And it was at this moment the waiting spark struck flame.

Either by accident or design—to Colin it seemed by design—one of Dove's Indians stumbled over a trapper's bedroll and knocked it into the river. With a curse, the angry owner shoved the Indian aside and, jumping into the shallow water, threw the bedroll back on the dock where he climbed up amid the laughter of his fellows.

Even then all might have passed off quietly had not Olsen called out to him, "So your new boys like to be pushed around? Look at that Injun—he's laughing at you."

Face flushed, the owner of the bedroll turned. The offending Indian made as if to walk away, but the trapper blocked him, struck him across the face with his open hand, and the Indian, taken by surprise, staggered back. From the group of breeds rose an angry murmur, low at first but soon swelling to a roar, and as one man they surged forward.

A shout of warning from the trappers, and they began picking up cant hooks and shovels—anything that lay handy—while down across the dock the Crees came pouring. The knot of trappers made ready for the shock of battle.

But that battle never came. Between those two opposing groups, Selkirk and the three mounties had formed a slender barrier; then facing the Indians, Selkirk raised his hand and spoke to them in Cree.

Clear and strong, his voice carried to the farthest ranks of that angry crowd, but still they came on, swarming almost to where Selkirk stood. With head thrown back, he faced them, dominating them by the power of his presence; one by one they stopped.

Colin's heart warmed in admiration. Here was Selkirk at his best—Selkirk, remote, shy, and inarticulate in the presence of Irina.

The Crees were listening now, their eyes on Selkirk's face, and when at last the clear voice ceased, Colin saw the older Indians nod in approval and he knew Selkirk had won.

A moment later the police sergeant laid his hand on the shoulder of the trapper who had started the trouble.

"Police barracks for you," he ordered.

The trapper opened his mouth to protest.

"Lively" came the sharp command and the trapper moved away.

The tension was broken. Selkirk's prestige and the quick arrest of the trapper had saved the day. Slowly the Indians left the dock, and Colin's eyes turned to Dove as Tennant demanded, "Are you going to bring charges against that trapper?"

Dove shrugged. "It might be a good idea."

"It's not a good idea. It'll start trouble.

"I thought trouble was what you wanted, Nate."

Tennant's anger was rising when Selkirk intervened. "Gentlemen, isn't this something we should talk over at a better place and time?"

Behind the glasses, Dove's eyes were quietly watchful. "By all means." He turned toward Nate. "We're having dinner together at the Hall. Join us, and we can talk there."

Tennant looked at Blair and consented. "I'll get these new trappers started up the trail. See you in half an hour."

Walking ahead with Blair and Irina, Dove took the lead, while Selkirk and Colin followed. Selkirk's sensitive face was lined with anxiety. "What do you make of it?" he asked.

"The whole thing looks bad."

"Bad! Only a miracle can keep blood from flowing in Learmonth this winter." Then, breaking his gloomy trend of thought, he said, "Winnipeg tried to get you on the short-wave all morning. They can't understand why you came up here. Colin, you're acting foolishly not to give them some reason."

"How can I? If I told them the truth, they'd order me back to Wolverine. And, if there were any leak, I'd be finished before I began. I've worked for the Bay Company long enough for them to trust me."

"It's not a question of trust. What you're doing is to defy discipline. You may be transferred—even dismissed. Let me write them, Colin."

"Let's wait," Rae answered.

It was nearly dusk when they reached the clearing, where their arrival was heralded by the barking of a dozen Indian dogs; and, while they waited for Tennant to join them, Dove took them through the buildings of the school—dormitories, classrooms and last of all, the Hall, where he showed them Dr. Benedict's little hospital and the chapel.

"What's upstairs?" Colin heard Irina ask.

"Empty dormitories and an attic," Dove answered shortly.

A few minutes later Tennant joined them and Dove led his party to one of the smaller dining rooms where two young Cree girls waited on them.

Tennant was in an expansive mood. His winter freight was safely delivered, the trapper had been released with a reprimand, and two attractive women were seated near him.

"Some of my boys were all for paying you a visit tonight," he announced to Dove. "I told them to lay off—thought you might not like it."

Dove's mild eyes seemed more benign than ever, but, before he could answer, Irina turned toward him with, "Are strangers forgiven for asking stupid questions?"

Dove smiled. "I don't believe you could ask a stupid question."

"Oh, I ask dozens. But ever since I came here, I've been wondering just what your school does—what your purpose is."

About the table an expectant silence fell. Colin himself leaned forward, eager to hear Dove's own explanation.

"My purpose" — the little man spoke slowly, as if choosing his words with care—"it is to bring a new kind of education to this country. I have always believed that the so-called education of the Indian has actually unfitted him for the only life he can lead—the life of the hunter and trapper. The girl's are taught to cook on white men's stoves and sew on white men's sewing machines; and, when they go back to their villages, they are helpless. That is true also of the boys. By the time the mission schools are through with them, they are absolutely useless for their old life of the forests and lakes. They have become tragic misfits.

"And even if they become trappers, the Indians have always been at the mercy of the Hendrik's Bay Company and the free traders, who give them just as little for the skins as they will take.

"Well, I am changing all that. I am teaching these young men to trap and to use modern methods. I am teaching their young women to cure furs and tan leather—to make use of the skins the men bring in. And more especially, I am acting as their agent, to see that they get honest pay for their pelts instead of being bled as they have been in the past.

"This year I have two hundred Crees, ranging in age from six to eighteen. Two white teachers and five Indian teachers help me. We spend as little time in the classroom as we can, but every pupil is taught to read and do simple mathematics, and Dr. Benedict gives them a good course in hygiene. The rest is trapping." Dove stopped. "Am I boring you with all this, Miss Meredith?"

Irina shook her head. "Is trapping so hard to learn?" she asked.

Dove nodded toward Colin. "Mr. Rae can tell you that trapping is a high art. It involves a knowledge of animals whose lives depend on their watchfulness. It is a case of matching wits with creatures whose senses are of necessity much more acute than our own. And even after the animal is caught there are many ways to ruin the fur in skinning and curing.

"Naturally, I am disliked by some. The mission schools dislike me and I am in direct competition with both Nate Tennant and your future husband. I am making it more difficult for them to buy cheap and sell high; I am able to pay the Indian more money because I want no profit myself."

With growing admiration Colin listened. It was all so reasonably, so convincingly put forward; there was just enough truth to give the whole statement a note of integrity. But now the little man was looking up at Colin. "I'd like to know what you think, Mr. Rae. We have come to look on you as an authority on the fur country."

There may have been the slightest note of derision in the placid voice, but Selkirk interrupted with a little laugh. "I don't see how Colin can disagree with what you say, Dove. Most of it is taken word for word from Colin's book. But what good does it do to teach your Crees to be trappers if there is nothing left to trap? Between you and Tennant, this country will be trapped out within two years.

"The Bay Company has been in the fur business for more than two centuries without exterminating the supply. They've done this, not by so-called 'new methods,' but by clinging to the old. They've encouraged the Indians to trap only the finest furs, to maintain their own trapping grounds that their people with the wisdom of centuries have established. All this you and Tennant will destroy."

Tennant's heavy fist struck the table. "You're a hundred per cent right. There's no room for us all. The day Dove decided to speed up his Indians, this country was doomed; and the day he told me to keep my trappers out, it was doomed all the quicker. As long as there's any gravy to be got, I'm going to get my share."

"And you're both headed for a collision."

"Could be. If Dove interferes, it's a finish fight."

Watching him across the table, Colin wondered how Selkirk would be able to cope with two such formidable enemies . A finish fight, Tennant had called it, and he had been right.

Yet, even as he listened to these three men whose diverse interests were to shape the future of Learmonth, it seemed to Colin that behind all that was said lay something that had not been spoken—something even more sinister.

Across the dining room a door opened and Selkirk's clerk entered. The "boss" looked up. "Want me, Fred?"

"It's a message for Mr. Rae, a short-wave from Winnipeg. You're transferred to a new post, sir."

Colin was conscious of the sudden quiet. "Transferred where?" he asked.

"Fort MacKenzie."

"Fort MacKenzie!" Colin heard Selkirk's gasp of dismay — that northmost and loneliest of all trading posts! Men who worked there never forgot it—the long, black Arctic nights; the bleak months when summer never came; the blinding monotony of endless ice. This, then, had been the company's answer to his disregard of orders, and it served a double purpose—discipline and assurance that Rae could not embarrass them by further attacks on Dove.

"Anything more?" Colin asked.

"You are to leave at once on the boat, sir. That's why I came over."

Every face had turned toward Colin. He saw Dove's gathering surprise, and Selkirk's grave look of sympathy, but most of all he was aware of Blair's stricken eyes—once he was gone she would have no one to turn to. Looking toward the boy in the doorway, Colin said "Fred, tell the Winnipeg office I'm not going to Fort MacKenzie."

Selkirk was on his feet. "Colin, you can't—"

"Yes, I can. I'm through. Give them that message, Fred. Why waste two years of life at Fort MacKenzie? If my work for the company has only amounted to this, it's better I know it now."

Selkirk stood dumfounded—Rae was deliberately wrecking his career without a qualm. "But what will you do?" he asked hopelessly.

Colin looked across the table at Tennant, and the eyes of the two men held; then Colin smiled. "Trapping seems to be popular up here. I'll give Nate and Dove a little competition. This winter I'm the trap line."

Not until they left the school would Colin Rae listen to another word about his decision; but, when he and Selkirk were seated before the fire at the inn and Irina had gone to her room, Selkirk would be put off no longer.

"Colin," he burst out, "you're mad! Let me wire Winnipeg. There is still time to mend this."

"No. There's a fight ahead, and I want to be part of it without any company strings to hamper me. In the meantime, it looks like busy days ahead for Colin Rae, trapper."

And that part of his prophecy was true—those next two weeks were he busiest of his life.

After the departure of the boat, Learmonth was isolated. Until freeze-up, her only contact with the outside world would be by radio. With rivers and lakes a growing mass of shifting ice floes, even Blair was fearful of wrecking her pontoons in landing, and the larger planes had long since discontinued service.

City Council Holds Inaugural Meeting of Year; Chairmen For Various Committees Named

Dr. James Semple Delivers Invocation and Residents Address Members

BY-LAWS PASSED

In the presence of residents of the city, city officials and members of civic organizations the inaugural meeting of the City Council was held in the Council Chamber of the City Hall with His Worship, Mayor Harry W. Rollins presiding. Before the council convened the members took the oath of office, Aldermen Butler and Pringle being absent through business reasons. After the City Clerk had read the results of the last municipal election, two newly elected Aldermen, Trudeau and Wilbur escorted Mayor Rollins to the dias after which His Worship called upon Dr. James Semple of Bridge Street United Church to address the council and assembly and give the invocation.

Dr. Semple told of his recent trip to the west coast during the past summer and stated, that Belleville was the most beautiful city of all he had seen on his journey. He told of meeting Judge Forin while on the coast and was presented with a New Testament by him from which he read the 13th Chapter of Romans to the assembly present. Prayers were asked for the Divine guidance of the members of the council and for protection of all members of the armed forces, that have enlisted from this community. Dr. Semple also prayed for a speedy victory for our arms and for peace again on earth and goodwill toward all men. Mayor Rollins thanked Dr. Semple for his address.

Vote of Thanks Tendered.

After Mayor Rollins had delivered his inaugural address, a vote of thanks was tendered by Aldermen Trudeau and Follwell and Mayor Rollins then asked a few of the residents present to say a few words. Chairman of the Hydro Commission, Morley P. Duff congratulated the new council on their election and endorsed the address of the Mayor, when he stated that he and the council wished for co-operation among all civic bodies during the coming year. He pledged the hearty co-operation of the Commission to the council during the year. J. O. Herity, manager of the Chamber of Commerce thanked His Worship for the kind remarks made of the city officials, because he said "We sometimes hear words, that are not always kind". He wished to all members of the council the compliments of the season.

J. G. Galloway, director of the Chamber of Commerce, also wished the members success in their coming year of office, while H. B. Petterly stated it was a pleasure to be at the meeting to witness how the council conducted their business. He spoke of the Children's Aid Society of which he is president, stating that it was spending $40,000 annually and he hoped that when representation was made to council for funds, that the members would deal generously with the request. "The C.A.S. is becoming a tremendous affair with four field workers permanently in office and three helping in the office with the records. He asked the council to eliminate the noise of whistling trains running through the city and also have the streets properly marked so that citizens would not be disturbed in the early hours by persons enquiring for a certain street.

Chairmen Named.

Commissioner Russell Wootten stated that he wished for the council a year of progress and co-operation with the Hydro Electric Power Commission. Mrs. Harry Rollins, wife of the Mayor Mrs. Doris Burgoyne, Mrs. Harold Armstrong and Mrs. Harry Naylor were introduced. The Council went into the committee of the whole to appoint the various chairmen for the year, which resulted as follows:

Chairman of Executive —Ald. H. J. Clarke.

Chairman of Public Works— Ald. Harold J. Armstrong.

Chairman of Fire— Ald. H. W. Woodley.

Chairman of Market and City Property—Ald. E. O. Butler.

Chairman of Light—Ald. Frank Follwell.

Chairman of Industries—Ald. R. A. Pringle.

Chairman of Regional Planning—Ald. C. R. Clapp.

Chairman of Printing and Stationery—Ald. Lorne McDougall.

Chairman of Labor—Ald. Newton W. Wilbur.

Chairman of Welfare — Mayor Harry Rollins.

Chairman of Tourist and Publicity—Ald. J. J. Trudeau.

Appointments.

To Library Board —J. Edgar Bateman for three years.

To Board of Health, Dr. Jack Marshall, A. M. Bishop and J. Vince Doyle. To Parks Board, Orland A. Pinkston, Alfred B. Baird and Francis W. Potter, the latter named to fill the unexpired term of ex-mayor Glencoe E. Thompson, who resigned.

To Children's Aid Society Board, Ald. McDougall and Ald. Follwell. To Hospital Board, Ald. Charles L. Hyde.

In the committee of the whole, the council recommended that Mayor Rollins, Aldermen Clapp, Armstrong and Woodley attend a regional planning conference to be held in Toronto on January 11th. Morley Smith's tender for sand for the city for the coming year was accepted and the city clerk and chairman of public works was authorized to sign the agreement and contract. An invitation for the Rotary and Kinsmen Club to attend their meetings was accepted and the clerk notified to write the clubs signifying their intention to attend.

Permission Withheld

Mr. Vance's request for permission to stable horses on Murney Street was not entertained by the council because it was stated it was contrary to by-law 3259 and he will be advised to do nothing in this matter until permission has been given by the council. It was recommended that in the absence of the Chairman of Finance,—that the Mayor be authorized to countersign cheques and that the bank be so notified. A photo of ex-Mayor Geo. Tice was received by the council with thanks and ordered to be hung in the council chamber along with other former mayors of the city. The clerk was instructed to write Mr. Tice expressing the council's thanks for the gift. The matter of an honor roll for paying the city's respect to members of the armed forces was left in the hands of Mayor Rollins and Ald. McDougall, chairman of Printing and Stationery for their action.

By-Laws Passed

By-laws were passed fixing the 1943 revised assessment as the assessment for 1944 upon which city taxes will be paid. The chairman of Finance was authorized to borrow the sum of $385,859 from the bank for current expenditures until such time as taxes start rolling into the treasurer's office.

Ald. McDougall objected to borrowing such a large sum after the Chairman of Finance, Ald. H. J. Clarke had informed the new alderman, that the amount was never needed but that the bank required the borrowing by-law to be passed. Ald. Chamberlain pointed out that if a smaller amount was put in and the city reached that amount no further borrowing could be conducted with the bank. Ald McDougall cited a case in the eastern counties where the clerk and other officials had usurped the powers of borrowing from the bank and it had cost the municipality a considerable sum of money. Ald. Clarke stated that never more than $140,000 had been required since he came into office to be borrowed before tax collections started to come in. On that statement Ald. McDougall objected to the larger amount being borrowed and he was supported by Ald. Clapp but the by-law was sustained on vote and passed. There being no further business the council adjourned.

Weather Brings Lull in Fighting On Adriatic Front

By DOUGLAS AMARON
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With Canadians in Italy, Jan. 3 (CP Cable) — Winter weather brought a lull in fighting Sunday along the Adriatic front where the Canadian 1st Division is holding positions won last week south of the Tesore River.

The Germans are still in possession of high ground between the coastal road and the sea about a mile south of the Tesore with Canadians from a Maritime battalion dug further down the road. The enemy position is well defended with machine-guns and mortars.

Further inland French-Canadian troops (of the Royal 22nd) hold heights over the lower banks of the Tesore while central Canadian Highlanders (the 48th of Toronto) who occupied the town of San Tommaso, on Dec. 31 are firmly established in that area. Elsewhere there has been nothing to report on the Canadian flank of the front.

The enemy staged a New Year's Eve counter-attack against the Maritimers but were beaten off without much difficulty. The attack was made by a fighting patrol of 40 or 50 men. (The Maritimers engaged were not identified but two Maritime battalions, the Carleton and Yorks and the West Nova Scotias are part of the Canadian 1st Division.)

A winter gale which ripped tiles of roofs ushered in the new year, covering the ground with a foot of snow. Icy rain which followed melted the snow in the five-mile coastal belt but the area beyond thi is still white.

Ground and roads became a greasy morass and traffic Saturday moved over circuitous routes, some vehicles taking seven hours for a trip normally needing half an hour. The weather was fine again Sunday, the roads drying quickly in the chill wind.

Air operations cancelled on the previous two days were resumed Sunday morning with fighters and bombers making sorties behind the German lines. A handful of German fighters and bombers made a hit-and-run raid on the coastal town of Ortona which is still being cleared of mines and booby traps by the Canadians who captured it last week after an eight-day battle.

Dismisses Action Against Paper

Denver, Jan. 3 —(AP)— Judge George A. Luxford has dismissed an injunction suit against the Denver Post seeking to compel it to publish listings of radio programs of station KFEL of Denver.

Judge Luxford cited an opinion Friday stating that "a newspaper must remain free to publish such matters as it regards as possessing news value, and to refrain from publishing such matters as it may determine do not possess news value." Another opinion contained in the dismissal order said "if a newspaper were required to accept an advertisement it could be compelled to publish a news item."

In arguing against the post's dismissal action, attorneys for KFEL, an affiliate of the mutual broadcasting system, contended that omission of the listings from the newspaper's daily schedule of radio programs violated the Colorado unfair practices act.

Judge Luxford disagreed, saying the act applied to competitive business operations and that KFEL "is not a competitor of the post printing and publishing company, defendant herein."

Attorneys for KFEL announced the dismissal order would be appealed to the state supreme court.

C.C.F. Conference Outlines Program

Regina, Jan. 3. (CP)—C.C.F. proposals for solution of Canada's economic, social and constitutional problems were announced today following a four-day closed conference of Dominion and Provincial Party executives here.

The proposed program includes socializing of industry, natural resources and health services and advocates a large-scale housing scheme, uniform labor standards and an improved uniform educational system.

M. J. Coldwell, National Party Leader, told the closing session yesterday that the C.C.F. proposals include solutions of problems of a post-war Canada. Chief aims, he said, are to provide opportunities for an abundant life and social security for industrial, agricultural workers, and discharged members of the armed forces.

At the same time he charged that "neither the present Federal government nor any of its provincial satellites have made any real attempt to meet these problems or to formulate adequate and constructive proposals in the interests of the people".

He urged the Federal Government call a nation-wide conference to deal with economic, social and constitutional problems.

The meetings held to co-ordinate and define Federal and Provincial C.C.F. policies, accepted committee recommendations to be forwarded to provincial C.C.F. councils.

The Social Services report said the objective of any C.C.F. Provincial Administration in socializing medicine and health services should be to provide complete professional care both preventive and curative for all the people.

Provincial sections were urged to plan for socialization of natural resources in preparation for the day the C.C.F. takes office.

The conference's press committee announced that limitation of power of provincial governments to take social ownership of existing industries were explored on constitutional, financial and practical grounds.

Other recommendations urged:

Minimum and fair wage legislation for all workers, including farm labor and domestics;

Extension of Workmen's Compensation to all workers;

Establishment of vocational and technical training schools in all provinces with special schools to fit discharged members of the armed services for civilian work;

Extension of the system of scholarships and bursaries and greater educational assistance from the Dominion government;

Higher teachers' salaries and teaching standards.

CARGO PLANE OVERSHOOTS FIELD, KILLS THREE

The falling craft crushed an automobile, decapitating its occupant, Louis E. Westphalen, 23, of suburban Lennox.

Reports from the scene said two army men on the plane were killed but a mortuary said it had received bodies of three army men.

A motor dropped off the plunging ship and fell into a bedroom at the home of George F. Dopheide.

Mayor Rollins' Address At Inaugural Meeting Of the City Council

Fellow Members of the City Council and Citizens of Belleville,—

I must first of all express to the electors of the City of Belleville my deep sense of gratitude and heartfelt appreciation of the great honor conferred upon me in re-electing me to the highest office within their power to bestow.

At the same time I would like to pay tribute to former mayors and councils for the far-seeing and business-like conduct of civic affairs in the past which has done so much towards bringing us to the happy position we occupy at the present time. To them in all sincerity I say, well done!

I desire also to acknowledge with grateful appreciation the whole-hearted co-operation I have had from the city officials one and all, from the department of public works from Chief Probert and the police department from Chief Lynch and his capable staff of firemen, from the Chamber of Commerce and its manager and board of directors, from the Parks' Commission, the Board of Education and all the other organizations who have contributed so earnestly and successfully to the civic welfare. I solicit the same hearty co-operation in the year which lies immediately before us and to them all I pledge the utmost co-ordination of effort as mayor of the city.

Thanked Citizens For Running.

It was a fine evidence of public spirit, when so many of our prominent citizens came forward at election-time to offer themselves as candidates for seats in the city council. It was also a fine compliment to last year's council, when so many of them were re-elected to seats on the aldermanic board. No more convincing evidence could be given of the popular satisfaction with the council of 1943 and the policies it pursued than the vote recorded for those aldermen who sought re-election. Ald. Thomas Marshall was not a candidate because of long and serious illness. He had served the city faithfully and well for many years. We wish for him a complete restoration to his former vigorous health.

Opposed to Unessential Expenditure.

I do not stand before you today proposing any radical departure from the course we have followed with such satisfactory results the past year. I again emphasize, that I am absolutely opposed to unessential capital expenditures while the war is in progress. It is conceivable that certain improvements may really be necessitated or that changes may be required to protect past investments. It should always be remembered that any city which stands still is actually on the way to grass-grown streets and doors that hang by one hinge. Belleville is now a live and expanding city where every form of business finds a congenial home, where comfort and culture are the possible attainments of every household, where orderly progress appears to be the objective of public organizations and the aim of private enterprise. You may take it for granted that the City Council for the year 1944 will do all in its power to encourage and foster that new spirit of advancement which means so much to the future of Belleville.

Cities do not just happen. They are built by co-operation. That helpful co-operation and leadership the Council for 1944 is prepared to give.

Promises Progressive Administration

We therefore promise you a sanely progressive administration of your affairs for the year that lies before us. We shall continue the wise and safe policy of pay-as-you-go. The credit of Belleville now stands among the highest of the urban municipalities of Ontario. Your council will do nothing to impair that good name.

We are hearing a great deal of talk these days about post-war planning. It is felt that in the period of readjustment following the signing of the peace treaty that there will be the stern necessity for action on the part of municipal councils and governments if we escape the deplorable conditions following the termination of the First World War.

A post-war-planning commission has therefore been organized under authority of the city council. This commission will look into the various proposals that are made for possible activities upon the part of the municipality in the way of public works and improvements which may be undertaken by the city with a view to the securing of needed services or developments and at the same time providing employment to those returning from overseas or to others who may find themselves out of work, following the cessation of wartime activity.

Many Proposals Presented.

Many proposals have already been brought to the attention of the commission all of which will be carefully studied and surveyed. Those considered most practical and essential will be recommended in turn to the City Council to be dealt with and disposed of as the council may deem advisable.

Among the propositions already brought to the attention of the commission are a sewage disposal plant, flood-control on the Moira River, the development of an esplanade along the east bank of the river, a landing-field for airplanes, recreation centres, a combined police and fire station and a bus depot to serve all the passenger transportation lines now entering the city. Doubtless there will be many other meritorious projects, which will come up for consideration from time to time. I am not predicting that all or any of those mentioned will be recommended to the council for action or that any of them will be finally approved by the council. They are as yet only in the discussional stage but they will receive the most earnest consideration and will be dealt with according to merit or necessity.

Creates Fine Record.

Belleville has already created a remarkable record in recent years by way of securing the establishment here of manufacturing industries. That sagacious policy we propose to continue with ever increasing vigor. New public works, such as are now being considered by the Post-War Planning commission, may be all right as temporary expedients to prevent or alleviate unemployment but it is to the factory we must look for that steady sustaining power, which means continuity of employment and of income down through the years. The construction of a new sewage disposal plant, for instance, will provide employment for only a few months to a limited number of workers. Factories, on the other hand, go on indefinitely and give to their people a continuous livelihood. Not only that, but our industries almost invariably expand and grow greater from year to year. They thereby not only increase the volume of their own business but promote the growth of the city. It is an unquestionable fact, that the only method open to old-established cities like Belleville to bring about an increase of population, is to secure the location of new factories within or near the civic bounds.

New industries mean new homes for more people and therefore create expanding patronage for merchants, an enlarged demand for mechanics connected with the building trades and increased support for churches, schools and public institutions and services. Above all, it brings about rising property values. We shall therefore earnestly continue the policy of industrial promotion and increasingly endeavor to attract new business enterprises to locate at Belleville.

I would personally like to see our Council go on record by requesting the Federal Government to retain in the services all those on active military duty until they can properly be re-established in civilian life.

More New Homes.

I would also recommend our Council to request the Dominion government to make available under the National Housing Act sufficient funds, at not more than three per cent interest, and a ninety per cent loan value, so that every citizen who really desires to establish a new home may have the opportunity to realize his ambition. I know of no better method to bring about sound citizenship than to have wholesome living conditions in comfortable homes so that men, women and children may be kept free from the degrading influences of an unclean and unsanitary environment.

May we also extend our deepest sympathy to those of our citizens whose sons and others near and dear to them have made the last and greatest sacrifice upon the altar of freedom. May the God of Battles comfort and sustain them.

And to those who have sons and daughters in various branches of the active service where they are still effectively fighting our country's foes, may we express the hope that before 1944 is ended those loved ones may be restored to their native land and to their homes and families.

And so I say to you as Citizens of Belleville, let us meet the future in a spirit of confidence. We all believe the darkest days are now past and can already see the dawn of another day where friendship, brotherhood and peace will overcome the strife and hate, which now dominate the world.

went on sounding orders after being hit in the arm.

Sitting in the ship's wardroom with a colored picture of Lord Nelson over the fireplace, Lt.-Cmdr. Graves told of the gunnery side of the action.

"We got our first rounds off shortly after the Glasgow opened fire and visibility conditions were not bad," he said.

"From 1:45 in the afternoon until 4 o'clock our six inchers were going full blast. During that time our ack-ack guns were engaging German bombers. At one time we were banging away at the destroyers on one side and aircraft on the other.

"We first saw two enemy ships come over the horizon and we just rubbed our hands. Then another and another appeared but we said, 'Okay, let 'em come.'

"Then the number got up to eight and we got a little puzzled. That was quite a force for even two cruisers to handle. And when 11 were in sight we just began to close in.

"Toward the end of the action gunfire from the Glasgow and ourselves had three stopped. The Germans seemed to split up into groups and it was one group of four to which we stuck for a goodly while. There were so many of the enemy we could not deal with them all at once and some had to be neglected in the running battle to the south-east.

Walking around the Enterprise decks, Lieut. O'Grady pointed out how exposed the gunners were on the old ship.

"Some sailors carrying ammunition over the decks were nearly knocked overboard by waves breaking over the stern as we turned quickly and manoeuvred for salvoes," he said.

"As far as ack-ack goes our gunners were in on the action during the surface-fight and we also were attacked by enemy planes after the destroyers fled and we had finished off the three crippled ships."

MAY ASK PROBE OF STATEMENT

Remark About Threats of Steel and R. R. Strikes Said to be 'Resented Bitterly'

By JOSEPH A. LOFTUS
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Washington, Jan. 3 — (AP) — Railroad union leaders in the United States are planning to ask the Senate to investigate the source and reason for the anonymous statement by a high government official that threats of steel and railroad strikes may have delayed victory over Germany.

One union chief declared the statement was "resented bitterly" and that he and his associates would "take very definite steps to find out the source."

The government figure, who stipulated that his name was not to be used, described the labor disputes as a "great tragedy" which may eventually cost the lives of thousands of Allied soldiers. German propagandists have used them, he asserted, to picture chaos in the United States and thus bolster Axis resistance.

One of the railroad union leaders, evidently more resentful even than when he first heard of the criticism Friday night, said Labor probably would ask the Senate to see where the responsibility lies for seizure of the railroads and failure to settle wage demands.

This official insisted upon anonymity because generally he makes public statements only in conjunction with associates. He said a formal statement probably would be made in a day or two.

Rail union chiefs previously had blamed the administration for the situation and disclaimed any union responsibility for any "psychological comfort" Hitler may have got out of it.

'All Berlin Trips Rolled Into One'

London, Jan. 3 (CP Cable) — R.C.A.F. bomber group sent squadrons of its Lancasters with the R.A.F. Sunday night to hit Berlin. Four Canadian bombers did not return.

A veteran on nine trips to Berlin as a reargunner in an R.A.F. Lancaster, Sgt. J. H. Fraser of Victoria, said it was "all Berlin trips rolled up into one." He found the defences as strong as any he had seen in 14 trips to enemy territory.

It looked like a successful raid though," he said. "The Pathfinders seemed right on the target and the glow of fires beneath the flares was well centred."

A sharp brush with an enemy fighter gave FO. C. P. Pesne of (66 (Oak Park Ave.) Toronto a shaky few minutes. Tracers streamed by his bombaimer's compartment but he was not touched. The big Lancaster had its inter-communications system knocked out and the top of the starboard wing sliced off, the hydraulics damaged and a tire punctured. FO. R. L. Pinder of Beamsville, Ont., a gunner, said, "we were lucky to land safely."

All aircraft of this squadron returned safely. Canadians in it included Flt. Sgt. R. S. Barre of Avonmore, Ont., a bombaimer.

Salvo-by-Salvo Account Told Of Sharnhorst Sinking

A British Northern Naval Base, Jan. 3 — (AP) — In a graphic salvo-by-salvo account of the destruction of the German battleship Scharnhorst Dec. 26 in the Arctic night above Norway's North Cape, Admiral Sir Bruce Fraser has paid high tribute to the daring of four destroyers which co-operated with the battleship Duke of York.

"The skilled handling of the Savage, Saumarez, Scorpion and Stord, in instantly perceiving the opportunity for their (torpedo) attack, and the gallant way in which they pressed it home under intense fire, insured the eventual destruction of the Scharnhorst," said Fraser's account, written for Arthur Oakeshott, Reuters news agency correspondent with the Home Fleet.

"The Duke of York fought the Scharnhorst hard, skilfully and well, and after being subjected to the full weight of the enemy's fire for over an hour and a half, won a capital ship gun action at night," Fraser declared.

Meanwhile, a Royal Navy officer who helped send the Scharnhorst to the bottom said that when the smoke of the battle cleared away the battleship lay on her side "looking like a whale that had just come up for air except that she was ablaze from stem to stern."

The Duke of York, the cruiser Norfolk and the destroyer Saumarez suffered minor damage from the Scharnhorst's shells, Admiral Fraser stated.

REDS CROSS PRE-WAR RUSSIAN-POLISH BORDER

Liberators of Kiev Rolling Over Flat Terrain of Poland

Former Frontier Town of Olevsk Taken Along With 170 Other Villages

NEARING RUMANIA

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Jan. 4—(AP)—Red Army forces under Gen. Nikolai Vatutin, liberator of Kiev, were rolling over the flat terrain of Poland today after capturing the former frontier town of Olevsk and smashing their way across the pre-war Russian-Polish border.

Fall of Olevsk and Novograd-Volynski, 42 miles to the south, was announced Monday night in a Russian communique which declared 170 villages had been recaptured in the swift Soviet advance. Front line dispatches disclosed that Russian vanguards, pushing on rapidly from Olevsk along the Kiev-Warsaw railway, crossed the frontier a short time later.

The spearhead advancing from Olevsk, a former customs station 135 miles northwest of Kiev, was supported on the left by another column which had occupied Emilchino, 28 miles to the southeast.

Crossing Detailed

The point at which the Russians crossed the Polish border is approximately 150 miles east of the frontier from which the Germans launched their invasion of Russia after the partition of Poland, and is about 300 miles from Warsaw.

The Russians made no official comment on the crossing of the border, which no longer is recognized by Moscow as an international boundary line.

The southern wing of Vatutin's Army, meanwhile was plunging on from captured Czerzhinsk, 35 miles southwest of Zhitomir, in a drive which Marshal Fritz Von Mannstein's rearguards have appeared unable to check ever since eight Nazi tank and 13 infantry divisions wre defeated in the battle of the Kiev bulge.

Germans Unable to Rally

At no point along the 60-mile wide drive on Poland, apparently, was Von Mannstein able to rally his fleeing, demoralized troops for a stand against the slashing Russian offensive.

While Premier Stalin signalized the Red Army advance by an order of the day announcing the capture of Novograd-Volynski, other spearheads of Vatutin's Army were pushing toward the Rumanian border, slightly more than 80 miles to the southwest. They cut the Kazatin-Zashkov and Kazatin-Uman railway serving the 500,000 Germans believed to be still in southern Russia, including those threatened with encirclement in the Dnieper bend.

Front dispatches said these spearheads were within 35 miles of the main Warsaw-Odessa trunk railway feeding the Dnieper bend, and were driving for Vinnitsa, 22 miles to the southwest, and Zhmerinka, in their sweep to seal off the German forces to their east. Beridhev, Von Mannstein's headquarters until the present offensive, was reported to be half-surrounded.

On the Baltic front in the far north, Gen. Ivan Bargramian continued his advance toward the Latvian frontier. The Soviet war bulletin reported capture of 70 more towns north of Nevel which left the Russians within 45 miles of Latvia.

At the same time Vitebsk, major stronghold of the Germans' White Russian defence system, was slowly being invested by Bargramian's troops, dispatches said.

Of eight labor candidates for city council, three were elected. They are Edward Bathe, Clifford Harman and Finlay Dafoe.

Present Struggle For Air Supremacy Is Turning Point

Washington, Jan. 4. (AP) —The present struggle for air supremacy, says Gen. H. H. Arnold, chief of the United States Army Air forces, is the major turning point in the war.

"What American and Royal Air Force Bombers can do to the whole German war machine once the German fighter force is rendered impotent needs no comment", he asserts. "The issue hangs now on which side first falters, weakens and loses its punishing power".

In a report in the operations of the United States Air Forces, Arnold left little doubt as to his conviction that it would not be the plane power of the Allies which would fail.

The United States now has "the world's largest air force," manned by 2,385,000 officers and men, Gen. H. H. Arnold reported.

The army air forces chief gave an accounting of the strength of American aviation and its operations in a report similar to the recent summary of army activities by Gen. George C. Marshal, chief of staff.

Arnold did not disclose the number of planes in operation, but he said that "some conception of the size of the army air forces may be gained from the recent statement of Robert A. Lovet, Assistant Secretary of War for Air, that over one-half of the army's entire production in 1944 will be aircraft and its equipment."

He noted that in November, 1943, approximately 8,800 planes were produced in the United States, as compared with 5,013 during the preceding January, and added:

"At the same time these gains in numbers were made, greater gains have been made in the size of the planes produced and in their quality as fighting weapons."

During the next 15 months, Arnold reported, the War Production Board schedule calls for the manufacture of 145,000 planes. These will be heavier and more elaborately equipped than those now in the air. The weight of heavy bombers to be produced in the next 18 months will exceed that of all types of planes produced in the first year and a half of American participation in the war, Arnold said.

There was an intimation in his report that the new B-29, now in production, will be only one of super-bomber types to come.

Arnold recalled his statement of a year ago that the B-17 and B-24 were perhaps the last of the "small" bombers, that newer and bigger ships with more speed, fire power and bomb capacity were on the way. Then his report said:

"The B-29, for example will see action in 1944."

Up to last Oct. 1 a total of 26,900 planes had been flown to the allies of the United States by lease-lend or direct-purchase agreements, Arnold said, adding that Russia has received 7,000 planes under lease-lend.

APPEAL TO VIOLENCE

Naples, Jan. 4 —(AP)— An outright appeal to violence, calling on the Italians to "paralyze with terror and strike without mercy" at known Fascists in southern Italy, appeared yesterday on the walls of Naples in placards purported to have been signed by Communists.

Sees Capital, Labor Join in March Of Adventure to Peace, Plenty

Oakland, Calif., Jan. 4 — (AP) — Henry J. Kaiser, specialist in translating dreams into deeds, scanned the future today and saw a "courageous and truly competitive economy" in which capital and labor would join in an adventurous march to peace and plenty.

New ventures into the fields of chemistry, metallurgy and machine tools; great clinics of medicine; development of the Orient; modern rolling stock for railroads; more ships for all the seas — his vision was unlimited.

And the foundations for such developments "should be laid immediately to avert a desperate crisis."

"New economy must spring from new venture," he said. "Money must be made by financing production not only by exchanging pieces of paper; we must ge. healthy by developing a credit structure that is willing and able to take risks."

The energetic industrialist was referring particularly to his proposed "risk credit pool" which he said was needed "immediately" to prevent a "disastrous crisis" in the transition from war to peace.

Labor Must Invest and Take Risks and Profit

He said that labor "individually and collectively must invest its money in the credit pool and thus partake the risks and profits of this adventure into the future."

In developing his beliefs in the future the dynamic West Coast builder made side-swiping criticisms of the past.

"The new economy cannot and will not be the same protective economy that we knew prior to 1940. It must be competitive. Labor must be competitive. Everything must be geared to creating and producing ...we must not be afraid of obsolescence. We must welcome obsolescence and be willing to write off depreciation when technological advances make it profitable to do so."

Unspecified Targets In Western Germany Blasted

INDIAN FORCES CAPTURE HEIGHT AT SAN TOMASSO

Canadians Advancing Up Adriatic Coast Within a Mile of Aireli River

RAID BEARING PLANT

By WES GALLAGHER
(AP War Correspondent)

Algiers, Jan. 4 —(AP)— Indian forces of the British 8th Army have captured a hill overlooking enemy lines and 1½ miles from San Tomasso which was captured by Canadian forces late last week, the Allied communique announced today.

The Indian troops, of the 8th Division, advanced almost to Tollo located on a secondary road paralleling the coast and about five miles inland from the Adriatic, front-line dispatches said.

While the communique did not mention the western flank of the 8th Army's front, where the Canadians are edging up the coast, the Cairo radio heard here said Canadian troops were continuing their advance and were within a mile of the Aireli river, representing a forward movement of about three miles since they captured Ortona last Tuesday.

Hampered by Weather.

Soggy ground hampered large-scale fighting. On the western front American troops of the Anglo-American 5th Army stabbed with patrols at defences of San Vittore, guarding the main highway to Cassino and Rome.

The Germans replied with a shelling of Mignano, a highway hub. While Allied headquarters has not formally announced the capture of Mignano, that former German strongpoint is behind the present Allied positions along both sides of the important Rome highway.

Bearing Plant Hit.

In the air, heavy United States bombers knocked out the bearing plant at Villa Perosa in northern Italy yesterday and once again battered the Turin railway yards.

The main blow was against Villa Perosa and photographs showed the main building, 600 by 1,200 feet, at a nearby plant was hit directly. Other hits were scored on nearby buildings apparently living quarters for workers. There was little doubt the plant, making bearings for airplanes, tanks, submarines and other war machines, would be out of operation for some time. Two waves of bombers struck at the plant.

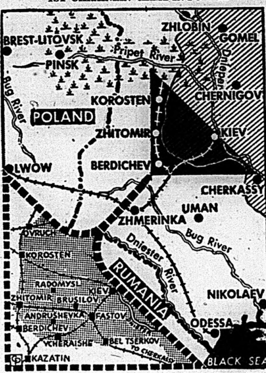
The two formations that pounded at the Turin rail yards met nearly 30 German fighters. A good concentration of bombs hit the yards, sidings, warehouses and industrial objectives, starting fires and severing the main line railroad.

Supply Trucks Strafed.

Allied fighters and dive-bombers wrecked or damaged dozens out of hundreds of German supply trucks found snowbound in mountain passes.

Other aircraft bombed the German-held Yugoslav ports of Split and Sibenik, and attacked a large concentration of troops at Prijedor in Yugoslavia.

1ST UKRAINIAN ARMY IN POLAND



The black triangle on the map indicates the terrific new Russian drive in which Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's 1st Ukrainian Army is swinging toward the old Polish border and southwest toward Rumania. With the capture of Zhitomir, the Russian army is now within Poland. At the triangle's peak is Berdichev, key rail city feeding Axis forces in the Ukraine and Poland. Nearly half a million Russians are reported slashing at the German lines. In the lower left corner is a close-up of the area where the drive is taking place.

2 JAP CRUISERS, ONE DESTROYER POSSIBLY SUNK

U. S. Navy Carrier Planes Carry Out Attack at Kavieng in New Ireland

32 PLANES DOWNED

Allied Headquarters, New Guinea, Jan. 4 — (AP) — Japan's naval strength is weaker by two cruisers and one destroyer which were damaged, possibly sunk, by United States Navy carrier planes in an attack at Kavieng, New Ireland.

While the planes from a carrier force of the South Pacific Command were hammering the enemy warships with heavy bombs and torpedoes, other aircraft from South Pacific bases were destroying 32 Japanese planes over Kavieng and Rabaul, big enemy base in Northeastern New Guinea. Five United States planes were lost in the two raids.

The attacks, reported in today's communique, occurred New Year's Day.

American troops of the 6th Army have secured their objective at Saidor, on the north coast of New Guinea, where they made on invasion landing Sunday.

Sped to Meet Enemy

Warned by reconnaissance planes that a Japanese naval force of two cruisers and two destroyers were approaching Kavieng, where another carrier-borne plane attack had sunk an enemy destroyer and two big cargo ships Christmas Day, the carrier force sped to meet them.

Fighters and divebombers hit the warships as they neared the harbor mouth. Bombs and torpedoes set the three vessels aflame while machine-gun fire sprayed all the ships.

Weather unfavorable for later reconnaissance made it impossible to determine whether the cruisers and destroyer eventually sank.

The Australians moved northward from recently-captured Nuzen on the coast of the Huon peninsula, New Guinea, closing the approximately 70-mile gap between them and the Americans at Saidor in a move intended to destroy the Japanese between the Allied forces.

Marines expanded their invasion holdings at Cape Gloucester, on the northwestern tip of New Britain, past the airdrome captured Dec. 30. Other Marines west of the cape have penetrated unopposed 3 miles south to Sag Sag on Dampier Strait.

CANUCK SOLDIER RESCUED ALIVE OUT OF DEBRIS

Buried Three Days and Half Under Ruins of House at Ortona

SOUND OF VOICE

By DOUGLAS AMARON
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the Canadians in Italy, Jan. 4—(CP Cable)—A Canadian infantryman, buried 3½ days in the debris of a demolished house in the Adriatic coastal town of Ortona, was rescued alive by members of his battalion who clawed away the rubble with their hands.

The soldier was a lance-corporal who, according to latest reports, is "doing well." He was still conscious when rescued despite the fact he had been unable to move from beneath the mass of girders and cement blocks.

The lance corporal's platoon had been clearing houses of Germans Dec. 26 when Nazi machine-guns opened up. They took shelter in a two-storey building which the Germans promptly blew up with a prepared demolition charge. All the Canadians were trapped.

Sounds Under Debris

When the immediate fighting had subsided pioneers from the same battalion began to clear away the debris and the lance corporal was rescued Dec. 29. Lieut. Terry Rowe of Winnipeg, an army photographer, photographed the rescue operations.

"The brick and stone house was nothing but a mass of rubble," Rowe said. "The pioneers already had dug out one man dead. They heard sounds coming from under the pile of rubble about five feet high."

Finally the soldier's hair appeared, then his face and a piece of drain pipe was placed in the hole to enable him to get more air.

A weak voice came from the rubble: "Who is it? The Germans?

"No, it's your pals," replied Johnman.

Williams said: "Hold on fellow. It won't be long now," and the soldier replied "all right."

He was the second Canadian rescued alive after being buried in Ortona. A private from another battalion was trapped Christmas Day and dug out Dec. 28 with the only injury a fractured pelvis.

GEN. MONTGOMERY LEAVES 8TH ARMY FOR NEW POST

Says End of the War In Sight But Will Not Predict When End Will Come

ADDRESSES TROOPS

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP War Correspondent)

With the 8th Army in Italy, Jan. 4 —(CP Cable)— Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery, who believes in stern discipline and personal contact with his men and embellishes his remarks with Biblical quotations, has left the famous 8th Army for his new post as commander of Britain's land forces on the "invasion front."

(Montgomery's arrival in Britain was disclosed Monday night in London and the first meeting of the Allied "Invaston War Council" was believed imminent.)

In a battered theatre not far from 8th Army headquarters Montgomery bade a soldier's farewell last Thursday to the men whom he had led in 18 months from the sands of El Alamein in Egypt to the edge of the Pescara plain in Italy and he gave them his war forecast.

"When we began this business we didn't know how the war would end," he said. "Now the end is in sight, although I don't say next month, next week or next year."

Takes Some of Staff.

He ~~gave the 8th Army credit for~~ helping effect this change in outlook and declared it was the only really experienced army in the Empire. He said he was taking some of his staff with him to England because it was his idea "to get that experience spread out over all the armies that have to deal the knockout blow."

He revealed also he had never given a written command to his subordinate commanders. He emphasized the importance of personal contact and quoted a Biblical verse: "Except ye utter by tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken?"

Written Message Submitted

The farewell speech was supplemented by a written message read out later to all troops, including the Canadian 1st Division which has fought with the 8th Army since Sicily. Every soldier could not come to hear him say goodbye because his men still are marching.

Although the message to the troops perhaps meant more to veterans of months of desert and African campaigning, the Canadians noted the passage in which he said: "In all the battles we have fought together we have not had one single failure; we have been successful in everything we have undertaken."

There is no doubt that the Canadians will miss "Monty," a regular visitor to the Canadian area. After the Sicilian campaign he called them "veterans of the 8th Army" and told them he never would put them into a battle which he was not certain of winning.

As he finished the speech and left the stage, Montgomery was given three cheers by officers and men, led by some of his best known divisional commanders, Lt.-Gen. Sir Bernard Freyberg, commander of the New Zealand 2nd Division. Montgomery climbed into his open car, stood up and saluted as he drove away.

Daylight Sweep Takes Mosquitos To Invasion Coast

Fires Still Raging In Berlin and City Traffic Remains Virtually Paralyzed

TEMPELHOF DROME HIT

By AUSTIN BEALMEAR
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 4 — (AP) — United States medium bombers, escorted by R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. fighters, heavily attacked military objectives in the Pas de Calais area of France today in the wake of R.A.F. Mosquito forays into Western Germany. All planes returned from both operations.

As the day advanced the German-controlled Danish radio left the air followed by the Norwegian long-range transmitters at Oslo and Tromsoe. This sometimes is an indication Allied aircraft are overhead in those areas.

Shortly after 10 a. m. (5 a. m. E.D.T.) a force of medium bombers, strongly escorted by fighters, swept out across the English Channel in the direction of Pas de Calais, rumored site of emplacements for Germany's "rocket guns."

The attack on Western Germany last night by the speedy Mosquito formations was the second successive night raid on this general area by these planes and was carried out without loss, the Air Ministry said.

Fires, meanwhile, were reported still burning in Berlin from the two previous night assaults on the German capital and advices relayed from neutral Sweden said that traffic within the city remained virtually paralyzed.

Two Fires Raging

Two fires were raging yesterday in Hitler's Reichchancellory, and hundreds of persons were believed trapped in shelters beneath the ruined building, these advices said.

The main administration building at Berlin's great Tempelhof airdrome also was reported damaged heavily by fire and destruction was said to be widespread in factory districts in the southeastern part of the city.

The Air Ministry announced that R.A.F., R.C.A.F. and Allied fighters and fighter bombers had been active over Northern France yesterday, bombing military objectives and carrying out extensive patrols. Two enemy aircraft were shot down and seven Allied planes were missing in these operations.

A communique said that one of the bombers reported missing from Sunday night's operations landed safely in England, reducing the losses for that night to 27 aircraft missing.

16-MONTHS-OLD CHILD IN TWO ACCIDENTS

Old Orchard, Me., Jan. 4. (AP)—Sixteen-months-old Terence Farnsworth, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Farnsworth, was in critical condition in hospital today in the wake of two accidents. Police said he climbed out of his baby carriage and was struck by a truck on main street but that he escaped further injury when a police patrol car overturned while taking him to the hospital. Doctors reported the boy suffered a fractured skull.

Hitler Won't Live Long Enough To Be Tried As Criminal—Masaryk

Washington, Jan. 4 — (AP)—Jan Masaryk, Czechoslovakian Foreign Minister, predicted today Hitler won't live long enough to be tried as a war criminal.

"He'll either be taken care of by the military or commit suicide," Masaryk told an interviewer.

Masaryk, who plans to return to London shortly, has been in this country as Chief of the Czech Delegation to the United Nations Relief Conference at Atlantic City.

Discussing the trials of war criminals by Allied nations after the war, he said there will be two kinds:

The important ones will be taken care of quickly, the others may drag on longer.

But the British and American troops will have to help clean up Nazi terrorists, the son of Czechoslovakia's first president declared. He added:—

"There must be a firing squad of British Grenadiers in Prague."

After the Nazis who participated actively in atrocities have been wiped out, Masaryk said there would have to be a period of quarantine for Germany.

"There must be some good Germans," he said, "but they will have to prove themselves."

As for the satellite countries, Masaryk indicated there is a wide difference between the people and the rulers and that when the crust of totalitarian sympathizers has been shorn off, Hungary, Bulgaria and Rumania will be able to rejoin the family of peace-loving nations.

The Czechs do not share fears expressed by other small countries that Russia, Britain and the United States will dominate the post-war world to the detriment of less powerful nations, he said.

Nazi Defenders Bring Up Tanks

London, Jan. 4—(CP)—Nazi defenders of Banjaluka, headquarters of the 2nd German Tank Army occupying the Yugoslavian Adriatic coast, have brought up tanks and field guns in a desperate but so far unsuccessful effort to smash Patrisan forces who captured half the city in a surprise New Year's Eve attack, Marshal Josip Broz (Tito) declared today.

"Bitter street battles are still raging," Tito's broadcast communique said, "but our guns are successfully counteracting the enemy's tanks and the last nests of resistance are being systemtically smoked out."

That the position of the German garrison is precarious war revealed when Partisans intercepted a telegram sent to an undisclosed German base urgently appealing for assistance, the bulletin said.

Three Arrested For Break-ins

Oshawa, Jan. 4 (CP)—Three men, one an army private, were held by police here yesterday on a car theft charge following investigations of break-ins at several Ontario centres, including the attempted burglary of a Cobourg liquor store and a break-in at a Port Hope service station early Friday.

Police named the three as Mike Cembal and Jerry Semowomyt of Oshawa, arrested near Bowmanville Sunday night, and Pte. Walter Moscall of Winnipeg, stationed at Toronto, arrested in Oshawa.

Thieves who attempted to enter the liquor store traded bullets with a Cobourg constable before escaping. At the Port Hope service station gasoline coupons and a number of articles were taken. The car, riddled with bullets, was recovered here and police said it was stolen from William Duncan of Oshawa.

Say Jap Soldiers, Civilians Sick of War

With Chinese Forces in Northern Hunan Province, Jan. 3 — (AP) — Japanese soldiers and civilians alike are sick of the war and not at all sure of victory, according to available Japanese prisoners.

Thus far, war correspondents touring this Chinese front have had an opportunity to question 19 prisoners, all Japanese except three Koreans.

The Chinese produced no officer prisoners and about half the prisoners interviewed were engineering or transport soldiers rather than actual combatants from whom more fiery responses might have been forthcoming.

All the prisoners seemed embarrassed over their predicament. None showed bravado and none made patriotic declarations.

Chierici, the last police prefect on the Fascist regime, was placed in office together with Carol Scorza, secretary general of the Fascist Party, in the party's last effort to stay in power. Chierici was reported to have been assassinated after the fall of Fascism.

No. 2. Considerable property damage resulted to both vehicles.

Mr. McAdams informed police he had not observed the approaching train from the east. Both vehicles were being driven in a northerly direction, when Grotto stopped in order to allow the train to pass. Seeley told police he was about to make a lefthand turn off Catherine Street to proceed north on Murney, when the truck skidded on a section of ice. Damage estimated at $50 resulted to the side of Mr. Stevenson's parked car. The matter was settled amicably, police related.

CUSTOMS RETURNS DECREASE $91,084.81

Again reflecting the decreased liquor sales in the province custom and excise returns at the Belleville customs office showed a considerable decrease during the month of December as compared with the same month during 1942. TWO STORES SUFFER FROM SHOPLIFTERS

The stealing of cigarettes by shoplifters was reported to police by two local business firms in the past 48 hours. The proprietor of Mac's Cigar Store in the Belle Theatre Block reported several packages of fifty cigarettes had been stolen from off the store showcase. Today the manager of Loblaw's Groceteria complained that on several occasions of a late date packages of a small size had been taken by shoplifters while on display at the front of the store. Maybe the smokes are placed too convenient for the light-fingered gentry, suggested police officials today.

Pte. Raymond Hay Dies of Wounds Suffered in Italy

Leaving school to enlist when he was only 16 years old, Private Raymond E. Hay, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Hay, of Campbellford, has died of wounds suffered in Italy, his parents have been informed. A brother, Ernest, was wounded in Italy on December 15, while another brother, Bill, is a prisoner of war at Hong Kong.

Private Raymond Hay was born in Belleville and attended Queen Mary Public School and Belleville Collegiate. He enlisted in the Midland Regiment in March, 1941, and later transferred to the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment which he was with when wounded. He was wounded on December 9, and died the following day his parents were informed. The brother, Ernest, is also with the H. & P. E. Regiment.

Bill Hay enlisted in the Midland Regiment and transferred to the Royal Canadian Rifles and was taken prisoner by the Japanese at Hong Kong when that bastion fell on Christmas day, 1941.

Besides his parents and two brothers in the services, Private Hay is survived by two brothers, Douglas and Roy, Jr., at home, and one sister, Helen, at Hamilton.

A CREDITABLE COURT RECORD

"This is a very creditable record. I cannot find a single case where liquor is involved on today's court docket', remarked His Worship, Magistrate J. L. Lloyd at the conclusion of city police court proceedings today when 13 cases were listed for trial.

"Yes, I might add that for the first time in my knowledge of police court circles in Belleville not a single case of violations of the Liquor Control Act is listed for trial following the New Year's holiday celebration. Actually the question of liquor does not enter into a single case listed in any of the cases today", remarked Deputy Chief Arthur Harman, who is also police court clerk.

Attempts Made To Rob 3 Front St. Properties

Entrance was forced into three Front St. places of business early Tuesday morning, but no robberies resulted, police reported. While on patrol, shortly before five o'clock this morning, Constable Carruthers discovered a rear door leading into Wray's Furniture Store had been forced open and later the same officer discovered a window leading into the plumbing shop at the rear of the Smith Hardware Company had been removed. Later in the day a door at Boyce's garage was found forced open. However, the would-be robbers were foiled in their attempts at robbery in all three places as nothing of value was reported missing. Cash is believed to have been the only loot sought.

Upon discovering the rear basement door at Wray's Furniture Store forced open, P. C. Carruthers immediately entered the basement storehouse where he discovered that fforts to break down the basement door leading to the main floor of the store were without results. The officer discovered burned matches littering the basement steps and later found a pick axe at the bottom of the stairs. The pick axe had been used to try and force open the trap door leading to the main floor, but the lock held secure. The officer notified headquarters and Constable Thomson joined the search.

Subsequent investigations took Carruthers to the rear of nearby Smith's Hardware where he discovered a sash and glass had been removed from a second-storey rear window and entrance gained into the plumbing shop. Here also efforts to force the door leading into the main section of the hardware store, where the cash register is located, had failed when the door leading into the main store held securely and the robbers were again foiled in any attempt to loot the cash register or company safe. The window sash and glass removed was found on the roof of a rear one-storey rear building, from where entrance was gained. "There is little doubt that cash was the sole object of the break-ins, but fortunately the inner door locks held securely despite the fact a heavy pick axe was used at Wray's Furniture Store," commented police officials later in the day.

The third case was reported to police when employees at Boyce's garage, Front St., found a small side door had been forced open. This door led into the work shop, but investigations revealed nothing of value was taken from the garage, police were told. Chief Probert was of the opinion that the discovery made by Carruthers, while patrolling his beat, doubtless avoided a robbery in some place of business in that area where three attempts were made early today.

Fire Damages Tweed Building

Tweed, Jan. 4 — (Special)—Damage estimated at upwards of $1,000 was caused here early Tuesday morning when fire broke out in the living quarters of Mrs. Douglas Morrison's ready-to-wear store necessitating a two hour fight by firemen before the blaze was extinguished. An electric iron which had been left plugged in was believed to have been the cause of the fire.

The fire was discovered at three o'clock in the morning as Peter A. Courneyea, a boarder at the Morrison home, returned to his room. He immediately turned in the fire alarm with firemen confining the blaze to the living quarters in the rear part of the store.

Reserve Resident Saves Girl's Life At Cost of Own

Deseronto — (Special) — A tragic accident occurred recently on the farm of Mr. Oliver Hill, near Shannonville, when Mr. Peter Williams was knocked down by a colt, sustaining a fractured skull and brain concussion, as a result of which he passed away at Mr. Hill's home Thursday of last week. Mr. Williams saw the colt attempting to run into Susan, the thirteen-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hill, and rushed between her and the horse, saving her life at the cost of his own. Mr. Williams' heroic self sacrifice will long be remembered in this locality. He was a Mohawk Indian, and had lived all his life on the Reserve. He was about sixty-five years of age, and leaves no immediate relatives. The funeral was held at All Saints' Church New Year's afternoon, and was largely attended. The Rector chose as his text, "Greater love hath no man than this; that a man lay down his life for his friends." The bearers were: Messrs. John R. Green, Norway Maracle, Stanley Hill, Amos, James and Arthur Brant.

H. Harrison Wins Race for Thurlow Deputy Reeveship by Majority of 9

Five New Members Will Appear in County Council's Next Session

MANY ACCLAMATIONS

As the result of elections held last fall, and as in the case of the southern municipalities on Monday, Jan. 3rd, five new faces will appear at county council when the January session of this august body gets underway on the 18th of the month. New representatives will be on hand from the townships of Tyendinaga, Thurlow, Faraday and Carlow, and from the village of Frankford.

One of the upsets in municipal elections held in the county yesterday was at Frankford where Reeve D'Arcy Ketcheson went down to defeat at the polls at the hands of George Montgomery who won the reeveship by a vote of 224 to 186.

Council members elected at Frankford were Ross Turley, 233; Smith Ousterhout 230; Jack Dafoe 214; and O. E. Farrar. Contestants who failed to make the grade for council were C. D. Powell 171; P. Consaul 140 and H. Slingerland 126. School board members elected were G. W. Dixon 247; R. Moran 239 and Harvey Patrick 218. H. Miller failed to make the board by one vote his count totalling 217.

J. Forestell Elected

In Tyendinaga township Joseph Forestell, last year's deputy reeve, won out over Stewart Dies in the race for the reeveship with a large majority, the count being 609 to 282. Kenneth Vivian will be the new face in county council from Tyendinaga, he becoming deputy reeve through acclamation. Council members elected were Percy Moore 521; Bartley Welsh 497; and Dan Gaffney. Dan Doyle failed to be elected for council his count totalling 310 votes.

With only one office, that of deputy reeve, up for election in Thurlow township it was a close fight in this municipality with Mr. Harry Harrison winning out in the final count against Mr. Seldon Homan by a small majority of only nine votes. The vote was 520 to 511, the total ballots cast representing about 37 percent of the voters' list.

There was no election for the reeve's office as last year's deputy reeve, Mr. George MacDonald stepped up by acclamation to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of Mr. Rascoe Robson. Council was also returned by acclamation.

The vote in the township polls resulted as follows, Mr. Harrison's count in each case being noted first: Point Anne 62, 42; 1st concession 48, 36; 2nd 39 34; Donovan's 66, 23; College Hill 82, 61; Cannifton 30, 39; Corbyville, 35, 91; Foxboro 13, 106; Zion 30, 60; Plainfield, 115, 19.

Stirling Council

Reeve W. C. West was returned to office by acclamation at Stirling with the following being elected for council: Harold Wells 302; E. G. Bailey 263; W. T. Elliott 257 and Gilbert Thompson 225.

Although Archie Harvey, reeve of Carlow township resigned, an election for reeve was not necessary when Mr. Loney was elected by acclamation. The one other change in county council is in Faraday township where Mr. W. Kelusky replaces Mr. I. MacKenzie as reeve.

S. C. Justice Denies Plea to Evict Wife of U. S. Soldier

New York, Jan. 4 — (AP) — In what was reported the first case of its kind in this area, Supreme Court Justice John E. McGeehan denied yesterday a landlord's plea for eviction of a soldier's wife who expected a baby soon.

The landlord sought to dispossess Mrs. Eve Schatzberg from her 1½ room apartment in the Bronx.

Mrs. Schatzberg's husband, Rudolph, is stationed at Fort Meade, Md. Her lease expired Aug. 10, she said, and the landlord refuses to renew it.

After municipal court judge Christopher refused to dispossess Mrs. Schatzberg from her $36-a-month abode, counsel for the landlord asked Justice McGeehan to compel Judge McGrath to take such action.

Counsel for the landlord argued Mrs. Schatzberg was entitled to no special consideration as a soldier's wife since access to the apartment had been sought since last June before her husband was inducted.

Judge McGrath himself came into the Supreme Court Chamber to plead to Justice McGeehan on the woman's behalf.

"Aside from the legal angle," said McGrath, "I appeal to you not to make me dip my pen into the blood of American soldiers and put this soldier's wife and unborn child on the street."

JAPANESE SAY U.S. BOMBERS ATTACKED TAROA ISLAND

New York, Jan. 4. (AP)—A Japanese Domei News agency broadcast said today that 14 U.S. bombers raided Taroa Island in the Marshalls yesterday morning. The broadcast, recorded by U.S. government Monitors, asserted ground batteries had shot down two of the raiding planes and that the Japanese "suffered no losses".

Only 5 Per Cent Drop in '43 Sale Of Car Licences

Despite a recent report that automobile licences for 1944 would go on sale throughout the province around January 10th, this announcement has not been confirmed by the Department of Highways at the local licence bureau, according to Mr. Edgar Vermilyea, local licence issuer. Licences this year will take the form of windshield stickers, motorists being requested to retain 1943 markers on their cars.

An interesting sidelight on the number of automobiles operating in the district despite the strict gasoline and rubber restrictions a drop of only five percent has been noted through the number of licences sold last year as compared with former years. In view of the restrictions and the inescapable fact that tires will wear out, the Department had estimated the reduction in the number of cars in operation last year would be anywhere up to 20 percent.

"I didn't expect a decrease of 20 percent, but I did expect there may be a ten percent drop in the number of licences issued," stated Mr. Vermilyea. "However, with tires gradually wearing out and no new ones available for the majority of motorists I look for a heavy drop this year."

Regardless of when auto licences go on sale, in view of the number of motorists whose gasoline rations are getting low, it is not expected by Mr. Vermilyea that there will be any great rush to procure licences until early in the spring when additional gasoline books are expected to be available.

POLICE COURT

"This young man tried to do his best for his country and I think I will suspend sentence for two months", suggested Magistrate J. L. Lloyd, after 20-year-old Francis Leween of Deseronto, appeared in today's police court charged with unlawfully wearing the King's uniform after he had been discharged from the Canadian Army. Leween told the court he had been honorably discharged from the R.C.A. at Kingston last July. He was apprehended after causing a disturbance in a local restaurant here some time ago. Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan K.C., agreed to the suspended sentence.

John Kikes, restaurant operator at 174 Front Street, appeared charged with charging food prices above those set down by the Wartime Prices and Trade Board and after being convicted was fined $25 and costs.

"It was the increased costs of foodstuffs that forced me to increase certain prices", pleaded the accused man.

"I appreciate your statement, but barbers haven't increased their prices since the war. This court's findings and fine are not to be taken as a precedent, but merely as a warning to others, as the fines and costs in such future cases will be much larger", warned Magistrate Lloyd, after E. E. Follwell, special prosecutor for the W.P.T.B., pointed out this was the first case in this locality where an eating house proprietor had been charged. An additional charge of ten cents had been made on certain sandwiches and hot meats, Mr. LaFrance of the Board testified. Mr. Kikes was ordered to return his prices to those approved by the Board last February.

Herman Griffin, Madoc, was assessed ten dollars and costs after being convicted of a careless driving count while a similar charge against John Birkett, 21 1-2 Turnbull St., Belleville, was enlarged for one week after Crown Attorney Donnan learned a young lady had been injured as the result of being struck by Birkett's motorcar some time ago on McDonald Ave.

At the request of Mr. Follwell, a charge of having an unregistered revolver, preferred against Douglas Johnson, 213 Pinnacle Street, was deferred for one week, while Frank Kikes, Belleville, paid $28 including costs, after being convicted of carrying an unloaded revolver. Both the above were minors over 16 years of age, police said. The guns were harmless, however.

Not a single case of violations of the L.C.A. was presented following the New Year's weekend holiday.

Thomas Rodgers, 10 East Bridge Street, was sentenced to serve ten days in the common jail when in default of the payment of a fine levied by the court. Rodgers was convicted of wearing his Reserve Army uniform without the permission of his Commanding Officer and when not on parade. The accused man was fined $5, but being in default of payment was given the jail term. The case was presented by Sergt. Horace Wright of the Argyll Light Infantry Provost Corps. Magistrate Lloyd warned that future violations of the Reserve Army regulations would see increased fines levied.

Russians Capture Rich Booty From Retreating Nazis

Moscow, Jan. 4 — (AP) — The Soviet Army organ Red Star said today in a front dispatch that Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's 1st Ukrainian Army was capturing rich booty in war material as the badly-beaten Germans west of Olevsk beat a hasty retreat into pre-war Poland.

There was nothing in any battle-front dispatches reaching here to indicate the Nazis were managing to make a stand anywhere.

Field Marshal Erich von Mannstein appeared unable to instill any order into his left-flank troops streaming backward toward Sarny and Kowel, next important objectives facing the Soviets before Lwow, in Poland, along the southern fringes of the Pinsk marshes.

A considerable natural obstacle faces the Russians in the Sluck River 37 miles west of Llevsk. This would be of little permanent value to Von Mannstein, however, for the Russians have already crossed the stream to the south near Novograd Volynski.

The next important objective before the Soviets in this sector is the border town of Korsec.

The Red Star dispatch said that large quantities of big guns, trucks and other war materials were being gathered in by Red Army in the swamps and bogs of the Pinsk marshes which were affording effective protection to the right flank of the Soviet column advancing west of Olevsk.

U. S. Air Forces Continue to Soften Marshall Islands

Washington, Jan. 4 — (AP) — United States Navy Secretary Frank Knox reported today that United States Air forces are "continuing to soften up" the Marshall Islands and are encountering weak opposition in the air.

He referred to continuing raids on enemy bases at Wotje, Kwajalein, Mille, Jaluit and other bases.

"We are putting the enemy on the defensive throughout that region." the Secretary said at a news conference.

In retaliation, the Japanese have made two raids on American positions at Tarawa and one on Makin Island.

"Most of the bombs fell into the water," Knox said.

Throughout the South Pacific area, he added, "Enemy air strength seems to be very weak and in such actions as have taken place the Japanese have been on the defensive."

Knox asserted that the Germans "are imitating the Japanese" in making fantastic claims. He referred specifically to a Berlin broadcast which said that 21 United Nations destroyers had been sunk by U-boats in the last 10 days. On the contrary, he said, the only recent such sinking was that of a destroyer which was torpedoed in the Atlantic Dec. 24.

C.C.F. Says No Collaboration With Labor-Progressives

Regina, Jan. 4—(CP)—Collaboration between the C. C. F. and the Labor-Progressive Party, headed by Tim Buck of Toronto, was impossible because of "fundamental differences" between the parties and would create confusion instead of unity, said the C. C. F. National council last night in a letter addressed to Mr. Buck.

Eire Will Intern Nazi Motor Vessel Crew

London, Jan. 4 (CP)—The government of Eire has decided to intern 162 German naval officers and men picked up by an Irish motor vessel after last week's Bay of Biscay action in which three German destroyers were sunk.

The German Minister to Eire, Eduard Hempel unsuccessfully sought their release and repatriation, contending the seamen must be regarded as "shipwrecked" since they were taken to Eire not of their own accord.

Britain Needs Bigger Airports After War

By SYDNEY GRUSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

London, Jan. 4 (CP)—Britain has suddenly discovered she doesn't possess the huge airports that will be necesary to handle the flood of civil aviation expected after the war.

The paradox is great since Britain probably has more military airports to the 100 miles than any other country.

The trouble is that the military airports have been built to handle the biggest bombers, up to 50 tons. The post-war airliner is seen as a 100 or 200-ton plane. Croydon, main pre-war airport, also is too small and too restricted by surrounding features for enlargement.

Britain, civil aviation authorities say, would be lacking not only in sizeable airports if the European war were to end suddenly but as matters stand now, she would be lacking also in the preliminary measures necessary to build the fields close enough to London, expected to be the fulcrum of the Britain's post-war international air travel.

The whole question of post-war aviation is under study by Lord Beaverbrook and presumably his committee is investigating the problem of airports.

Picton and District

Sgt. Chas. A. Read Killed in Action

C.Q.M.S. James Fair Also of Picton Wounded in the Italian Campaign

Picton, Jan. 4 — Sgt. Charles A. Read, who distinguished himself in action as a member of Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment medical office in Sicily, and later in Italy, has been killed in action, according to official word received by his wife who resides at Northport.

C.Q.M.S. James Frair, Picton, has been wounded in action, according to official word received by his wife.

Sgt. Read enlisted at Picton in 1939, going overseas the same year. He was with the medical office and was mentioned in several despatches from Major Wemp for the part he had played in giving aid to the wounded. Two outstanding feats were credited to Sgt. Read in Sicily, where his unit distinguished itself. At Assora, where the Hasty P's had scaled the heights and taken the enemy by surprise, Sgt. Read had cared for the wounded, which were evacuated as the regiment retired. It was then discovered that three wounded had been left in a Sicilian cottage with a stretcher bearer as the only guard. With a party of 16 men, Sgt. Read returned 11 miles, climbed the Assoro mountain again, and they brought back the three men, all stretcher cases, back to a commandeered truck, and got them to surgical aid within an hour.

Saved Numerous Lives

Another feat of Sgt. Read was at Grammichelle when the H.P.E.R. lorry convoy got pinned down and seriously shelled. There were 35 wounded and the entire lot, complete with wounds dressed, were back at the advanced dressing station in 40 minutes. Acts such as these, in which Sgt. Read played a leading part were credited with saving numerous lives.

Sgt. Read is survived by his wife and three children.

The War Today— Fate of Hitler and Punishment Of Other Nazi War Criminals

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

The happiest thought I can bring you today is that this probably is the beginning of Hitler's last year of life — or anyway of liberty.

It's like this: If Gen. Eisenhower is correct in his prediction that the war will end in 1944 — and there's widespread agreement among the experts with this forecast—then Hitler's fate is likely to be sealed in one of three ways. The Fuehrer will (1) commit suicide in the despair of defeat, (2) be eliminated by his own followers, or (3) fall into the hands of the Allies who will execute him, unless they inflict the more terrible punishment of life imprisonment.

That's where Hitler is headed, but how about other war criminals? This problem has been simmering, and getting hotter, until now the question has arisen of whether the accused should be dealt with summarily as they are made prisoners, or whether their trials should be postponed until after the war.

Recent Executions at Kharkov

Our Soviet allies recently convicted three German soldiers and a Russian traitor for atrocities. The quartet was executed in the market place of Kharkov. Now the Soviet trade journal "war and the Working class" has reproved some foreign criticism of the procedure.

Among others, the Yorkshire Post, of Britain, is chided for suggesting that prosecutions of war-guilt be put off until after the war. The Soviet Journal also criticized the Manchester Guardian for saying Russians were acting in their own way in their handling of the trials.

It strikes me there's no occasion for any conflict of view among the Allies over this question.

Russians Direct Actionists

The Russians are direct actionists — one of the admirable qualities which are winning this war. If they want to punish war-guilt as they go along, that would seem to be their business. The quarrel, if any, over such punishment is between them and the Germans.

All other aspects aside, it's possible a few executions such as were carried out at Kharkov might lessen the Nazi terrorism against Soviet citizens, or the hangings might cause reprisals. In any event, that's for Moscow to decide.

Pickets Draw Tighter Cordon Around Hall

Montreal, Jan. 4 — (CP) — The 2,000 white collar municipal employees on strike for the past two weeks put in force this morning their threatened "total strike" when reinforced pickets drew a tighter cordon around the city hall and other city buildings.

Gerard Picard, general secretary of the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labor parent body of the Civic Employees National Syndicate, told The Canadian Press that "the strikers' determination to obtain what they consider adequate compensation for their work remains adamant." He added:—

"From this morning on pickets have been reinforced at the city hall and at all other municipal buildings. The lists of those that had been allowed to enter during the past two weeks have been revised and from now on only the top-ranking officials whose presence in their offices strikers deem indispensable will be permitted to walk thru the tighter cordon we have drawn around city departments."

Petition Demands Imprisonment Of Sir O. Mosley

Shipton - Under - Wychwood, Oxfordshire, Jan. 4. (AP)—A petition demanding removal of Sir Oswald Mosley, former head of British Fascists, and his return to prison has been signed by 120 residents of this Cotswold village with a pre-war population of 639.

"We don't want him here", said the petition, addressed to Prime Minister Churchill and Home Secretary Herbert Morrision. Similar petitions are being circulated in neighboring towns.

The angry villagers said they resented the fact that the Mosleys are living in comparative luxury, not even required to serve as fire watchers or air raid wardens, while their own husbands, sons and sweethearts are fighting on the battlefronts against Fascism.

Mosley and his family were released from Holloway Prison Nov. 20, after spending two years in jail, and have been living at the village inn here.

News Notes From Troops in Italy

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP War Correspondent.)

With the Canadians in Italy, Jan. 4. (CP)—Puttee patter:

One of the first Africa Stars seen among Canadian troops in Italy is that worn by Maj. C. W. Gilchrist of Saint John, N.B., first officer commanding a Canadian public relations detachment in Italy. . . . Among officers returning to England for courses after active and important service in this theatre are Majors Don Banton, Toronto, Alan Embury, Calgary, Rowan Coleman, Montreal, and Edgar Doiron, Matapedia, Que. Maj. Doiron left a few days after sharing in a patrol action in which three Germans were killed. . . .

On the lighter side: bushy mustaches such as are rarely seen among Canadians in England are common here, with Capt. J. E. (Robby) Robinson of Saskatoon, sporting one of the finest. . . There was rejoicing in the P. R. unit when a long overdue shipment of parcels arrived from Canada. Capt. Jack Braden of Saskatoon, received one mailed last May, while Lieut. Gordon Hutton of Calgary, unwrapped another evidently intended to reach him during the Sicilian campaign. It contained fly stickers and mosquito ointment.

U.S. Jungle Fighters Are Calling Officers By Their First Names

Washington, Jan. 4 — (AP) —The United States War Department said today jungle fighters have taken to calling their officers by their first names.

Accounts reaching the department from men and officers on Bougainville Island in the Solomons indicate formalities of military-life have completely disappeared in jungle warfare.

A private may address his commanding officer as Charlie or Bob. Officers get code names or nicknames. Japanese snipers are adept at picking off the officers. So the officer wears no insignia.

The enemy listens carefully, said the men. Snipers a few hundred yards from a regimental supply dump listened to the calls going out from a field telephone. Most of the calls were for "Hipp," which was the name given to a major who was a supply officer.

During the night, the men said, the Japs would call out, "Hipp, you're wanted on the telephone."

British Air Strategy

Development of British air strategy from the opening of the war to today has been one of the great romances of the struggle. How the mighty production of planes and bombs and the great output of personnel of the R.A.F. have been put to most effective use and success in the bombing of the German arms industry in the great cities of Germany is an achievement of the greatest importance. There has been built up the greatest air force in history causing damage and destruction to the enemy which is having a very vital part in crumbling the war industrial machine of Germany.

British-invented air strategy from September 3rd., 1939, has been to destroy the German arms industry and to weaken Germany for the ultimate land assault to come. This strategy has compelled Germany to mount huge ground defences which included three million men in the Ruhr alone, three thousand anti-aircraft guns and five hundred searchlights. As a result the ground defences took a rising toll in the first two years, endangering the strategy and therefore to fulfil the strategy, the R.A.F. had to solve the tactical problem of mounting heavy attacks with maximum accuracy and speed.

The problem of accuracy was solved with the R.A.F. attack on Luebeck on March 28, 1942, when the forerunner of the present Pathfinder Force marked their targets with incendiaries thirty minutes before the main blow—today the Pathfinders use color flares (changed daily) a few seconds before the main assault.

The speed problem was solved on May 30th., 1942, when the R.A.F. dropped one thousand five hundred tons on Cologne in 90 minutes, that is seventeen and a half tons per minute, as compared with the twenty tons dropped on Silt, March 19th., 1940, in over two hours. The raids' efficiency rose sharp through 1943. On Dusseldorf on June 11th., 1943, 2,200 tons were rained, or 44 tons per minute. Hamburg on July 27th., 1943, was pounded by 2,350 tons in 45 minutes (52 tons per minute). At Kassel on October 22nd., 1943, bombs were dropped in 27 minutes to the extent of 1,500 tons or 55.5 tons per minute and now at Berlin in 25 minutes 1,500 tons have been delivered at the rate of 60 tons per minute.

These new tactics are so successful that comparing the first five months of 1942 and 1943, the R.A.F. losses have dropped 1.1 per cent while the number of sorties rose 66 per cent and bomb tonnage over 100 per cent.

The resulting inability of the enemy AA guns to concentrate their fire has not only brought about the reduction of British losses and the overwhelming of the German ground defences but it also has exposed the German factories to complete destruction.

As a result of this the Germans were compelled to revolutionize their defences by concentrating up to 75 per cent of the Luftwaffe fighters in the West, mingling single-engined and double-engined day and night Nazi fighters in a last desperate effort to halt the R.A.F. with flare avenues, the "rocket guns" and so forth. Britain retaliated at first with new strategems, for instance, there was a twin assault on Berlin and Stuttgart to split the Luftwaffe and then a dummy attack on Berlin while the main force hit Leipzig.

Hence the Royal Air Force losses in November, 1943, touched a new low (as proportion of four thousand and five hundred bomber sorties made.)

The importance of the latest attacks upon Berlin is proof that Germany's last chance of stopping the R.A.F. failed in direct battle.

Direct tactical discoveries have thus ensured the connsummation of British air strategy with catastrophic effect upon Germany.

Council Inauguration

Mayor Rollins and the new city council have taken their seats and begun business for the ensuing twelve months. The civic body has gone into office after a spirited election in which after a campaign to get out more voters about one third more citizens exercised their franchise. This is an inspiration to the men of the council to know that they have a larger share of the public backing them than usual in recent years. With the confidence of the people with them the council should be able to do very effective work during this year.

Mayor Rollins in his address at inauguration on Monday, advised against unessential capital outlay in wartime. On the other hand, he pointed out, Belleville is advancing in importance and is "now a live and expanding city where every kind of business finds a congenial home, where comfort and culture are the possible attainments of every household, where orderly progress seems to be the objective of public organizations and the aim of private enterprise. You may take it for granted that the City Council for the year 1944 will do all in its power to encourage and foster that new spirit of advancement which means so much to the future of Belleville."

He asked the people to co-operate. "Cities do not just happen. They are built by co-operation," he said. "That helpful co-operation and leadership the council for 1944 is prepared to give."

Mayor Rollins promised sanely-progressive administration for the year. "We shall consider the wise and safe policy of pay-as-you-go," and the council will do nothing to impair the city's good name and credit.

The mayor touched on the problems of post-war days and of the city's preparation for that period by the organization of a post-war-planning commission under the council's authority. He pointed out success of the city's plan of securing new factories which guarantee continuity of employment and whose sustaining power guarantees employment and income. Mayor Rollins expressed the opinion that he would like to see the council go on record as requesting the Federal Government to retain in the armed services all those on active military duty until they can properly be reestablished in civilian life.

Mayor Rollins' address also reflects the hopes that are associated with this year 1944 as a year of great promise, particularly as looking to the defeat of Germany and to the beginning of the dawn of another day of peace and security.

Effect of Russian Successes

Russian guns have boomed salutes for many a victory during the past year, victories which have helped much in the war against Germany and never were sounds of salutes so inspiring in the ears of the Russians. Now Russian troops are already in Poland.

Militarily the arrival at Poland's borders as they existed at the beginning of the war of Germany against Russia is an event of the greatest importance and from the standpoint of morale of the troops and of the home front it delivers one of the worst blows that Germany has ever had to face.

The effect upon the underground forces at work in Poland, resisting the German occupation will be enormous for they will see the day of their liberation at hand. The other Nazi-dominated states will be keen with expectation of freedom so near.

The effect upon Russian morale by the great Russian drive into Poland must be of the greatest effect. It means that the Russians have liberated the great share of their territory from the grip and occupation of the Hitlerite Huns and that the Reds are beginning to see something of the full fruition of their devoted service to their native land.

The talkative listen to no one, for they are ever speaking.—And the first evil that attends those who know not how to be silent, is, that they hear nothing.—Plutarch.

TARAWA

Along Tarawa's beach they lie
The bravest of our line
Who forward went and chose to die
Than freedom's cause resign.
From crypt and crag the hidden foe
A furious gunfire sent,
But still those lads we used to know
To victory onward went.

There was no stone but spouted flame,
There was no tropic tree
But from it death and anguish came
From marksmen none could see.
Charge after charge those youngsters stood
Till few were left to stay,
The boys of many a neighborhood
We've often watched at play.

Did heroes grace Thermopylae?
And where the Tiber runs
Are living still in memory
Rome's three heroic sons?
Then give to memory tender,
To song and gifted speech,
The glory and the splendor
That took Tarawa beach.

To the schoolchildren a caning now and then was just another cross to bear. They had so much to try their bodies and spirits! Long tramps morning and afternoon to the log schoolhouse, sometimes five miles or more each way. The dangers of the forest to face, in particular the ever-present threat of the wolf pack. The discomfort of the school benches—planks supported by home-made wooden legs and set so high that small scholars feet dangled in mid-air. The difficulty of obtaining books. The eyestrain from studying in insufficiently lit rooms in the daytime and by the light of a flickering fire-place in the evening . . . When there was a freeze-up, pupils had to thaw out their ink on the school-house stove before they could begin their lessons. Many a young camp left the cork in an ink bottle o' purpose, knowing full well that the heat would cause the cork to shoot ceiling-wards with a satisfying bang! . . . Often the school-house served as church the minister delivering his sermon from a pulpit in one corner.

Some of Canada's most famous leaders gained their early education in school-houses almost as primitive as this. Young Wilfred Laurier began his studies in the parochial school of St. Lin, near Montreal. In 1852-54 he attended a school in the village of New Glasgow, living with a family named Murray and clerking in the Murray store in return for his food and lodging. The boy's imagination was fired by the teachings of one "Sandy" Maclean and he was a brilliant, attentive student. He became imbued with a spirit of tolerance and showed a breadth of vision unusual in a lad of his age. These were qualities that made him great when he was premier of Canada. During his last appearance in London the Liberal chieftain spoke these words, which breathe moderation, kindness and an undefinable grace of soul: " . . . I shall remind you that many problems rise before you: problems of race division, problems of creed differences, problems of economic conflict, problems of national duty and national aspirations. Let me tell you that for the solution of these problems you have a safe guide, an unfailing light, if you remember that faith is better than doubt and love is better than hate . . . Banish doubt and hate from your life. Let your souls be ever open to the strong promptings of faith and the gentle influence of brotherly love. Be adamant against the haughty; be gentle and kind to the weak. Let your man and your purpose, in good report and in ill, in victory or in defeat, be so to live, so to strive, so to serve as to do your part to raise the standard of life to higher and better spheres."

Where the curling smoke of wigwams rose lazily into the skies the Indians talked proudly about their cornfields, and the importance of blessing them to keep them from harm. The white man, too, uttered a prayer for the harvest of his settler's domain, since on it he depended for livelihood. Interesting to red man and "pale face" alike would have been this story of Hiawatha, told so musically by Longfellow: "Once, when all the maize was planted, Hiawatha, wise and thoughtful, Spake and said to Minnehaha. To his wife, the Laughing Water: "You shall bless to-night the cornfields. Draw a magic circle round them. To protect them from destruction. Blast of mildew, blight of insect, Wagemin, the thief of cornfields. Paimosaid, who steals the maize-ear!" . . . "In the night, when all is silence. In the night, when all is darkness. When the Spirit of Sleep, Nepahwin, Shuts the doors of all the wigwams. So that not an ear can hear you. So that not an eye can see you, Rise up from your bed in silence, Lay aside your garments wholly, Walk around the fields you planted, Round the borders of the cornfields, Covered by your tresses only, Robed with darkness as a garment." . . . The magic circle worked and a wonderful crop was harvested from the consecrated fields.

"What a queer contraption" we would all probably exclaim at sight of the old-time reapers. The first self-raking machines, imported into Upper Canada around 1843, were however, anything but odd-looking to the 19th century farmers, who praised them to the skies for cutting 12 acres in a day. Horses driven tandem—that is, harnessed singly one before the other—dragged the reaper about the field. The sheaves were thrown off by a man standing on the platform of the machine.

* * *

As for the threshing, the very thought of it made one feel tired—until perfected threshing machines put in an appearance in 1840 or thereabouts. Once a farmer had attended to his own grain he would lend his thesher to a neighbour. If he was one who didn't do favours "free", he would likely ask for very 15th bushel of the crop. This was considered a good working arrangement . . . The first really successful threshing machine was invented by a Scotsman called Meikle in 1786. The grain was thrown onto an inclined board, from whence it was fed between rollers to a bladed cylinder that beat it. After a second beating by a cylinder, the loosened grain fell into a receptacle. The straw was then loosened and shaken to make the remaining grain descend, and was then carried out of the machine.

Treatment of a Patient Who Has Had a Heart Attack.

When you learn that someone known to you has had a heart attack and is not expected to recover, and of another who is confined to bed for six weeks or more, and then think of other cases in the past few years who were put to bed for a few days only yet are still alive, you wonder why heart attacks are treated so differently.

The fact of the matter is that there can be degrees of seriousness in heart attacks as there can be in other ailments. An acute appendix may clear up without surgery, another undergoes operation and patient leaves hospital within a week and another case may require weeks in hospital following operation. Similarly with tuberculosis; a few months rest in some cases, a year or two in others, and various operations in other cases.

Today, "every" case of heart attack—coronary occlusion or coronary sclerosis—is put in bed for not less than four to six weeks.

In the Bulletin of the New York Academy of Medicine, Dr. Robert L. Levy states that the "uncertain" period following a heart attack is during the first two weeks for it is then that serious and unforeseen upsets are most likely to occur. When the third week is past without mishap members of the patient's family may breathe more deeply and sleep more soundly, since the outlook for recovery is favorable.

Dr. Levy puts the cases into four groups.

Group 1.—Critical with shock. Outcome always in doubt. Heart is permanently crippled and death from a heart attack may occur at any time.

Group 2.—Severe with shock. Patient gravely ill for several weeks. Convalescence prolonged but some recovery of heart strength. Usually last for about five years.

Group 3.— Moderate without shock. Signs are favorable before the end of the second week. Heart recovery good and "there is frequently a long period of survival".

Group 4.—Mild often not really recognized by patient or even physician. Some of these patients never take any bed rest as the discomfort is slight and not prolonged. Recovery of heart strength is practically complete but severe exercise or overeating or both may cause death.

Rest in bed. The usual method is to keep the patient (all four groups) in bed for 6 weeks, although in moderate cases the bed rest may be shortened to 4 weeks and in critical or severe cases it may be lengthened to 8 to 12 weeks.

British Sub Performs Outstanding Feat

A North Britain Port, Jan. 4.—(CP)—Officers of the British submarine Unrivalled, arriving at their home port for the first time in a year, told how the undersea craft rounded up eight Italian merchant ships after the Italian armistice, sank a $72,000 enemy payroll and rescued two surprised Australian airmen.

When hostilities with Italy ceased the Unrivalled was on patrol off Bari, and the Commander, Lieut. H. B. Turner, decided to make contact with the Italian authorities in that port and demand that all available shipping sail for Allied harbors.

"We stalked and boarded a trawler", said Turner, "and I put one of my officers on board to take a message to the senior naval officer in Bari. Hostages from the trawler were retained, as we were taking no risks at that early stage of the armistice.

"An Italian admiral came on board the submarine. A convoy conferrence was arranged, but it never was held, as the possibility of a German attack forced me to leave the harbor. A motley collection of merchant shipping quickly assembled, however, and so the passage to Malta commenced. Four days later, the Unrivalled arrived in Malta with eight ships in her charge".

Surprise Aussies.

Earlier the submarine added a chapter to the annals of lost treasure by sinking a merchant ship carrying pay to an enemy minesweeping flotilla.

On another patrol the Unrivalled gave two Australian airmen a welcome surprise. The fliers had shot down two German aircraft over the Aegean and had then been shot down in turn by the guns of an enemy escort vessel. The submarine surfaced alongside their rubber dinghy and rescued them.

Cross, became the bride of Richard Norman, only son of Mr. and Mrs. Harold N. Hall of Burrs. The rooms were beautifully decorated with pink and white streamers, the ceremony taking place beneath an arch of evergreens and roses, with Rev. Lorne Burr officiating.

The wedding music was played by the bride's sister, Mrs. Lorne Young. During the signing of the register, Mrs. Lorne Burr sang very sweetly "I Love You Truly."

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was lovely in a floor-length gown of shell pink satin fashioned with full skirt of tulle, appliqued with lovers' knots of satin and a matching shoulder-length veil of tulle. Her bouquet was of Briarcliffe roses and forget-me-nots.

Miss Elsie Hall, sister of the groom, as bridesmaid, wore a pretty floor-length dress of powder blue silk jersey with full skirt of tulle. She carried a bouquet of Sunbeam roses.

Biography and Epitaph of John Doe, Aged Three Weeks

A little while ago this column printed the story of an unwanted baby, born in secret, and put in an infant nursery in an adjacent city.

There he remained for three weeks. His keep was paid for from unknown sources, but no one called or phoned to ask how the baby was getting on. One morning a nurse making her rounds found that he had died some time during the night—died as quietly as he had lived, without even crying.

The coroner was called in and pronounced his death the result of natural causes. As secretly as everything else in his brief life was carried out, his burial was paid for. No one came to see him put away. My story gave the grim facts; there was no "tear-jerking," a form of exhibitionism I abhor.

The straight story brought a great many letters. It seems there have been a multitude of babies having a similar history.

Extracts from a couple of letters follow: "Like this girl, I brought into the world an unwanted baby. But why hadn't I the vision to realize the lifelong regret that would follow by neglect of him? My only thought was of myself, of getting back to my work so that no one would know. I put the baby in a nursery and he died.

"At first I was relieved. But there has never been a day in my life since that I haven't thought about him. The splendid man I've since married and who knew about this part of my life and understood, would have gladly adopted him. I've had three children by this marriage, but I think daily of the baby I deserted".

Another letter reads: "Only a girl who has had the experience of mother could know and feel as I do The death of the little waif of whom you wrote may have been a relief to the girl's family, but I can't imagine a young mother rejoicing over the death of her baby in any circumstances.

"My little son is now more than a year old. I was able to follow his progress for some months. After careful consideration of what I could give him and what he would require in life, I released him to a social agency for adoption. Think of the courage it would take for my son to grow up beside an unwed mother. There are times when I wish the thing we call civilization in this world did not exist. Who, then, would deny me the right to keep my baby?"

The Marry-Go-Round

Take It From Eve

One determined little matchmaker, filled with self-righteous zeal, can leave more wreckage in her wake than a bombing squad.

In these days, every up-to-date bridegroom should have his own hope chest, containing thread, thimble, lots of bachelors' buttons and an apron to wear when drying the dishes or helping cook the dinner. Especially, if his bride has a war-job.

"Technique" is a man's ability to make each new girl feel that his heart was a vacuum and his life a total blank before he met her. In a woman, it is the fine art of knowing how to lean on a man, without making him feel tired—and to hold him without making him feel "tied."

The big mistake that a girl always makes is to give a man a piece of her mind, and then feel so sorry for him that she begins trying to "win him back," before his vanity has thawed out.

In times like these, when such momentous things are happening, little things like matrimonial problems and love-troubles seem as trivial as a chorus girl's breakfast, and even a gory gangster play merely makes us yawn.

There are moments when every girl wishes that the man dining opposite her could love her as tenderly, frankly and spontaneously as he loves a good sirloin steak. But she forgets that the steak is not trying to marry him.

A playboy does not regard himself as a philanderer, but as a philanthropist, when he can help a lot of girls to hold onto their vanity without letting go of his freedom—just by making love to them.

A man's heart is always awakened by love or romance; but the feat is to get him to the altar before it turns over and goes back to sleep again.

Jolliffe Declares No 'Bid For Power' Made by C.C.F.

Winnipeg, Jan. 4 (CP)—E. B. Jolliffe, Ontario C.C.F. leader, commenting here last night on the Toronto New Year's day elections in which the C.C.F. failed to elect a representative in the city's municipal government, said any suggestion that the C.C.F. had made a bid for power in Toronto was "nonsense." He added: "It was rather a bid for power on the part of the Tories, who ran candidates as non-partisans." He said there was a possibility of an Ontario election in the near future.

Assault Is Fatal To Book Binder

Toronto, Jan. 4. (CP) — Jacob Bresner, 55, died in hospital here last night of a fractured skull police believe resulted from an assault Sunday night in his book bindery store in downtown Toronto.

Bresner was found by his wife, Fanny, Sunday night, unconscious in a pool of blood in his store. Investigation showed he had been struck with a blunt instrument on the head and robbed of a considerable sum of money carried in his wallet.

Chief Constable Draper of Toronto, has announced that a substantial reward will be paid for information leading to the conviction of the person or persons responsible for Bresner's death, but late last night the police had no information that would set them on the trail of the slayers.

SHE DIDN'T WANT ROOM ON 16TH FLOOR JAIL SECTION

Miami, Fla., Jan. 4. (AP)—P. J. Campbell, information clerk in the lobby of the County Courthouse Building, explained to an elderly woman that the structure was not a hotel, and there were no rooms with bath for rent. She accused him of spoofing her and demanded to see the manager. Campbell shook his head sadly and told her she might get a room on the 16th floor. She departed—upward. But the woman lost interest on the 16th floor. That's the city jail.

Write Your Christmas Thank-You Notes

How to greet the New Year with a cheer . . . write all your Christmas thank-you notes now! It's a grand and glorious feeling for you, for your present-giving friends.

There are two kinds of people. Those who endear themselves to givers-of-gifts by writing prompt and high-hearted notes of appreciation and, alas, those non-endearing procrastinators who either put off writing their thank-you notes so long that their words of thanks are caught in a blackout of delay excuses, or who, with a maddening casualness, lazily wait to thank for gifts until they chance to meet the givers.

Even two sentences of thanks written now are far, far more welcome to the giver than four pages of flimsy excuses written weeks from now. Keep this thought high in your heart and set a time-limit when all your Christmas thank-you letters "simply must" be written.

It's fun to write a prompt thank-you note, because fresh and bright in your heart, is the giver's kindness to you and your joy in receiving the gift. It's a grim chore to write a long-delayed thank-you note, for then your words of thanks have to waddle along after your lame-duck excuse, "I have been meaning for weeks to write to thank you for your Christmas present, but I have been so busy." (The giver's reaction: "Too busy to be courteous, eh?") Not a bright prospect for your popularity with your friend.

So let's get pens going now. Dip them in hearty words of appreciation to your friends. Have a "you-and-me" chat with them on paper, about their generous thought of you, about their gift, about special features of their gift. If you're the kind of person who talks with gusto, write your notes with gusto, the more enthusiastic your words, the more your friends will love them. If you're naturally somewhat conservative, your notes will probably be somewhat restrained but remember that words of thanks aren't rationed.

I like best a thank-you note that begins with a bow of appreciation to the thought behind the gift. So many notes begin somewhat like this, "Thank you so much for the lovely evening bag you sent me for Christmas," or "I love the beautiful handkerchiefs you gave me." This isn't really incorrect, of course, but I'm sure you agree that it puts the emphasis too quickly on the thing, not on the spirit of the giving. But such a simple beginning as "How good you were to plan such happiness for my Christmas" takes the emphasis away from "value received." This is doing what a thank-you letter should do, writing from the point of view of the giver, first the thought, then the gift. Those opening words of thanking for the thought gives the letter a charming and warm-hearted send-off.

Don't use correspondence cards or other skimpy cards that give the impression that you're limiting your words of thanks to fit the scant space. And please don't stoop to sending ready-made cards of thanks, avoid them as you would a plague, for that's just what they are. Don't cheat your friends by sending them the printer's words of thanks for their gifts.

Mention the gift by name, don't vaguely thank for "your gift;" put it in front of you as you write and polish up your most appreciative words to write delightedly about not only how "lovely" it is, but about its special features as well, satisfying words to make your friend happy and proud that he or she chose just that gift.

MRS. TODD SAYS MUSTARD WILL HELP Fight Colds..
"I've raised seven children, and if I had to raise seven more I would use mustard poultices or mustard baths for treating colds," declared Mrs. Wm. M. Todd, Fredericton, New Brunswick. "Not only have I found mustard to be helpful in stopping colds before they settle and do real damage, but my mother had the same experience in discovering its usefulness. My sisters took heavy colds in the epidemic of 1918 and she nursed them through, and several friends as well. As soon as one of us took sick with a cold, mother called the doctor, put the sick one to bed with mustard plasters on the chest, and kept putting on fresh ones until the congestion was relieved and the breathing was free. I have had similar experience with my own family."
Makes Mustard Plaster Fairly Strong
"I mix three tablespoons of flour with two tablespoons of mustard and add enough cold water to make a smooth paste. That makes a fairly strong plaster, but I leave it on only about ten minutes—long enough to do the work—and then I put a little oil on the chest. If that is repeated every three or four hours, it will help relieve the breathing."
Break That Cold!
From early Fall until late Spring no one should take a chance with colds. An excellent way to help counteract them is to take a good hot mustard bath before going to bed at night. Then, if the cold has not been broken up, stay in bed a few days and use mustard poultices to help keep the tubes open and the breathing clear. Always call in a doctor to treat a serious illness.
The strongest proof that mustard is reliable in treating many ailments is the fact that thousands, like Mrs. Todd, use it year after year. Let mustard help to relieve you when you have chills or colds, or when you feel depressed by grippe or some other Winter infection. Use it to help relieve pains of neuralgia, rheumatism, arthritis, neuritis, overtired muscles or other ailments which commonly affect you.
Be sure that you use famous Keen's Mustard, made entirely from pure mustard seed of highest quality and packed in convenient tins to ensure its uniform quality and full, medicinal strength. Sold by grocers and druggists everywhere.

BIGGEST PROBLEM FOR BASEBALL IS MANPOWER

President of American Loop Thinks This Challenge Can be Met

190 IN ARMED FORCES

By WILLIAM HARRIDGE
(President of American Baseball League)

Chicago, Jan. 4 — (AP) — Baseball's biggest problem, as the game approaches the 1944 season, is one of manpower — and I am confident the sport will meet this problem as successfully as it has met many others which developed in baseball's first two wartime seasons.

We know that scores of players, many of them stars, will join the armed forces between now and opening day next April. But our league owners are confident that, despite these anticipated departures, their clubs will be able to field teams and again do a good job of providing entertainment and relaxation.

The American League now has approximately 190 of its players in the armed forces — and they are part of a legion which is baseball's biggest booster. During the 1942 and 1943 seasons, baseball went to our fighting men all over the world via radio and the American League motion pictures.

Only recently the newest American League movie — "The World Series of 1943" — has gone to our boys in every theatre of war.

Some 600,000 of those servicemen watched our teams in 1943 as guests of our eight American League clubs. The past season saw almost 4,000,000 other fans attend American League games — a total only slightly under a banner 1942 season attendance.

That world series raised more than $308,000 for war charities, to which can be added other thousands of dollars raised during a regular season war relief program which will be repeated — in some manner —next summer.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.
Associated Press Sport Writer

New York, Jan. 4 — (AP) — The subject hasn't been fully explored yet, but it's possible that baseball's post-war expansion program will help solve the most serious problem that will come up when the "planning" committee meets some time within the next couple of weeks...that is what to do with athletes returning from the war... already a dozen or more have been discharged and they'll be coming back with a rush once the fighting stops ... many of them won't be able to play big-league ball again, but if baseball does a lot of promoting in minor leagues, semi-pro, college and school territory there ought to be jobs for everybody.

Safety in Numbers

Lowpoint high school in Illinois managed to play baseball last fall even though there are only eight boys in school ... the boys wanted to play in their league and M. B. Neece, school principal and coach, was willing, so they just revised the rules to fit the conditions and went ahead to win five of eight games.

Panama fight promoters, who have Chalky Wright down there now, have offered Lou-Salica $3,500 for two bouts in February. But Salica already is booked for a featherweight title scrap with Manuel Ortiz in Forth Worth, Tex.

Bennie Owen, intramural sports director, and former football coach at Oklahoma U., saved up his A card gas this fall for one good hunting trip ... after that careful preparation, he reached the scene of the hunt and found he had left his gun at home.

Canadiens hold down fifth and sixth places, with Elmer Lach moving up to 36 points, one ahead of Buddy O'Connor.

Cain continued to set the pace in goals, with 2, five more than Cowley and Mud Bruneteau of Detroit, and six more than Gerry Heffernan of Canadiens. Cowley remains atop the assist column with 31, compared with 27 for O'Connor and 26 for Lach.

Murph Chamberlain and Mike McMahon continued to make the penalty race an all-Canadien affair. Each added two minors to their totals during the week to remain tied at 44 minutes each.

SECOND NETWORK INAUGURATED

Ottawa, Jan. 3 —(CP)— The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's second Dominion-wide network was inaugurated on schedule New Year's day and "everything went off without a hitch," a CBC spokesman said today.

The new network—the "Dominion"—was set up to provide a greater variety of programs to Canadian listeners. It includes 24 independent stations and one CBC station and covers territory from Sherbrooke, Que., to Victoria. It carries programs different from those on the original or "National" network, which now includes 28 private and six CBC stations across the country and is called the "Trans-Canada" network.

TORONTO R.C.A.F. BEATS ST. KITTS

(By The Canadian Press)

In their last appearance in organized hockey this season, unless Air Force headquarters rescinds the order to withdraw all R.C.A.F. teams from Allan Cup and Memorial Cup competition on Thursday, Toronto Fliers wound up their senior O.H.A. campaign by defeating St. Catharines Saints 4-3 at Toronto last night.

After a strong start in which Peanuts O'Flaherty and Murray Henderson netted the puck to give them a 2-0 first period lead, the Airmen found themselves squared at the second recess 2-2 when Paul Mundrick and Stew Mason beat Johnnie Mowers in the second period to tie it up. Saints grabbed the lead at 7.36 of the third period on Blink Bellinger's counter but Red Heron came through with an Air Force counter to sew up the argument once more. Three minutes later Norm Tustin sank the winning shot.

Canadiens Meet Leafs in Montreal

(By The Canadian Press)

The skyrocketing pace which has brought Montreal Canadiens 17 victories and three ties in 22 starts robs the National Hockey League race of its usual tenseness, but there'll be plenty of incentive tonight when the league leaders oppose Toronto Maple Leafs at Montreal Forum.

The fact that the next-best Leafs trail Canadiens by 11 points makes little difference. Montreal fans treasure a victory over Leafs regardless of the standings and vice versa. After several lean seasons, Canadiens are starting to exact payment for previous rough treatment from Toronto.

Although they lost 4-2 in their last visit to Toronto, Canadiens hold an edge on the season on the basis of a 7-2 victory in the first game at the Gardens and 5-2 triumph in the only previous contest in Montreal.

The only other N.H.L. game scheduled Tuesday sends Chicago Black Hawks to Boston, whose Bruins are tied for second place with Leafs six points clear of the Hawks. In four previous meetings of the clubs, Chicago won three and Boston one.

Flt.-Lt. John Scholes Killed in Operations, Buried in England

Toronto, Jan. 3 —(CP)— Flt.-Lt. John Scholes, 33, son of the late Lou Scholes, renowned Canadian oarsman, and Mrs. Scholes of Toronto was killed last Wednesday in air operations and buried New Year's day in England, his mother was informed today.

Pilot of a Wellington bomber with the R.A.F., he was badly injured on his 23rd operational trip when forced to jump from the crippled aircraft at 500 feet. After convalescing in Canada he returned overseas and had been flying Mosquito fighter-bombers.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By CHARLIE EDWARDS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Jan. 4—(CP)— Leadership at the opportune moment has saved sport for Canadian youth times without number. Doug Scurr of the Chatham News recalls now leadership of three men saved the hockey rink for the Ontario town of Dutton a few years ago.

Dutton, 20 miles west of St. Thomas, has a population of 800 and a natural ice rink housed in a frame building with seats and standing room for 600. The rink is owned by the community and all residents have an interest in operation of the rink and the town's hockey team. Here's the story.

Several years ago the owner of the building, used as a skating and hockey rink for many years, was losing money on it and contemplated tearing it down or selling it for another purpose. Three Dutton men gave the leadership which saved the rink.

The main obstacle was the $800 selling price but the trio found 80 citizens of the town willing to contribute $10 apiece. The rink was bought and a committee formed to operate it as a community project. The rink was paid for itself and the committee has hundreds of dollars in victory bonds in addition to a cash reserve which will be used for improvements.

Oddity:

Dink (Montreal Gazette) Carroll offers as the oddity of the year Manager Tommy Gorman's appearance on Montreal Canadiens' bench as coach during Dick Irvin's Christmas visit to Regina. "Six or seven years ago you would have said it could never happen for Tommy epitomized the old Maroons, the club Canadiens used to love to hate. You would have been no more surprised if Bill Terry had wound up managing the Brooklyn Dodgers. Certainly Tommy must have passed more scathing remarks in his time about Canadiens than Terry's famous crack about the Dodgers—'Is Brooklyn still in the league?' "

Incidentally:

Eddie Allan, for many years sports editor of the old Toronto Mail and Empire, is recovering in hospital from a serious operation . . . Al (Montreal Herald) Parsley passes on a rumor that Bep Guidolin and Don Gallinger, clever Boston Bruins forwards, will be in Montreal shortly to enlist in the Navy . . . Childhood idol of Ted Kennedy, Toronto Leafs 18-year-old forward, was the old-time Leaf, Charlie Conacher. Kennedy always insisted on wearing sweater number 9, Conacher's old number, until Ted joined the Leafs. Lorne Carr has priority on number 9 with the Leafs so Kennedy settled for 10.

Professional Football League May Be Divided Into 2 Groups

By The Canadian Press

Something of the post-war expansion program of the pro. football interests was revealed last night by Commissioner Elmer Layden of the National Football League in a statement at Chicago in which it was intimated the enlarged circuit would probably be divided into two leagues as in major baseball. The trend is toward a coast-to-coast organization, with air transportation eventually having a part in facilitating team movements. A club is expected to operate in Boston next season while Layden declared he favored acceptance of bids for franchises in two Pacific coast cities. One application is from Los Angeles where Don Ameche of the movies is interested.

A record for early-season golf was established at Winnipeg when a foursome of the Norwood Club played nine holes New Year's Day. Previously, the earliest golf on Manitoba courses was Jan. 10, four years ago, according to Bob Bruce, one of the foursome.

In a complete Southern Scotland League soccer program yesterday, Dumbarton held the leading Glasgow Rangers to a 1-1 draw while the Hibernians were handed a surprising 1-0 defeat by Airdrie. Celtic disposed of Third Lanark 4-0.

The individual point leaders of the American Hockey League remained in their respective positions for the week, according to the scoring table released last night by president Podoloff. Wally Kilrea of Hershey added a goal and one assist to stay on top with 39 points, followed by Gaston Gauthier, his team-mate, with 36, and Burlington of Cleveland, third, with 34 points.

"The Unnamed Colt," sired by Blenheim II, father of Whirlaway, has been given the name of Pericles, after the ancient Greek leader, by his owner, William Helis, Greek-born millionaire horse-owner, he announced last night at New Orleans. The yearling, which cost $66,000, has yet to start in a race.

The International Bonspiel of the Detroit Curling Club is to be held in the motor city Jan. 5-6, it was announced last night, with rinks from Sarnia, London, Chatham, Palmerston, Wallaceburg, Peterboro, Hamilton and Toronto scheduled to compete.

TED ATKINSON TELLS OF HELP JOCKEY NEEDS

Toronto Rider Says Jockey Must Have Head and Power

A CLEVER BOY

By FRED HAYDEN
(Associated Press Sport Writer)

Miami, Jan. 4—(AP)—Ted Atkinson, jockey idol of New York and Miami, could not catch Johnny Adams in the national standings for 1943, but thin Theodore from Toronto just about stole the show anyway.

For months you've read about his averaging one or more winners per day, but perhaps you'd like to have the Canadian lightweight's ideas on what makes a rider click?

"I think the two outstanding requisites for a good jockey are: First, headwork and second, having that indefinable something that enables him to get the run out of a horse," he said. "All the boys you see out on that track can ride, of course, or they wouldn't be out there. But to be a topnotcher, they must have those two qualities.

"There's a certain youngster—I don't want to mention his name—whom I think is one of the best little riders in the country. But he doesn't win a lot of races, just seems unable to get all the run out of his mounts."

Ted, like so many other booters we've queried, considers George Woolf tops of 'em all. We asked Atkinson if it is because, as another rider told us, Woolf knows so many "tricks" on a horse.

"I wouldn't put it that way," replied Ted. "He's got what I've been talking about—the head,' the ability to get the most out of his mounts and amazing power. What an appropriate nickname — 'The Iceman!' If he's bothered in a race, he doesn't lose his head, become angry or flustered. He keeps his wits working. And, of course, he knows pace.

"But that power! When George pushes 'em home, handriding through that stretch, you almost can feel it. Makes you think of the fast pick-up in a high-powered car."

Miami, Fla. —(AP)— Top-weight among 52 nominations for the $25,000 Widener handicap at Hialeah March 4 was yesterday assigned to the Irish-bred Princequillo which is called upon to carry 126 pounds against 123 for Alsab. Ocean Wave was weighted at 121.

Halifax—(CP)— Returning from the C. A. H. A. mid-winter meeting at Toronto, President J. E. Hudson of the Maritime Amateur Hockey Association announced last night a part of the Maritime-Quebec playdowns for the Allan Cup would be staged in an East Coast City yet to be determined.

New York, Jan. 4—(AP)—John A. McDonald, General Manager and Vice-President of the Montreal Club of the International League, yesterday recived word of his dismissal from Hector Racine, Royal's president. The move was believed to be part of a general shakeup by Branch Rickey, guiding light of the Brooklyn organization in which Montreal is the top farm club. Earlier Fresco Thompson had been removed as manager and replaced by Bruno Betzel of the Durham, N. C., Bulls.

BADLY INJURED BY SHOPBREAKER

He was found by his wife, who said a wallet Beresner customarily carried was missing.

Although Coach Toots Holway has been confined to his bed through illness for the past week, Vice President Bill Dennis has been directing the workouts of the Belleville juniors in preparation for tonight's opening game versus the strong Trenton juniors. Last night the local kids held their final practice and today Mr. Dennis announced the names of those most likely to start in the season's curtain-raiser.

"Of course these names are subject to change by Coach Holway, but no doubt the majority will get a call at game time. Maurice Rollins will start in the nets with Dick Fitzpatrick dressing also. Dick Rosetti and Ranch Bush, have been suggested as the starting defence pair, with St. Mikes' trio of Jerry Moher, Jack Wardhaugh and Don Barrett starting as one front line combination, this being their third consecutive year together as a forward line unit. The other front line will see Doug Day and Bernie Meagher on the wings with Billy Holway as the pivot centreman," announced Dennis as he added the names of Doug Green and Johnny Semark as alternate defencemen and Harry Wardhaugh as the extra forward line player.

Unfortunately the new uniforms ordered for the 1944 edition of the Belleville juniors did not arrive, although they've been on order for nearly a month. "We hope to procure the loan of St. Mikes football sweaters for tonight's game, that is unless delivery of our uniforms is made late today," explained Dennis.

Last year Rome Taylor's Trenton juniors eliminated Belleville in the group finals and the local squad is out after sweet revenge in the opening O.H.A. game tonight, when a dozen of Belleville's own sons will be the centre of interest at the Hume Arena. It's a long time since local fans have had the opportunity to cheer for a full team of Belleville pucksters, so a little moral support wouldn't come amiss.

There are several new hockey rules in vogue this year, which may confuse fans who will see their first game of the season tonight. The most important change is the introduction of a red line at centre ice. The new rule reads—"A red line, 12 inches in width, shall be drawn entirely across the width of the rink, exactly in the centre of the rink. This line shall continue vertically up the sides of the boards and shall be known as the CENTRE LINE. The half of the ice surface in which the goal being defended is situated shall be called the DEFENSIVE HALF of that team."

Summing this one up it simply means the "defending team" can complete forward passes up to the CENTRE LINE, thus eliminating too much ganging in the defending zone. The centre line has no bearing on the attacking team when on the offensive, however.

(Some more changes.)

"A player is now allowed to catch a puck in his hand, providing he drops it on the ice in front of him before three seconds has elapsed and then plays it before any teammate does."

"Play does not stop when a puck hits an official unless the official is on the goal side of the penalty-shot line."

"In facing off opposing players must face their opponents' goal, not stand sideways as in the past years."

In the matter of tripping the rule now reads a penalty may be given if a player—"places his stick, knee, foot, arm, hand' or elbow in such a manner, that it shall cause an opponent to trip and fall." (This was changed to include "clipping.")

"An intentional offside does not apply to a team below numerical strength of its opponents."

There are several other minor changes which the average fan will have little trouble in absorbing.

(Remember when)

Up among the top scorers in the National Hockey League, Jack Adams, crack centre player with the Toronto St. Pats, league champions, was made captain of his team 21 years ago today. Adams later migrated to the Pacific Coast to star before returning to the N.H.L. at Detroit, where he has been manager of the Red Wings since their inception.

The eight, Leading Aircraftmen enjoying leave before literally getting back "into the driver's seat", included Ken Bunt, Windsor, Ont., Jim Clapp, Picton, Ont., Bill Schink, Georgetown, Ont., and "Doc" Savage, Oakville, Ont.

News of the award of the D.S.O. to Wing Cmdr. M. M. (Merve) Fleming, D.F.C., of Ottawa, was received throughout the Canadian Bomber group "with all the quiet of a blockbuster exploding in a gunpowder factory", as one fellow reported it.

The 29-year-old ace is one of the most popular figures in the Bomber group. He led the famed "Moose" squadron for more than a year. Fleming is known as a "Flier's Flier" and he knows aircraft from rear turret to bomb bay.

PATRIOTISM CAN'T BE PART TIME

Chiseling a little, on some regulation that seems irksome, may not appear very serious to us. But just the same, it is putting our convenience ahead of the safety of Canadians overseas. To keep them supplied with all they need to win this war, needs careful large scale planning of all our resources. The little bit of something extra one man chisels multiplied by thousands of other part-time patriots throws all this planning out. Patriotism must be an all or nothing affair.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 264

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

A slam is something you do not slam right into. You sneak up on it, sort of. You and your partner first exchange as much dope as you can before you decide if a slam is safe, and in what.

Before you know if a slam is safe, you must see (1) at least 12 tricks, (2) a satisfactory trump suit, and (3) enough aces and kings.

The information about aces and kings comes toward the end. You first find out all you can about the number of tricks you have and what will be trumps, if any.

Hover over this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠A K J 7 5
♥A K J 7 5
♦5
♣J 5
NORTH
♠Q 6 4 2
♥Q 6 4 2
♦A J
♣A 4 2

An opening bid of one in a suit shows at least five tricks, four high cards, two sure tricks, and a biddable suit. With two suits of the same length, first bid the higher rank.

South has seven tricks, four high cards, four sure tricks, and rebiddable suits in spades and hearts. He has enough for an opening bid of one spade, and some to spare.

Partner responds with a bid if he has more than two tricks with at least two high cards. If he sees enough tricks for game and has two sure tricks, partner should one-jump his response at once.

Bids follow the order of preference in T-A-N; takeout, assist, no-trump. North has no takeout. So, with adequate support, he assists spades. And it takes only ten tricks to make a game in spades.

North has five tricks, four high cards, two sure tricks. With at least five tricks shown by south, north sees ten tricks already. So, he one-jumps his assist right now. His bid is three spades.

Suppose you are south. With five shown by north and your own seven, you already see 12 tricks and know spades can be trumped. So, you have visions of a slam.

You have only one worry. Have you enough aces and kings? Wouldn't you like to know?

AT THE BELLE

"BEST FOOT FORWARD"

What happens when a movie star accepts on invitation to a college prom, much to the consternation of the fan who invited her, forms the background for the hijinks on the screen of the Belle Theatre where M-G-M's Technicolor scintillating musical, "Best Foot Forward," is now in its final day.

Based on the long-run Broadway stage success, the film retains many of the original song hits, including the famed "Buckle Down Winsocki" and several new numbers especially written for the movie version. Harry James and his Music Makers supply the musical background and also do several instrumental novelties.

Miss Ball is stunning in several Irene creations and delivers her lines with gusto. The film introduces several promising newcomers to screen audiences. There are Nancy Walker, who shows promise of becoming a female Mickey Rooney; Tommy Dix, the little boy with the big voice; June Allyson and Gloria de Haven, two bundles of energy.

The Canadian News of the Day, a delightful 'Our Gang' comedy and an entertaining Pete Smith specialty completes the program.

Bette Davis, "Watch on the Rhine"

The magic touch team of Lillian Hellman as author, and Herman Shumlin as producer-director, responsible for the stage successes, "Children's Hour," "The Little Foxes" and "Watch on the Rhine," was brought to Hollywood by Warner Bros. for the screen production of Miss Hellman's greatest play, "Watch on the Rhine," slated to open next at the Belle Theatre.

"Watch on the Rhine" arrived in Hollywood wearing medals, figuratively speaking. The New York Drama Critics Circle gave it its award as the best play of the season. President Roosevelt designated it for the annual "command performance" in Washington. Its star Paul Lukas, had won the award of the New York Drama League for the best performance of the season. So Warner Bros. could do no less than add the lustre of its own two-time winner of the Motion Picture Academy Award, Miss Bette Davis, to co-star with Mr. Lukas in the film.

A top-flight supporting cast is headed by Geraldine Fitzgerald, Lucile Watson, Beulah Bondi and George Coulouris. Miss Watson and Mr. Coulouris re-enact their original Broadway roles.

The Canadian Movietone News described by Lowell Thomas and "Fin 'n Catty" a dandy colorfun cartoon precede the feature attraction.

AT THE McCARTHY

Crazy House

Crazy House newest and dizziest of the Olsen and Johnson screen comedies is now at the McCarthy Theatre. Presented by Universal, the new fun film is funnier than 'Hellzapoppin', and features one of the largest aggregations of popular talent ever packed into one movie. Notables in the huge cast include Cass Daley, Martha O'Driscoll, Patric Knowles and Thomas Gomez.

The Olsen and Johnson method of making a motion picture, is the theme of the hilarious story. Special feature attractions include Tony and Sally DeMarco, Count Basie and his orchestra, Marion Hutton and the Glenn Miller Singers, Chandra Kaly and his dancers and the Delta Rhythm Boys. Other favorites in the gay production are Leighton Noble and his orchestra, Percy Kilbride, Richard Lane, Billy Gilbert Edgar Kennedy, Franklin Pangborn and Hans Conried.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Tish"

America's most beloved fiction character came to the screen yesterday at the Capitol Theatre. She was the inspiration of Mary Roberts Rinehart's most popular creations. Now she sweeps the screen with laughter heart-throbs and tears! She's all fun, fuss and fury . . . you'll love her in the New Year's surprise entertainment. By all means come down and see Mary Robert's Rinehart's famed character "Tish" with Marjorie Main, Zasu Pitts, Aline MacMahon, Lee Bowman, Guy Kibbee, Susan Peters, Virginia Grey and Richard Quine.

"Truck Busters"

There are few non-military callings today spiced with more adventure and danger than that of the drivers of the huge and powerful lorries which carry freight on long hauls across country. That point is made vividly and excitingly in "Truck Busters", the action-packed Warner Bros. picture that had its initial showing at the Capitol Theatre yesterday as the added hit.

Starring Richard Travis and Virginia Christine, the picture is a dramatization of the adventure and romance involved in the lives of the men who drive the huge, cross-country trucks. It is also the moving love story of Casey Dorgan (Richard Travis) and Eadie Watkins (Virginia Christine) who portrays a waitress at a roadside cafe.

"The Canadian Universal News completes the first of January hits.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was walking along with Shorty Judge just walking along, and Shorty said, Oh boy free nails.

Meaning a lot of loose nails on the sidewalk mixed up with sawdust proving carpenters had been working there and I said, Oh boy, let's fill our pockets with them and walk along sounding like millionairs.

Which we did, sounding just like money ratteling in our pockets, and Shorty said, Wouldn't it be great if some gangster heard us ratteling and pointed his gun at us and said Stickem up.

Oh boy cant you just imagine his expression when he reached in and didn't feel anything but nails? I said. Hay, there's one leening against that telegraff pole, I said.

Meaning a fierce tuff looking man smoking a cigarette with both hands in his pockets, and Shorty said, Hay, I tell you what, let's rattle past him and see what he does.

Which we started to do, ratteling as much as we could, and the man looked at us, saying, Hay, your kids.

Sounding just like a gangster in the movies and making me and Shorty feel like running. Only we didn't, and the man said, I'll give you a dime if you wait here till a dame comes up, and if she says she's looking for Butch, tell her I couldn't wait, tell her I had to work.

And he handed us both 5 cents and quick walked away, Shorty saying, Oh boy did you hear him say a dame? That proves he really is one, he said.

Meaning a gangster, and pretty soon a lady in a red sweater and a check dress came up and started to look around and I said, Are you looking for Butch, lady? and she said, Heh? Why yes, who are you? and Shorty said, He said to tell you he had to work.

He's a dubble crossing liar, the lady said.

Which he probably was if he was a real gangster, and she kept on going, looking mad, and me and Shorty kept on going feeling lucky.

Former Storm Trooper's Diary Tells of His Hatred for Nazism; 'I Always Feel Myself a Slave'

Algiers, Jan. 3 (AP)—Allied headquarters today released a diary of a former storm troop leader in the Hitler Youth Movement captured in Italy which showed that the young Nazi had a complete change of heart after less than a year of fighting.

On Dec. 22, the day before his capture, the official statement said, the following was found in his diary:-

"Yesterday night, during retreat, I broke finally and irrevocably with my own life. Gone are all the old values, all that was previous to me. In my soul only one thing remains, hatred for the bestiality of the German army. For at least one is human.

"What have we to fight for? Everyone cursed the Nazi government but few have the courage to run against it. Why? Because brutality and the power of oppression are still strong. If only the opportunity offered. I would help strengthen the thousands who long for the day of the final collapse... If I ever survive to leave the front alive at least I shall have seen through the tawdry facade of Nazi politics, I shall know the points at which the Nazis are weakest ... Why was I born a German? I feel myself always a slave."

Australian Letter

By J. E. HOLDSWORTH
Canadian Press Correspondent

Sydney, Australia, Jan. 4 — (CP Cable) — Much attention was given here to an interview with Walter Nash, New Zealand's Deputy Prime Minister and Minister to the United States, who advocated a Pacific island federation after the war under the trusteeship of the United States, Great Britain, France, Australia and New Zealand.

Nash, now in Canberra, suggested this federation should control all the islands west of the Solomons across the Marquesas to South America.

(The Solomons are northeast of Australia and the Marquesas are due east of the Solomons, about midway between them and the Peruvian coast of South America.)

The federation should not aim at exploitation of the islands but at development of a higher standard of living among the natives, he said.

"The security of Australia and New Zealand will depend on some sort of cover for these islands," Nash said. "We cannot let an enemy power have them but must recognize that we are just units in a world in which there are other important countries." Joint trusteeship would solve any threats of wrangling over air bases and landing grounds and would ensure use of all the islands as bases for any nation concerned. Other nations bordering on the Pacific, like Canada and Russia, could negotiate for reciprocal use of landing grounds."

It was noteworthy that the interview was given almost immediately after publication here of cables reporting that one section of United States opinion was demanding that for helping defeat the Axis and as repayment for lend-lease, the United States should be master of the world's skyways, including the Pacific.

"Are the victory bells ringing in a struggle for spoils among the victors?" the Sydney Daily Telegraph asked. "Discussions and agreements of the next year will decide whether we are to live in a world of national rivalries or a world of co-operative effort.

"Nash points the way to the second kind of world. The federation would throw open all aviation facilities to every nation. For Australia this problem is critically important. We cannot afford to go the way we went before the war when we allowed our air mail to become the monopoly of Imperial Airways Limited and refused to do business with Dutch or American Airlines. As a result we were worse served than some poky South American Republics where all the great air lines of the world could send their planes."

Australian research and manufacture locally of certain drugs helped Australian forces achieve victory in New Guinea, according to a report of the Australian Medical Equipment Committee.

The report showed that Australian production of sulphanilamide was followed by another important sulfa drug, sulphaguaniodine which is a specific for certain types of dysentery. This was made available to troops in New Guinea at a time when it was impossible to obtain stocks from overseas.

"Dysentery at the time was rife among the men in New Guinea but was practically eliminated by the action of the Director-General of the Army in ordering they should be given immediately to every man suffering," the report said.

Many Stories of Heroism Told Of Canadian Medical Corps Caring for Wounded at Moro R.

By DOUGLAS AMARON
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With the Canadians in Italy, Jan. 3—(CP Cable)—Soldiers of the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps whose war is waged without weapons under the sign of the Red Cross lived up to the finest traditions of their service in the battle of the Canadian 1st Division troops for the Moro river valley and the Adriatic town of Ortona.

Never before in this war have so many Canadians been used together on such a narrow front and never before has fighting been so heavy. As a result the Medical Corps has been faced with a steadier and greater flow of casualties than at any previous period in the Mediterranean campaign.

From stretcher bearers in the front lines to doctors in field ambulances and casualty clearing stations the last two weeks have been arduous and trying. Medical treatment more often than not was administered under shell-fire and the corps itself has not escaped casualties.

Roads All Under Hun Fire

All roads leading back from the front were subjected to shell-fire and ambulance drivers shared the risk of everyone travelling them. Ambulance jeeps often were within sniping range of the Germans.

Many stories of heroism have been told about the medical men but none is more typical of what all of them are doing than of Pte. G. S. C. MacFarlane, an ambulance driver from Oakville, Ont.

On the night of Dec. 11, fighting was heavy and casualties were coming in considerable numbers. MacFarlane was waiting in his ambulance behind the forward area ready to bring the wounded back to a field ambulance in San Vito, about five miles southeast of Ortona.

Field Ambulance Hdqtrs. Hit

The road to San Vito winds up a hill in full view of the enemy and German gunners had it "taped." They also were dropping shells into the town, one of which hit field ambulance quarters and stores and wounded some of the staff.

"A shell exploded right beside the first ambulance to come up the road that night, wounding an orderly and adding to the injuries of all the casualties," said Maj. J. K. Bell of Sarnia, Ont., second-in-command of the field ambulance.

"When we saw how things were we phoned ahead to the ambulance point telling them not to risk the trip unless there were urgent cases. There were some of these cases and the first thing we knew MacFarlane had brought them through."

The driver was told he need not return to the post because a relief man could be provided but he insisted on going and drove over the road despite the fact that the Provost Corps closed it to all traffic except priority vehicles. And he drove slowly as all ambulances are driven and without lights.

Second Load of Wounded

There was no let-up in the shelling but a few hours later MacFarlane returned with a second load of wounded. An Italian and a mule a few yards in front of his vehicle were blown up by a shell but he kept going and when he delivered the casualties he returned again to the post.

Other soldiers whose gallantry won the praise of every Canadian fighting men were the stretcher bearers.

Pte. Archie Simpson of Lanark, Ont., is one such man. He belongs to a maritime battalion (Carleton and York Regiments of St. Stephen, N. B.) which was engaged in heavy fighting below the cross-roads where the road from San Leonardo joins the Ortona-Orsogna lateral highway. His medical officer, Capt. S. M. Luginsky of Winnipeg, said Simpson brought in a good proportion of the casualties himself.

NORTH TO DANGER by TOM GILL

CHAPTER 11

This year freeze-up was later than ever before. The golden autumn lingered through November, but the frosty crispness of the nights, the glittering blue of the sky and the sharp north wind gave warning that winter was not far away. For this, Colin and Alec made ready.

From the trading post they brought to the cabin an endless list of winter provisions until the shelves of both their cabins were heaped high. And besides food, there were tools, toboggans, gun shells, pack straps, to be taken in by canoe before winter broke.

Most important of all, Colin needed dogs. His success as a trapper, even his life, might depend on the wise selection of a good dog team.

And here Blair was invaluable, for she knew dogs. So, relying largely on her judgment, Colin soon picked up five strong, intelligent dogs, well matched, and each one capable of pulling a hundred pounds.

But daily Colin chafed at the delay. Everything depended on the freeze-up. He could not follow Dove on one of those clandestine excursions of his except by dog team. Neither could Blair take that photograph down to Winnipeg until the slush ice hardened.

He busied himself with trips into the back country, and on more than one he took Irina. Selkirk, tied down with ever-increasing duties at the trading post, himself had urged it, but Ma Corrigale made no secret of the fact that she didn't approve.

Colin only laughed. "So now I'm in love with the girl who came here to marry my best friend. Ma, you ought to write a column for the lovelorn."

"Maybe you've got something. I could start by observing that when love opens the throttle, friendship's a pretty weak brake. You know as well as I do that Selkirk's never had his feet on the ground—not ever. But Irina—"

"Well?"

Ma Corrigale paused. "She's like nobody I've ever known—she's so many-sided I don't know which side's the real one. Now, take Blair. You know where you stand with Blair. I was thinking of those two girls this morning. They're different as day and night. Blair carries her own sunshine around with her—she's like a good, healthy animal. That's why Tennant's crazy about her."

"He seems to like Irina, too."

"You may have noticed, it's a male trait to run after everything he doesn't understand. And there's plenty about Irina that Nate Tennant doesn't understand."

"There's plenty I don't understand."

"No, and you won't learn it by taking her canoeing—or maybe I'm wrong."

That talk was completely forgotten until next evening, when Colin and Irina were seated by the big fire, waiting for Selkirk to join them for dinner. Colin had been watching her, bent over her sewing, then he asked, "When do you and Rodney get married?"

"I want to wait until spring."

"Why?"

"I don't know."

"Don't you really love him?"

It was a full minute before she replied. "I don't know that either. Sometimes I think so, but — I sometimes wonder if he loves me."

Colin laughed. "He adores you, and you know it."

"Yes? Well, I think he is much more at home with you than he is with me." Irina paused. "You're really very nice, Colin. With you I can be completely myself. You're my safety valve." She picked up her sewing. "You don't mind being a safety valve, do you?"

He thought he saw her lips tremble and in quick sympathy he said, "What about an all-day trip tomorrow beyond Trappers Lake? I want to buy fish for my dogs. Would you like it?"

"You know I would. And I promise not to talk any more about the world's great illusion."

"What is the world's great illusion?"

"Love. Didn't you know?"

Nettled, he asked, "Why do you say that? Love isn't an illusion."

Irina looked up with a demureness that hinted at mockery. "What is it then, teacher?"

"Love? It's—it's a—"

Her quick laugh baffled him and Colin burst out, "Too bad someone doesn't teach you what love really is!"

"Why don't you?"

Irina said it lightly, but the silence that followed grew long and through it each avoided the other's eyes. Something within Colin warned him they were on ground that ought not be trodden; and, as if Irina too sensed danger, she asked, "What about Blair and Tennant?"

"He wants to marry her."

"Of course he does. I wish I had her joyousness. That voice of hers—it's like laughter itself. Last night I found myself listening to her without even thinking of what she was saying. But does Blair want to marry Nate?"

Colin shrugged. "I can't answer that."

"You mean you don't want to?"

"Why not?"

"Let me ask you a question: How do you feel about Blair?"

"She's as close to me as any sister could be." A shade of defiance may have sounded in his voice, and there was more than a shade of skepticism in hers as Irina observed, "I've heard all about sisters."

"Not the way I mean it, you haven't. I'd do anything in the world for Blair, and I think she would for me. But love isn't in the picture."

With a sudden gust of temper, Irina's small hand struck the chair. "I don't know who is worse—you or Rodney! He wants some cloud-draped creature to idealize; you talk solemnly about a sweet, platonic sister, and neither of you ever thinks in terms of a flesh-and-blood woman."

Surprised at the unexpected outburst, Colin asked, "What should I do? Make love to every woman I meet?"

"Every pretty one. Why not? And Blair's pretty."

"So are you. Do you want me to take you literally?

Irina's long, green eyes were on him, then again she bent over her sewing. "If I told you," she answered, "you might not let me go to Trapper's Lake tomorrow."

It was a cloudy, windy tomorrow, with the sun still low in the east when Irina and Colin swung up the Nelson to the sound of their chugging motor. Mists were drifting in from the north and a new chill in the air told of winter's hand steadily closing. The river itself was fringed with ice, and only the swifter water of the channel remained open.

By noon the mist had turned to a penetrating drizzle, and before lunch was over, hail began pattering against the spruce thicket where they sat around a little fire.

Colin looked toward the north. "Freeze-up is on the way. This will be our last trip together."

She held her hands out to the fire. "I'll miss them," she said and the meal was a silent one.

By midafternoon Colin had arranged for the delivery of two thousand whitefish to feed his dog team. One other purchase he made—a gift to Irina, a tiny two-month-old huskie, tailless and looking more like a yellow powder puff than anything alive. Colin bought the pup with a secret conviction that Irina might be less lonely, but he pictured with some trepidation what Ma Corrigale would say to the addition of a huskie pup to her immaculately kept inn.

As they turned back toward Colin's cabin, the dog lay curled in her lap, looking up at her with adoring eyes, while she held a canoe blanket over him to keep him dry.

Colin kept close to the lee of every sheltering island, to break the force of the cutting wind, but in spite of her thick jacket Irina was shivering. An hour later he pointed to white water ahead; raising the propeller of the outboard motor from the water, he took up a paddle.

"We'll save a good half-hour by shooting these rapids," he told her. "Sit farther back in the canoe."

He had shot that stretch of water many times before; but when the grip of the quickened current seized the boat, Colin realized the water level was lower than in past years, and he felt the keel grate over an unseen rock.

Too late to turn back now. Bending on the paddle, Colin bravely grazed a black, jagged boulder that jutted up at them from the swirling stream. Violently the canoe veered to the left, while Irina clutched both gunwales with her hands.

For a second the little boat seemed to hesitate, then a rush of water lifted it and literally threw it forward into the foamy cauldron just ahead. There, where the stream swirled between sheer granite banks, Colin knew the real test lay.

Not long to wait. Already they were gathering speed, racing between ever-narrowing banks, and Colin's shoulder muscles creaked as he tried desperately to hold the crazily pitching bow in mid-stream. Spray stung his eyes, and the roar of tons on tons of plunging waters thundered in his ears.

Twice the keel grated on rocks, trembled and swung free. But now they were almost clear—ahead Colin saw the quiet sheen of calm water. Once more he bent back on the paddle and with the crack of a pistol shot it broke.

He reached for the other paddle—too late. A cross wave caught the bow, whirled it abreast the stream, and the next minute they were struggling in the river.

Gasping at the ice-cold touch, Colin fought his way to the surface and, seizing Irina by the shoulder, let the current sweep them down beyond the rocks There, in a few strokes, he reached the quiet of backwaters, and, with Irina in his arms, climbed up on the bank.

Still clutching the canoe blanket, she lay motionless and anxiously he asked, "Are you hurt?"

Irina shook her head, then, sinking down upon her knees, opened the blanket; from its fold a very bedraggled, frightened pup looked up at her.

"He all right," she murmured, and began wiping the water from his fur.

Fifty feet below them their canoe was floating in the backwash, and Colin waded out through the fringe of ice to pull it ashore. The blanket that had been thrust high up in the bow was still comparatively dry; he threw it on the bank and turned the canoe over to empty out the water.

He hurried back to Irina. "Let's go." He raised her to her feet. "We've got to get out of these wet clothes."

Wrapping the blanket about her, he carried the girl down to the canoe, where he took off her shoes and tucked her dripping feet beneath his leather windbreaker. "You can't play with wet clothes in this country." Frowning, he added, "Just pray that this motor will catch."

To his relief, it started after a few preliminary coughs; and Colin cut directly across the lake to his cabin. But he saw that in spite of blanket and windbreaker, the cold was making itself felt. Crouching low beneath the shelter of the gunwales, Irina shivered pitifully at every gust, and her hands had turned blue. The pup began whining as, with motor wide open, they rounded the last point of rocks and a few minutes later the canoe grated on the ice-crusted bank before the cabin. He lifted both Irina and the blanketed pup in his arms and hurried inside.

Empty. The fire had long been out, but dry kindling lay beside the stove.

"Take off all your clothes," he told her. "Throw them on the table and jump into bed."

Kneeling, Colin stuffed the stove with pine kindling, while behind him he was conscious of the rustle of clothing, the patter of bare feet across the floor and a voice that said, "These blankets can be very scratchy."

Still kneeling, he turned and laughed outright. Beneath a pile of blankets Irina lay, her wet hair spread out on the pillow, and beside her—only the black nose and two ears visible—lay the pup.

In a moment the fire was crackling; Colin pulled off his dripping shirt, wrung the water out and laid it over a chair. His shoes were sloshing and he pulled on a pair of Alec's old mocassins; then, taking a towel, seated himself on Irina's bed.

"With that wet hair you wouldn't be able to talk by morning. Turn over."

Obediently she turned, laying her face in the pillow, while he ran the towel through her thick hair. Once he heard the muffled voice. "Does the pup get this too?"

"Stop worrying about the pup. He was the first thing you thought of when the boat capsized."

"No, he wasn't. You were the first thing I thought of. I wondered if you'd catch me."

Pushing down the blankets almost to Irina's waist, ignoring her quick gasp of surprise, he began rubbing the towel briskly over her skin until it glowed pink; then covered her again.

"You'll live," he said.

"I should, after that! I'm tingling!" The voice was a little breathless.

Colin put a bottle of water on the fire and, sitting down beside the bed, wrapped the dog in an old sweater while Irina watched him. She was looking at the smooth skin of his torso, the long muscles that rippled beneath, and she laid a finger on his chest.

"You're not even cold."

"I would be if I'd kept that wet shirt on."

The stove was crackling now, the welcome heat spreading to the far corners of the cabin; and wringing out the girl's clothes, Colin laid them across a chair near the fire.

He could see she was getting warm. The blood was surging beneath the skin, and her eyes were bright again.

"But don't look at me so closely," Irina protested as she sat upright, gathering her knees beneath her. "I must look like a Cree squaw in this blanket."

"You look like a china doll that's been dropped in a bathtub." His eyes rose to the window where hail rattled like fine sand. "Canoe days are over," he said. "From now on it will be the dog teams."

"And I can't go out with you then?"

"You won't want to. Forty below is a little chilly."

Rae moved her clothes back, for the stove was glowing cherry red. Up on the bed, Irina's pup began playing, tugging at the folds of the blanket and the water on the stove was humming.

"Coffee soon," he announced.

Chin resting on her knees, her eyes followed Colin as he passed about the room.

"I hate to think this is our last trip," he heard her say. He made no answer. His eyes kept meeting hers, with a growing sense of something left unsaid, of some new, troubling presence that had not been there before . . .

Colin began playing with the dog. Then softly her hand touched his hair. "Your hair is as wet as mine was."

Irina's fingers passed across his neck, lifting the wet hair back from his forehead, while he raised his face to look at her; for a moment her warm hands rested on his shoulders.

They were not smiling now; dreamlike, unreal in the cabin's gloom, her face stooped closer until the red lips and the long green eyes became his only reality in a drifting world. He saw her lips part, saw her arms reach out to him as she swayed forward . . .

A wilder blast from the north buffeted the cabin, rattling windows, bringing a deeper roar of defiance from the fire, but her hands were moving down over his shoulders, her hair was brushing his neck. Then, in the same instant, they heard a shout from the direction of the lake.

With a sense of the world tumbling about his ears, Colin opened the door and peered out through the storm.

It was Dove. Muffled in a heavy khaki coat, the little man came up the path and at sight of Colin he called, "I saw the smoke and could not resist the chance of hot coffee." Then he saw Irina's clothes drying, and his head jerked toward the bed.

For a second his eyes held the girl's eyes. "You capsized."

"I was fool enough to try the rapids."

"Swift water is dangerous," Dove murmured, "especially when it's beyond one's depth.

Heart still pounding, Colin turned from that smiling scrutiny and began filling the coffee pot. As if out of some fantastic dream he watched his own hand trembling; it was all unreal. Nothing was changed, except—mechanically he realized that the water in the kettle had boiled low, and, slipping on his windbreaker, he picked up a bucket.

"I'll be back in a minute." He hurried out the door.

Humming a quiet air, Dove drew off his mittens and sat down opposite Irina.

"You don't look chilled." He was still smiling.

"Not now."

"That's youth. An adventure like this will have no bad effect on you or Rae. But to a person, say, as old as Rodney Selkirk—"

He let the sentence die in midair; his eyes caught sight of the dog on the edge of the bed, and he held it aloft in one of his great hands. Baring its small white milk teeth, the pup growled viciously and Dove nodded. "I'm afraid you do not like me." He tapped the dog lightly. "But you should show better manners to one who works in the same cause as your mistress."

With fixed gaze Irina watched him, while a vein on her temple began pulsing. Dove laid the dog beside her and his hand touched her wrist.

"Die zeit ist aus, Irina."

The soft sibilance of German died away and in English, Dove stressed, "We are ready now for you."

Irina smiled. In thoughtful approval Dove looked down at her.

"Our New York agents told me you were intelligent." He lapsed again into German. "I agree. You also have unusual charm. Intelligence and charm—you will need them both, my dear."

"For what?"

"For a little lesson to that dear United States."

"But they are not at war."

"In December Japan will take care of that."

"Why did you wait so long to tell me this?" she asked.

"To make sure. I am a very cautious person, Irina. Besides, you must have guessed who I was."

"I thought at first it was Dr. Benedict."

Dove gave a short laugh. "Big men make poor spies." Walking across the cabin, he glanced out the window. "We have not time," he warned.

'A Clever Bloke' Comments Brother Of Famous Monty

London, Jan. 4 — (CP Cable) — Capt. Rev. Colin Montgomery, British Army padre, says he does not know his famous brother, Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery, but thinks "he must be a clever bloke."

The captain arrived in London shortly after the general's presence was announced yesterday, and asked that he be excused answering questions about his brother because "I don't know him. He left home to go into the army when I was seven and I haven't seen him two dozen times since."

The padre is 42, 14 years younger than the general.

Complaining good naturedly, he said "This reflected glory is getting to be a bit of a nuisance," but added it had its useful points.

"When I go to a hotel and if it's full up," he explained, "I can usually get a room if I say 'I am General Montgomery's brother.'

"My other brothers are getting it too, particularly the one in Canada."

General Montgomery's "Canadian brother" is D. S. Montgomery, Vancouver barrister, who has lived in Canada for 34 years. He saw service in the First Great War with a Canadian regiment.

Yesterday's shipment was the second flown to the outpost in less than a week. The epidemic was reported to have started following receipt of a large shipment of mail.

Predict Hitler's Speech Will Lead To His Death

New York, Jan. 4—(AP)—Emil Ludwig, historian and biographer, said today Adolf Hitler's New Year proclamation to the German Nation was "a victory for the Allies", predicted it would lead to the Nazi leader's death.

"Hitler," said Ludwig in a letter to the Times, "is a moriturus (as good as dead) after this manifesto. The Generals are well aware that it will cost him the last enthusiasts among his following. In these days the date of his death will be fixed."

Citing Hitler's words that "if millions of people no longer possess anything to lose, they can only gain something," Ludwig said the dictator "has never uttered more foolish words to a people he promised to lead to world Dominion," and added:-

"But the effect of his proclamation on the generals is still more important. . . . A military man forgives defeat because lost bottles belong to a war, but a junker will not back a helpless stumbler, an atheist who ends up his important jeers with a prayer to the 'Maker.' No Prussian general will take that from a King—or a leader."

Zealous Policeman Pursues Suspect Beyond Boundary

Kankakee, Ill., Jan. 4 (AP) — A policeman Curtiss Fredd chased a suspected automobile thief up and down city streets, refused to quit when his quarry headed for the countryside—and trouble.

Two miles outside the city limits Fredd forced the suspect's car into a ditch, captured him. When the suspect's car caught fire, Fredd became perplexed—the squad car was in danger as the machine's bumpers were locked together.

He called the station, asked that a fire truck be sent.

Sgt. Bert White, however, reminded Fredd that an ordnance prevented city fire equipment leaving the city, and suggested he shovel dirt on the burning car. A half hour later Fredd telephoned his superior, said he succeeded in extinguishing the fire.

"That's fine, Fredd," White said, "but by the way, there's another city ordnance which says policemen should stay within the city limits."

Remove Customs Duty on Onions

Ottawa, Jan. 4 (CP)—The customs duty on onions imported into Canada has been removed for the period Jan. 1-April 30, the National Revenue Department announced today.

The duty exemption, which covers onions in their natural state—not including onions grown with tops, shallots and onion sets—was granted due to limited supplies being available in the Dominion and the need of further imports.

At Dec. 1 onion holdings in Canada were 7,805 tons compared with 18,368 tons on the same date in 1942. Officials said Canadian production was lower in 1943 and consumption was rising.

29 KILLED IN WRECK OF TRAIN IN SPAIN

HOW TO RELIEVE PILE TORTURE
QUICKLY AND EASILY

If you are troubled with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not delay treatment and run the risk of letting this condition become chronic. Any itching or soreness or painful passage of stool is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once. For this purpose get a package of Hem-Roid from J. S. McKeown or any I.D.A. or other drug store and use as directed. This formula which is used internally is a small, easy to take tablet. will quickly relieve the itching and soreness and aid in healing the sore tender spots. Hem-Roid is pleasant to use, is highly recommended and it seems the height of folly for any one to risk a painful and chronic pile condition when such a fine remedy may be had at such a small cost. If you try Hem-Roid and are not entirely pleased with the results, your druggist will gladly return your money.

Stalin to Honor 4 Little Girls As Supreme Patriots

Decorated Graves of Russian Dead, Conducted 'Wall Newspaper,' Kept Up People's Morale

Moscow, Jan. 4 —(AP)— Marshal Stalin, who in the course of the war has greeted all kinds of people from chiefs of state to simple Russian peasants, is looking forward to shaking the hands of four little girls who have become supreme patriots.

These girls are named Svetlana, Lily, Galina and Valentina.

The story of their underground activities is thrilling all Moscow at the moment. They were in the province of Kharkov during the Nazi occupation and, in a small way, they carried on a campaign that gave the Gestapo plenty of worry.

Young Pioneer League.

All four are members of the Young Pioneers League—an organization of the Soviet open to girls 10 to 14 years old.

They produced a "wall newspaper" which they pasted up in a remote section of the city where German guns had blown down most of the buildings.

Once the paper was up the little girls would go along the streets and say to Soviet women, "Auntie, I know where you can find some wood for your stove. Look over by the ruined houses."

In this way they drummed up quite a bit of circulation for their paper.

Organized Children.

At another time they pasted up pictures of Lenin- Stalin and President Kalinin. They drew and posted some childish but nevertheless unmistakably rude cartoons of the Gestapo and German teachers. They organized a meeting of children on a cliff overlooking the Kharkov zoo and audaciously sang the "Internationale."

Once they decorated the graves of the unknown Russian dead. A German soldier caught Valentina in the act and punished her with a slap in the face.

A Soviet official who heard of their deeds and brought the news back to Moscow said the girls still were getting out a paper when he met them and they bashfully tried to hide their ink-stained hands.

"Don't hide your hands, little girls," said the official from Moscow. "Everyone, even the general and Stalin himself, is going to shake them."

Kurt Rothenberge Out of Office

New York, Jan. 4 —(AP)— The BBC said today a German broadcast had announced the removal from office of Kurt Ferdinand Rothenberge, undersecretary of the German Ministry of Justice and an expert on "political crime."

The broadcast, recorded by U. S. government monitors, said Rothenberger was succeeded by a Nazi who held political control in Zhitomir before the Russian offensive "naturally closed his office." No reason was given for Rothenberger's oust.

Rothenberger, named undersecretary in September, 1942, co-operated with Justice Minister Dr. Otto George Thierack in a purge of "lenient" German judges. He became a spokesman for the ministry in enunciating a "philosophy" of the law that demanded, among other things, the death sentence for petty thieves because they were deemed politically useless to the Nazi state.

Structural Faults May Be Corrected 75 to 80 Per Cent

Chairman Amory Comments on Faults Developed in Some Liberty-Ships

Washington, Jan. 4 (AP) — Chairman Emory S. Land of the United States Maritime Commission disclosed yesterday that structural faults which caused some Liberty ships to break up are capable of 75 to 80 per cent correction, but not of 100 per cent correction.

Land made the disclosure about the time that Senator Harry Truman (Dem.-Mo.) of the war investigating committee announced that he had asked for a report on Liberty ship performance. His action was prompted by Senator Mon C. Wallgren (Dem.-Wash.). who is demanding a halt in conversion of Liberty ships to troop carriers pending an inquiry into reports that several have broken apart at sea.

Seattle, Jan. 4 (AP)—A member of the House of Representatives Naval Affairs Committee yesterday quoted the sipper of two cracekd Liberty ships as telling him:-

"You can hear them crack like gunshots. And the cracks, once started, run like a woman's stocking."

Representative Warren G. Magnuson (Dem.-Wash.) in an interview, added two more ships to the previously reported list and began an on-the-spot investigation of two of them which he said are undergoing reairs here.

He said Captain Eckholm told him the ships were not sufficiently strengthened longitudinally. The skipper told him:-

"These ships stand on a crest of a wave, with both ends shaking like jelly."

The ships added to the casualty list by Magnuson, bringing the alleged total to nine, were the S. S. Joseph Henry, which he said split while being loaded in an Alaskan port, and the S. S. Henderson Luelling, which sustained cleavage of deck plates. Captain Eckholm was master of both.

Hockey Officials To Meet Power

Ottawa, Jan. 4—(CP)—Canadian Amateur Hockey Association officials have an appointment to meet Air Minister Power here tomorrow morning to ask him to reconsider his decision forbidding R. C. A. F. teams from participating in Allan or Memorial Cup playdowns but sources close to the Minister said today they understood he had no intention of altering his decision.

There are Air Force teams in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Calgary, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and Arnprior, Ont.

The ban on air force participation in Cup playdowns was imposed so that there would be no interference with air training schedules.

"TIRED" ALL THE TIME

She felt miserable—draggy—low in vitality—lower in spirits. She hadn't thought of her kidneys, until a friend suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills. At once she took Dodd's. The "washed out" feeling was soon replaced by clear headed energy and restful sleep. Headache, backache, lassitude and other signs of faulty kidneys disappeared. 112

The March of the Hundred Thousands

THESE are our finest. Canada will welcome them home : : : the hundred thousands, the men and women who have faced death that their country, their own land, might be free. They shall come with firm stride and confident shoulders and bright eyes!

What have you to offer them, Canada?

Farm, city, town, village, wood, stream, hill, gold, silver, radium, aluminum, fish, game, wheat, wool, leather, fur.

Well, there they are : : : and in addition, the millions, the dollars that were saved in Victory Loans, and that exist in a country's credit, and that are in her resources and in her peoples, your dollars, your savings, yours.

We found and are finding the money that is creating Victory. We shall find it again and again, if necessary, until the Axis is no more. We shall hold our Victory Bonds and our War Savings Stamps and our War Savings Certificates, the sinews of our war effort, against Tomorrow.

And if we can find the money for War, we can, for the hundreds of thousands and the millions, find the billions to create Peace : : : to give every man, woman, and child in Canada Unlimited the Four Freedoms and more!

That's a promise, Canada.

Enemy Troops In This Sector Clearly In Growing Danger Says Communique

GREAT BATTLE BEGINS

By JAMES M. LONG
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 5 — (AP) — German troops have evacuated the eastern section of Berdichev, railway town 25 miles south of Zhitomir that once was German Ukrainian headquarters, the Nazi high command announced today.

Loss of at least part of Berdichev was acknowledged as Red Army forces smashed down through the Middle Ukraine, taking the fortress of Belaya Tserkov 50 miles south of Kiev, in a drive seeking to trap more than 500,000 Germans in the Dnieper River Bend.

German defenders of Berdichev beat back Soviet attacks against other sectors of the town, the German command claimed.

Berlin asserted also that "repeated and strong" Russian attacks had been thrown back south and west of Zhitomir, and that Soviet attempts to retake recent German gains northwest of Vitebsk farther north likewise had failed.

The Berlin radio spoke of fighting of "unabated ferocity," and Moscow dispatches declared the great battle to drive the Nazis from the Dnieper Bend had begun, with the enemy fighting desperately to hold his lines of communication.

The Germans in the Dnieper Bend were clearly in growing danger.

Advices from Moscow indicated that these German forces, already outflanked from Kiev as far south as Cherkash by the capture of Belaya Tserkov and 40 other Ukrainian towns, faced the same fate as that met by the army which surrendered at Stalingrad unless Marshal von Mannstein can extricate them by a mass retreat across the Bug river into Rumania.

At the northern end of the southern front, where other Soviet troops had crossed the Polish frontier west of the customs station at Olevak, fierce German counter-attacks were smashed yesterday by units of Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's 1st Ukraine Army.

Far to the north Gen. Ivan Bagramian kept up his incessant battering against the northern wing of the German armies guarding the Baltic front. One hundred enemy-filled villages were liberated and the 40-mile Nevel-Velikie Luki rail line cleared of Germans, the Soviet war bulletin declared. Izocha, 10 miles north of Nevel, and Pleshkova, 20 miles to the northeast, were among the strongpoints listed as overrun.

The Germans launched their counter-attacks along the Polish border in the vicinity of newly-captured Novograd-Volynski, 15 miles east of the border. They threw in two battalions—perhaps 1,500 men—strongly supported by tanks and guns, and "succeeded in breaking through to the position of Soviet troops," the Russian communique said.

Soviet columns were said to have surrounded the attackers and wiped them out.

Capture of Belaya Tserkov, Moscow declared, climaxed a fierce four-day battle in which the Germans fought desperately to hold the strategic supply base at all costs.

German Military Spokesman Admits Defensive Line on East Front Split

Stockholm, June 5 — (AP) — A German military spokesman admitted today that the Nazi winter defensive line on the eastern front had been split by a "very deep penetration," dispatches from the German capital said.

The spokesman was represented as making no effort to hide the fact that the Russian offensive had rolled up the German defences in the Kiev sector, splitting the lines into two fronts, one 360 miles and the other 480 miles long.

The Swedish correspondent said they were given only a black picture of war developments on both sides of Germany as they met with the spokesman in the bomb-damaged foreign office with fires still blazing in Berlin from the heavy R.A.F.-R.C.A.F. raids of Sunday and Monday.

The Germans indicated they did not expect that their army would be able to counter-attack successfully to regain its position, the dispatches said, although they maintained that because of the two long fronts still existing the Russians would be unable to roll up the flanks.

While one spokesman was pictured as giving a dark description of the situation on the eastern front, another was quoted as saying that "if an invasion doesn't come now that will be the biggest fraud of all time."

Asked to comment on the great Allied bombing attacks along the French coast, a foreign office spokesman described the raids only as "the usual attacks on the defence line," one dispatch said.

German reticence to discuss the attacks seemed significant in view of reports that Nazi "rocket cannon" emplacements were situated along the raided coast.

Increase Rate Tax Returns

Ottawa, Jan. 5—(CP)— Revenue Minister Gibson said in a statement today that income tax refunds are being sent out as quickly as possible and added it is hoped soon to increase the rate of 8,000 a day.

Between June and August last year the income tax division received the largest number of returns in its history and with them came thousands of claims for refunds arising from the forgiveness of one-half of the 1942 tax liability.

"Some taxpayers may have expected that assessment notices containing certificates for the refundable savings portion of the tax and refund cheques would be issued immediately," Col. Gibson said. "This was impossible in view of the fact that each individual return must be checked and compared with the return filed by employers and by companies paying dividends.

"This is a work of great magnitude and consequently it is not surprising that comparatively few assessment notices or refund cheques could be issued before the fall of the year. In fact, mass production did not begin until November."

More Than 100 Wounded Canadians From Sicily, Italy Reach Canada

Halifax, Jan. 5 — (CP) — More than 100 wounded veterans of the fighting in Sicily and Italy, "Red Patch Devils" of the Canadian 1st Division in the British 8th Army, arrived here today aboard the hospital ship Lady Nelson, and impatiently awaited transfer to the trains that would take them back to their homes, or at least back to their home provinces.

Also returning aboard the white-painted former cruise liner were large numbers of Canadian troops invalided home from Britain because of illness or accidents, some R.C.A.F. personnel and a few members of the Canadian Women's Army Corps.

The soldiers crowded the rails of the ship as she nudged into her dock and craned their necks for a glimpse of the Canadian skyline. Others could not leave their hospital cots and had to rely on their comrades' descriptions.

Although they didn't get home in time for Christmas or the New Year's holiday, the news they were being returned was "as good a treat as any," one lad grinned.

Berlin Raid Follows Greatest Daylight Aerial Assault

HIT-RUN DRIVER LEAVES INJURED AIRMEN ON ROAD

Two Members Trenton Air Station Seriously Hurt Near Gates of Air, Base

POLICE INVESTIGATE

Provincial Police today are scouring the central part of Eastern Ontario in search of a hit-and-run motor vehicle driver, who is responsible for hitting two airmen in front of the Trenton Air Station early Tuesday evening and drove away leaving them in an unconscious condition along the roadside.

The airmen are AC2 Victor I. Guest, 35, who is in the R.C.A.F. hospital suffering from a fractured left leg, multiple head lacerations and a possible fractured skull and AC2 Sheldon T. Hatton, age 31, also of the Trenton R.C.A.F. base, who is suffering from head injuries, fractured ribs, a fractured right arm and internal injuries. Both were still in a semi-conscious condition at noon today with Guest's condition reported as being critical.

Hit Near Main Gate

The hit-and-run occurred about 300 feet west of the main gate leading into the Trenton R.C.A.F. station, but apparently no person saw or heard the accident, that is believed to have occurred about 8.20 p.m. Tuesday night. The injured men were found by a passing airman, who raised the alarm and they were immediately taken to the Trenton Air Force hospital and attended by W/C. E. C. Noble and F/L. F. Smith, station physicians.

Traffic Officers W. G. Milton and Harry Caldwell, assisted by other Provincial Police scoured the territory from Cobourg to Napanee searching for a vehicle that might show signs of damage leading to the apprehension of the guilty party.

"Apparently the airmen were walking on the highway and not exactly close together. Police investigations indicate that the hit-and-run vehicle must have split the pair and after hurling them aside drove on. The airmen are believed to have been walking in a westerly direction towards Trenton and no doubt the vehicle responsible was also travelling in the same direction and struck them from behind. Guest was found lying on the south side of the road, while Hatton had been hurled clear of the right-of-way and was lying head down in the north ditch. Both were unconscious", Acting Inspector Harry Storey of the O.P.P., told the Ontario Intelligencer today.

Police Seek Information.

"Any person who happened to be in the vicinity of the Trenton Air Station about 8.15 p.m., Tuesday night or who may have seen a motor vehicle with damaged front fender, or even an eye-witness to this hit-and-run affair, are requested to notify their nearest police headquarters immediately as this is one of the most dastardly cases of hit-and-run driving recorded in this area in many years. These airmen were left to die alongside the highway", commented Acting Inspector Storey in a general appeal to the public. Any slight clue or information might assist in the solving of the case.

GUNMEN BOW OUT

New York, Jan. 5 — (AP) — Two courteous gunmen held up Harry Enman in his Brooklyn restaurant. They searched a strong box and found no money. "We are sorry," said one. "We must have made a mistake. Sorry we bothered you." Whereupon they bowed out.

Gen. Sir Oliver Leese Heads British 8th Army

Algiers, Jan. 5 (AP)—Lt.-Gen. Sir Oliver Leese is the new commander of the British 8th Army fighting in Italy, succeeding Gen. Sir Bernard Montgomery, it was disclosed today.

Gen. Leese commanded a corps in the 8th Army during the march from El Alamein in Egypt to Tunis.

Gen. Montgomery has gone to London as commander of British ground forces under Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme Allied commander for new invasions of Europe.

(A dispatch from the Canadian front in Italy said Gen. Leese already was in the field.)

Actually, Leese has been in command of the 8th Army for several days, but the announcement was withheld until today.

Leese is a tank expert. He led the 30th corps in the North African campaign.

A six-footer, Leese was formerly a commander of the Coldstream Guards, with whom he served in the First Great War.

During the battle of France, Leese was Deputy Chief of Staff to Viscount Gort, in charge of British forces on the continent.

Although less taciturn than Gen. Montgomery, the new 8th Army chief is no less a disciplinarian. Like Gen. Montgomery, he enjoys going into the field to see for himself, and always travels at a fast pace with his chauffeur hitting 60 miles or more an hour.

His corps spearheaded the 8th Army invasion of Sicily.

In 1940 he was Deputy Chief of Staff of the British Expeditionary Force and in 1941 he became commander of the 15th (Scottish) division.

Gen. Leese served with distinction in the First Great War, in which he was wounded three times, won the Distinguished Service Order and was mentioned in dispatches three times.

When the second Great War broke out he was in India as a general staff officer (first grade) at Quetta Staff College. Earlier he had been general staff officer (second grade) at the War Office in London and had commanded the first battalion, the Coldstream Guards.

NAZIS FEARFUL OF BULGARIANS EXTEND CONTROL

Country Near Military Occupation and Situation Still in Doubt

SOFIA BOMBED

London, Jan. 5 (CP)—A new American bombing raid into Bulgaria, hitting south of the capital, was disclosed today as the Germans were reported extending their control almost to military occupation apparently in fear Bulgaria might attempt to break away from the Axis.

Heavy bombers hammered the railway yards and a bridge at Dupnitsa, 50 miles south of Sofia, yesterday, Allied headquarters in Algiers announced, and a Berlin broadcast asserted 60 persons were killed and 100 injured. It added that the planes flew over Sofia, bombed several times before, but dropped no bombs.

The true political situation inside the country was clouded, with communications still severed.

The German-controlled Scandinavian Telegraph Bureau, however, said Sofia was raided with heavy damage and loss of life especially high because of lack of air raid shelters. This source added that the Turkish legation had moved to a town 35 miles south of Sofia, and that other foreign legations also were planning to leave the capital.

While rumors continued to circulate that the government of Premier Dobri Bojilov had been overthrown, an Associated Press dispatch from Istanbul quotes a traveller as saying Bojilov was still in power when he left the country Monday, although the government was severely shaken by public pressure for repudiation of the Germans as well as strife within the regency and cabinet.

Allied bombings of Sofia have had such a strong effect on the population he said, that the Germans have had to take over the administration of most of the city's affairs to prevent rioting. He declared the Germans were rapidly extending their control over the country.

An Associated Press dispatch from Berne said the Bulgarian government had shaken up its diplomatic staff, naming important political leaders to the Tokyo and Stockholm ministries in an apparent move to place expert listeners in those posts for the critical days ahead.

DRAFT GERMAN CHILDREN

Toronto, Jan. 5 — (CP) — All German children between the ages of 10 and 16 now are being drafted for war work, it was reported today by the BBC in a broadcast recorded by the Ottawa listening post of the CBC.

The children must work after school hours. If employers need additional help they can get it by obtaining special permits by which the child will work instead of attending school.

The move of the German government is the latest in a long line of stringent measures taken to ease the labor shortage, the broadcast said.

LANDINGS SHOW JAPS ON DEFENSIVE ALMOST ON RUN

Eyewitness Views on Amphibious Landings by U. S. on Pacific Island

LITTLE OPPOSITION

Somewhere in New Guinea, Jan. 5. (AP)—On the basis of eyewitness observation of all three amphibious landings which United States 6th Army Forces have made —at Arawe, New Britain, Dec. 15, Cape Gloucester, New Britain, Dec. 26, and Saidor, New Guinea, Jan. 2—it is safe to say the Japanese are on the defensive throughout the Southwest Pacific. In fact, they're almost on the run.

With the exception of one small diversionary raid at Arawe which suffered heavy losses, all three invasions were accomplished with little opposition.

Since those landings, only the opposition at Cape Gloucester has been worth mentioning. There, today's advices from Allied headquarters told of Marines attached to the 6th army shattering a counter-attack made in the Borgen Bay area.

Reports today from Allied headquarters were barren of developments concerning Arawe, which was intended from the beginning as a diversion for the Cape Gloucester operation. But the trap set for Japanese forces caught between Huon peninsula and Saidor on New Guinea began to close.

The lower jaw on the peninsula has been moved 15 miles northward in three days by Australians who now are 80 airline miles from Saidor. The upper jaw at Saidor itself is a beachhead three miles deep.

Rabaul, the New Britain stronghold 265 miles northeast of Cape Gloucester, was kept on the defensive by two new Allied air raids, one a 32-ton bombardment Sunday night and the other a midday strike Monday during which 11 of 30 enemy interceptors were shot down.

Triple Shotgun Shell Output

Ottawa, Jan. 5. (CP)—Ammunitionless hunters will get a bang out of this announcement: The Prices Board says production of shotgun shells will show a threefold increase this year.

Making the announcement here tonight, the Board said, however, that despite this increase production still will be slightly less than 70 per cent of a normal prewar year's output. Thus, rationing will continue, with the needs of essential users coming first.

But there's hope for sportsmen in this sentence in the announcement: ". . . The increased production planned for 1944 will allow distribution for sporting purposes later in the year".

Announcing also revision of its ration order, the board said certain types of ammunition no longer being produced but of which there are still some stocks in dealers' hands will be removed from the ration.

TWO COMMANDING POSITIONS SEIZED BY ALLIED ARMIES

Germans Building Up Reserves Of Motorized, Mountain Troops

RAIL YARDS HIT

By RICHARD G. MASSOCK
Associated Press War Correspondent

Algiers, Jan. 5 — (AP) — Allied armies in Italy have seized two commanding positions against fierce Nazi opposition, it was announced today. Neither position was identified in the Allied communique.

On the 8th Army front, Indian troops seized a spur on a mountain ridge in pushing forward several hundred yards against enemy machine-gun fire southwest of San Tommaso near the Adriatic. San Tommaso was captured New Year's Eve by Canadian troops (the 48th Highlanders of Toronto.)

Troops of the Anglo-American 5th Army advancing a little more than a mile stormed a 2,300-foot height in the Sammucro Ridge two miles northeast of San Vittore. The Allied positions there completely dominated San Vittore, ruined town close to the main western highway to Rome, which the Germans are defending tenaciously.

The Germans, apparently intent on keeping the Allies from Rome as long as possible, are building up reserves of mobile motorized troops and are reinforcing their 13 or more divisions with mountain troops.

Work on Defences

Prisoners said the Germans are working hastily on new defences several miles behind their lines. These were being built especially in the areas covering Cassino, important town on the western main highway to Rome, and Pescara, on the Adriatic coast.

From Pescara an important highway runs across the peninsula into Rome. Canadian 1st Division troops are reported within nine miles of Pescara, their last position being given as a mile short of the Arielli River. The main German stand in front of Pescara may come at that river or at the Foro River, a mile northwest of the Arielli.

In the central sector, in the Apennines Mountains, the Germans appear to be side-stepping northward to cover their defences in the coastal area for a fight of attrition.

"If that's what the enemy wants," an Allied officer said, "he will be attrited before we are."

Heavy American bombers from Mediterranean airfields smashed railway yards and a bridge at Dupnitsa, 50 miles south of Sofia, capital of war-weary Bulgaria.

Two-engined bombers scored five hits on railway yards at Doboj, 55 miles north of Sarajevo in Yugoslavia, and pounded barracks and troops concentrations at Travnik, 30 miles northwest of Sarajevo.

Canadian Lancaster Crew Returns Safely With Kite Looking Like Sieve

Written for the Canadian Press
By FO. VIC BAKER

With the R. C. A. F. Bomber Group Overseas, Jan. 5—(CP)—Despite being coned by searchlight and simultaneously attacked by three night fighters over Berlin, Flt. Sgt. J. A. R. Coulombe and his crew carried on with their bombing run, dropped a blockbuster right on the aiming point and then brought their Lancaster safely back to base.

The 23-year-old French-Canadian pilot from Montmagny, Que., flying with the Thunderbird squadron, was on his 12th operational flight—sixth against the German capital. Everything went according to plan until the heavy four-engined bomber reached the target.

"We were very late in arriving and it looked as though we were the last kite to bomb," said Coulombe.

Suddenly, a master searchlight caught their aircraft and soon it was coned by the concentrated belt of lights surrounding the target. Flak started to come up the beams.

"As if that wasn't enough for one night," said the Rear Gunner, Flt. Sgt. Joe Jankus of Ottawa, "three night fighters closed in on us and began attacking."

The pilot, air bomber and navigator managed to keep on the bombing run while the gunners watched for the attacking fighters.

"The JU88 made three quick attacks and scored several hits on our fuselage," said the navigator, Flt. Sgt. J. A. G. Tremblay, 22, of Quebec. "The JU88 seemed so successful that two of the German night fighters broke off their attack and left the kill to the JU88, I guess."

Jankus said one fighter made two more attacks "before we got our bombs away, but the fifth and last attack was the heaviest."

"Not only was I blinded by searchlights but a previous attack had rendered my turret and guns useless. On that attack he came to within 60 feet of the kite and let go his whole charge of cannon-shells and machine-gun tracer in one blinding flash of red. Fortunately, however, the shells and machine-gun bullets riddled the wings only without injuring any member of the crew and only holing tanks in the port wing."

Bombs away, they dove out of the target area, away from the searchlight concentrations and managed to shake the night fighter. Though the wings were riddled, the hydraulics unserviceable, turrets, flaps, undercarriage and air-brakes gone, the bomber's four engines were still ticking over and the crew was able to bring the heavy plane back to a coastal aerodrome.

Kiel and Muenster Principal Targets Of 1,500 Planes

More Than 3,000 Allied Aircraft Over Occupied Europe During the Day

25 PLANES LOST

By AUSTIN BEALMEAR
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 6 — (AP) — R.A.F. Mosquito bombers hit wrecked Berlin last night and other British planes pounded targets in Northern France, following up one of the greatest daylight aerial assaults of the war by some 3,000 planes including United States smashes at Kiel and Muenster.

Not a single plane was lost in the night raids, which also included Mosquito forays over Western Germany and mine-laying operations by planes from the R.C.A.F. bomber group, the Air Ministry said.

An R.C.A.F. communique today said, "Last night aircraft of the R.C.A.F. bomber group laid mines in enemy waters. None of our bombers is missing."

The stab against Berlin was the first since a great R.A.F.-R.C.A.F. attack early Monday morning.

United States heavy bombers cascaded explosives by daylight yesterday on shipbuilding yards at Kiel, and railway targets at Muenster, both in Northwest Germany.

Returning to the north France "invasion coast," R.A.F. and Allied medium bombers attacked military objectives there again this morning, it was announced. R.A.F. and Allied fighters accompanied them.

The German-controlled Scandinavian Teleyraph Bureau reported heavy damage at Kiel, with a great shroud of smoke over the German naval base after the Kiel and Muenster assaults.

Attacks Pressed Home

A joint British-American communique said the attacks were pressed home effectively despite heavy clouds which obscured both targets and that fierce fires were left raging in Kiel, site of a great German naval base and submarine pens.

The raids were carried out by formations of heavy bombers which, with their American and British fighter escorts, constituted a fleet of some 1,000 planes that stretched out across the sky for 100 miles.

They were executed in conjunction with a day-long series of bombing attacks on targets in France by swarms of both British and American planes. Altogether approximately 3,800 Allied aircraft took the air — probably the greatest air armada ever thrown into action in a single day.

25 Planes Lost.

Total Allied air losses were listed as 25 planes—a remarkably small percentage of the great number of craft participating. A least 17—possibly more—German fighters were reported shot down in vain attempts to intercept the raiders.

More than 3,000 tons of high explosive and incendiary bombs were unloaded on Germany and France during the day—a large proportion of the total falling on Kiel and Muenster. Both cities have been raided repeatedly.

Muenster, a city with a normal population of more than 100,000, is situated about 200 miles southwest of Kiel and is a vital link in German railway communications

German Offensive In East Bosnia Has Been Smashed

London, Jan. 5 — (CP) — Marshal Josip Broz (Tito) announced today that the prolonged German offensive in Eastern Bosnia had been smashed and that Yugoslav forces had regained enemy-occupied territory, including the important town of Vlasenica, 30 miles northeast of Sarajevo, where huge stores of war material were captured.

Tito's communique, broadcast by the Free Yugoslav radio, said the Partisans were also on the offensive in Western Bosnia and Yugoslav and German battle troops were still locked in bitter street fighting inside the city of Banjaluka.

The battle for this Croatian capital, headquarters of the Second German Tank Army defending the Adriatic Sea coast against a possible Allied invasion from Italy, was now in its fifth day, with tanks and big guns being used by both sides. Tito yesterday asserted that his troops had succeeded in wresting half of the city from the defenders in bloody house-to-house fighting and that his guns had rendered the nearby airdrome useless, but today his communique admitted that German and Croat Quisling reinforcements had "filtered into the western anchor of the town."

Heavy fighting was reported from all parts of the irregular front by the Yugoslav war bulletin. It revealed that the Germans were massing troops in Doboj, Derventr, Travnik and Sarajevo with the apparent intention of mounting much stronger offensive operations in central and western Bosnia.

Partisans were reportedly soundly trouncing enemy forces in Hercegovina, especially around Novo Varos, where, Tito said, they threw German and Chetniks back toward the town of Priboj.

Tito announced the recapture of the Adriatic island of Pag, off the Croatian coast.

Hitler's Chancellery Practically Destroyed

Stockholm, Jan. 5 — (AP) — A bomb-set fire that burned furiously for four hours after the heavy R.A.F.-R.C.A.F. raid Monday practically gutted Hitler's sprawling Chancellery, and left scarcely a room usable, a traveller said today.

More than 100 firemen battled the flames and engaged in rescue work. The traveller, who left Berlin yesterday, said he had heard nothing about the fate of persons reported trapped in a shelter under the Chancellery.

A storage tank in Berlin holding 50,000 gallons of fuel for the German Air Force was destroyed in the last raid, the Free Danish Press service said.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

SEVERAL GRASS FIRES THIS WEEK

"It's something new to be getting grass fires in January, but we've had four or five this week", stated Fire Chief William Lynch today as he commented on the series of grass blazes which have kept the department more or less busy during the past few days.

The most recent fire of this description occurred Monday afternoon in an open five acre field behind the girls' residence of the Albert College and with the alarm being termed as fire the city pumper and hook and ladder equipment made a quick run to the scene. With the long grass and weeds made bone dry by the constant frosts and sunny days, the blaze burned over a considerable expanse before being extinguished. An hour or so after the fire was put out firemen were called back to the scene but it turned out there was no danger, the trouble being merely a bonfire.

The firemen were also called to Stoney Lonesome yesterday to bring a grass fire under control but as the blaze was outside the city limits the department did not answer the call. Instead it was asked if the blaze showed danger of getting out of control the department again should be called.

TIRE AND TUBE FOUND BY ROADSIDE

While proceeding to his home at Consecon along Highway No. 33 in Prince Edward County on Tuesday, Charles Jinks observed what appeared to be a tire lying alongside of the highway. His suspicions were well founded when he stopped as he found a complete tire, tube and rim lying on the side of the road. The matter was reported to Provincial Police and it is believed the tire fell off a passing motor vehicle having been used as a spare.

CAR EQUIPMENT REPORTED STOLEN

The theft of automobile accessories was reported to Provincial Police yesterday by Earl Keen, who resides on Donald Street just outside the city limits. Some time Monday night two generators were taken from parked motor cars at the rear of Mr. Keen's home. Over the week-end a car starter was also stolen from the same lot, Mr. Keen told police.

POLICE SAY DRIVER MADE TURN IN FACE OF ONCOMING TRAFFIC

Said by police to have made a lefthand turn in the face of oncoming traffic at the intersection of Bridge and Coleman Streets, an automobile driven by George Lobb of Milford, was in collision with another motor car driven by Ewart Sills of Foxboro.

Everett Sills, 78, of Foxboro, and father of the driver of the second vehicle, was riding in the rear seat and as the result of the impact was hurled forward with his head striking the rear seat with considerable force. The injured man was taken to the nearby surgery of Dr. G. S. Cronk suffering from lacerations of the forehead. J. G. Sills, 74, also of Foxboro, and a passenger with his brother, sustained bruises.

Considerable fender and body damage resulted to both vehicles as Mr. Lobb's car turned directly into the Sills' vehicle as the cars struck at the left front door. Mr. Lobb stated he did not observe the eastbound car as he emerged off the lower bridge ramp and was about to turn left into Coleman Street, police reported today. He also had an expired temporary driver's licence.

CHATTERTON BOY REPORTED SERIOUSLY ILL IN ITALY

Wounded in action in Italy on December 11th, Private Everett J. Woods, son of Mr. W. J. Woods of Chatterton, is now seriously ill as the result of his injury according to a cablegram received Monday evening by his father. Pte. Woods is a member of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, having enlisted in 1940. He has been overseas since June 1942 and served with his regiment during the Sicilian campaign as well as in Italy.

One of four brothers in the armed services, Pte. Woods was born at Foxboro and attended school there. One brother, George H. Woods is in a tank corps overseas, while Francis is in the R. C. A. F. stationed at Manning Depot, Toronto. Another brother, Ralph, is with the Argyll Light Infantry, while the fourth, John F. Woods has been denied enlistment into the armed services because of medical reasons.

Trenton Woman Injured by Car

Trenton, Jan. 5—(Special)— Mrs. Mary Allen, McClennan Ave., was struck by a motor car at the intersection of Division and Dundas Sts. here late Tuesday afternoon and rushed to the Belleville General Hospital. At first it was feared the lady had sustained serious fractures and maybe a head injury. However, today it was announced no fractures had resulted, although Mrs. Clarke was suffering from head injuries and other body bruises. The injured woman was attended by Dr. Byrne at Trenton and Dr. R. S. Gibson at the hospital.

Police investigations revealed Mrs. Allen was struck by a motor car driven by 19-year-old Ronny Clarke, 40 Water St., as she was crossing a street intersection. Police stated today charges were pending, but would not relate any further details.

Pinnacle Street Home Ransacked

Household goods and contents of family bureau drawers literally covered the floors at the home of R. H. Parkhurst, 301 Pinnacle St., during the absence of the family on Tuesday afternoon. Following the rummaging of the home, only an electric iron was found to be missing.

Mrs. Parkhurst told police she left home to do some family shopping shortly before two o'clock, Tuesday afternoon. Upon her return she found every bureau drawer had been emptied on the floors, chairs and electric lamps toppled over and the house in general disorder. The rear door leading into the home had not been secured, Constable Horace Wright learned when he investigated. Efforts to locate the electric iron are being forwarded by police in an attempt to apprehend the guilty culprit.

A neighbor lady told police she heard a noise in the Parkhurst home about two p.m., but did not know the family was absent from the home.

1,006 Births at Hospital in 1943 Set Record, Boys Outnumber Girls

Once again bearing out the oft-repeated contention that the number of births shows a natural and decided increase during wartime, newcomers registered at the Belleville General Hospital during 1943 number 1,006 setting an all-time record for the number of births at the institution in any previous year. Births registered at the hospital during 1942 totalled 934.

And there was another statistical contention that seemed to be borne out—that of there being a predominance of male births during time of war. According to the records there were 42 more male births registered at the hospital during the year than there were female. The actual count was 524 boys as against 482 girls.

With 105 births registered during July, this month led all others, although June was a very close second with 104 visits from the stork. A greater number of boys were born in January, March, April, May, June, July and September, while the girls over-balanced the scales in February, August, October, November and December. The predominance of girls during the last three months of the year was noticeable.

Local Resident Develops Hobby Into Business

Despite the fact that the winter is almost half over, a summertime business carries on with increased activity as several thousand gladioli bulbs are being prepared for shipping to many parts of Canada. Mrs. Geo. Bonisteel, proprietor of the Bon Glad Gardens, is busy preparing these bulbs to meet the demand from gladiolus fanciers, unusual as it seems during zero and sub-zero weather.

Growing out of what once was merely a hobby, the raising of gladiolus bulbs by Mrs. G. A. Bonisteel, 35 Highland Ave., has grown into professional proportions. Being an enthusiast in this line, the business developed until gladiolus bulbs were being shipped from the Belleville cultivation beds to many distant parts of Canada and to other countries.

A few years ago, says Mrs. Bonisteel, the gladiolus was mostly a hobbyist's flower, but it has become one of the leading blossoms in commercial trade, especially for summer growing, and more recently it has been used for greenhouse forcing.

"Gladiolus bulbs are sent from here, and from the various growers in other parts of Ontario, to all parts of the Dominion of Canada and we have customers from Halifax to Victoria," said Mrs. Bonisteel, "and we have the occasional customer from Newfoundland. We are shipping a considerable number of bulbs to these places and some to South America. Before the war we had inquiries from Latvia, Czechoslovakia, and at various times we have shipped bulbs to England."

When the war is over there will be a great demand for propagating stock coming from England and European countries, and this will be supplied largely from growers in Canada and the United States.

Many Belleville residents will recall the riot of color and beauty of the growing beds of gladioli to be seen as they passed the Bonisteel nurseries and outdoor beds during late summer and fall.

5 Air Cadet Officers Granted Commissions

Instrumental in organizing the Belleville squadron of the Air Cadets, five officers of the corps have been granted the King's Commission and were recently sworn in by the Air Cadet Liaison Officer as officers of the R. C. A. F. (Air Cadet Corps). They are Flying Officers Dawson C. Boyd; J. M. Wilson; Tom W. Hetherington; M. C. Ryan, and Pilot Officer Sam Johnson.

Through medium of training courses at R. C. A. F. stations these officers and instructors have become well qualified to carry on the work of youth training in the community and an interesting program has been drawn up in air cadet training including periodic visits to R. C. A. F. stations. After-holiday training for the cadets will commence on Thursday evening.

There are still a few vacancies for additional Air Cadets and Commanding Officer Dawson Boyd will be pleased to interview prospective applicants in the corps orderly room on Monday or Thursday nights.

This Is Bill's Story And He Sticks To It

W. O. Steer, advertising manager of the Ontario Intelligencer, arrived at work on time yesterday and reported having seen a robin sitting in a tree directly across the road from his home on Ann and Bridge Streets. To bear him out, or to prove to himself that he was not just imagining it, he called to Mrs. Steer to come to the door and see the bird. However, Mrs. Steer was not interested in robins at the time and, as three school children who had just passed the house and had seen the bird too, had got too far away from the scene, there is only Mr. Steer's word for the whole thing. Bill suggested that it was likely the robin had remained in the vicinity through a slight miscalculation, due to the "Knot-Hole Club" of the Bay of Quinte Golf Club playing golf so late in the season that the bird might have thought there was not going to be any winter. Anyway, the robin, after taking a look at Mr. Steer, flew around the corner and disappeared into the Corby Park.

Madoc Officer Improving After Shrapnel Wound

In a recent communication from base hospital presumably in the Mediterranean area, Major Clinton S. Nickle of Madoc, is reported as progressing favorably following a shrapnel wound received during the fighting in Italy. First report that Major Nickle had been wounded was received by his mother, Mrs. Eleanor E. Nickle, December 13, while a letter written by her son following his wound was received on December 30th.

Speaking with the Ontario Intelligencer this morning, Miss Jean Nickle of Belleville, stated that the exact nature of her brother's wound was not known other than that it had been a shrapnel wound in the thigh. According to her brother's letter the wound was a clean one and that he was progressing favorably had been indicated through his writing the letter a week after being injured.

Native of Madoc Major Nickle enlisted in the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment early in the war and proceeded overseas with the 1st Canadian contingent. Arriving in England holding the rank of lieutenant he was progressively promoted to the rank of captain and won his majority in battle in the Mediterranean fighting. Since going overseas he has married, his wife residing in England.

Observe Y.M.C.A. Centennial in June

One hundred years of service with youth throughout the world will be completed by the Y.M.C.A. this year. Canadian observance of the Centennial will be held in Montreal early in June, L. E. Shaw, president of the National Council of the Canadian Y.M.C.A.'s announced today. The Y.M.C.A was founded in London, England, by George Williams, a 23-year-old dry goods clerk.

Instead of glorifying past achievements of the Y.M.C.A. the Centennial occasion will form the basis for a Canadian-wide study of Y.M.C.A. policies as the "Y" enters its second century. In the announcement of the Centennial Mr. Shaw said that while the Y.M.C.A. is proud of what has been done in the past 100 years, the problems facing the Canadian Y.M.C.A. today were many.

The Y.M.C.A. was formed as a society "for the improvement of the spiritual condition of young men engaged in the drapery trade." Soon the "Y" broadened its program to include educational and athletic activities. Seven years after the founding of the Y.M.C.A. a Canadian visiting London, England, saw what George Williams was doing there, and returned to Canada to open a Y.M.C.A. in Montreal. Today the Y.M.C.A. operates in 68 countries. Its 12 original members have grown to many millions.

The work of the local "Y" is well known. Members have increased and the service is extended to the whole community. With the extra war work and service to men and women on active service the work load on the local Board and staff has been exceptionally heavy. The Local Board is now working on extension plans which will be a boon to the Youth of this Community.

Picton and District

Council Refuses To Accept Gov't Price for Marsh

Picton, Jan. 5 — An offer by the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests to grant the town a patent on the area of land which comprises the town marsh, for the sum of $100, was refused by town council last night. Solicitor F. L. Ward, K.C., pointed out the danger of the town accepting this offer. If the province no longer owned this marsh, the town would be less likely to secure a government grant in case sanitary measures are instituted as post-war projects.

Since 1923, the town has paid a yearly rental of $5 and it was decided to continue this.

Since the marsh is regarded as a menace to the health of the town, efforts are being made to have it cleared up and if possible to have it turned into a park. James deC. Hepburn, M.P.P., interviewed the Department and asked that a government engineer make a survey. This was done and as a result the Department made the offer of sale which council refused.

Councillor Levels Charges.

Introduction of politics in connection with the appointment of committees and officials was charged by Councillor Ralph Warren. He alleged that Conservative members of council were told to stay away from a caucus called by council to make appointments, and that a former council member had ascertained what committees the members of his party had desired to be members. Politics play a large part in the selection of reeves and deputy reeves, and a smaller part in selecting councillors.

Committees, with the first named being chairman, are: Finance, R. Warren, C. McGibbon, B. Moore, A. Grindrod; Streets, W. Lumsden, Grindrod, A. Covert, H. Campney; Fire and Police, W. Henley, Covert, McGibbon, Grindrod; Central Relief, Mayor N. McKibbon, Warren, Moore, McGibbon; Rest Room, Campney, Henley; Charity, the Mayor.

Officers appointed included, Walter Reid, fire chief; Dr. W. B. Lane, member Collegiate Board; Robert Hill, pound keeper; H. M. Love, member Board of Health; W. S. Lane, member Library Board; inspector under Bread Sales Act, sanitary inspector, Chief of Police B. Biddle; street cleaner, W. Skitteral; caretakers, Elizabeth Park, Leon Hudgin.

Council voted in favor of granting street workers a half holiday on Saturdays, with overtime if work necessary at that time.

Relief report showed 43 persons aided in December at a cost of $495. Town workers will assist the Home and School Association in operation of outdoor rinks.

Arrives Home Unexpectedly.

After two years' service overseas with the R.C.A.F., Warrant Officer Leslie Way arrived unexpectedly at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Way. Just a few days previous, they had received an airgraph from Cairo, no mention being made of his home-coming. He flew by plane from North Africa to New York, in which city he attracted much attention as he was garbed in a summer outfit during zero weather. On his arrival at Ottawa, he secured a winter outfit.

Enlisting in 1941, he graduated as a pilot at Ottawa and went overseas in March 1942. He was pilot of a fighter bomber until three months ago, when he met with an accident. He was then transferred to ferrying planes from North Africa to Sicily and Italy. He reports to Manning Pool, Toronto, at the end of the month.

Five Sons in Army.

Five sons in the army and three of them overseas, is the record of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Johnson of Cherry Valley. Pte. Arthur went overseas with the First Canadian Division in 1939, as a member of Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment. In England, he was injured when thrown from a motor cycle and on his recovery was transferred to the R.C.O.C., where he is engaged in diesel engine work. Lance Cpl. Ivan went overseas with a draft for the Hasty P's in 1941. He accompanied this unit to Sicily, where he was seriously wounded, and is now recovering in an English hospital. L.-Cpl. Carman is a member of the Provost Corps, going overseas last year. Pte. Floyd is with an anti-aircraft unit on the East Canadian coast, and Pte. Murney is stationed at Camp Borden.

Given O.B.E. Award.

Among those mentioned in the New Year's Honours list was Major Hamilton McLean, son of Judge E. H. McLean, Picton. His name was included among the members of military who become Members of the Order of the British Empire.

Major McLean was born in Picton and was educated here prior to attending the Royal Military College at Kingston from which he graduated. He became a civil engineer and at the outbreak of war enlisted with the Royal Canadian Engineers of Quebec.

Though no official announcement was made regarding the award it is believed to be in connection with his work as army engineer with the development of the Goose Bay Port in Labrador, where he spent nearly two years. He was engineer in charge of construction of this important air port. He returned from Labrador last September on completion of the project, and has been posted to Camp Borden. His wife, a Toronto girl, resides in Quebec. He has a brother, Major Berford McLean with the Canadian Army overseas, and a younger brother Neil, at home.

Also made a member of the Order of the British Empire, is Sqd. Leader W. J. Ralphs. Previous to going overseas, he was stationed at Mountain View Air Station, near Picton, where he was Officer Commanding the Air Armament School. A native of England, Sqd. Leader Ralphs has spent 25 years as a member of the Royal Air Force, serving in Libya, Iraq, Egypt, Japan. After service as an instructor in England, he came to Canada, where he became officer in charge of officers' courses at Trenton, which produced many armament officers. After service at Mountain View, he was posted overseas. His adventures read like fiction.

"It looks like a good setup — hitting them from both sides," Twining commented.

Scharnhorst Epic Related by Fraser

A British Northern Naval Base, Jan. 2 (AP)—The daring attack and pursuit by three British cruisers and audacious torpedo onslaught by four destroyers at a range of less than a mile were cited by Admiral Sir Bruce Fraser today as major factors leading to the destruction Dec. 26 of the German battleship Scharnhorst under the big guns of the British battleship Duke of York.

The entire action was fought in the Arctic darkness above North Cape Norway. Admiral Fraser, commander of the British Home Fleet, said in writing out his own account of the battle for Arthur Oakeshott, Reuter correspondent with the fleet. The Duke of York, with Admiral Fraser aboard; the cruiser Norfolk and the destroyer Saumarez suffered minor damage from the Scharnhorst's shells, Admiral Fraser stated.

(The conquerors of the Scharnhorst returned to a British port Saturday, with the Duke of York looking a bit battle scarred, The Associated Press reported from London. Her main mast and fore mast were damaged by shell splinters.)

Admiral Fraser's Story.

Admiral Fraser's narrative, which did not mention the presence of any other German ships, ran:

At 0800 (8 a.m.) on Dec. 26, the Duke of York, Admiral Fraser's flagship, with H.M. cruiser Jamaica astern and the destroyers Savage, Saumarez, Scorpion and the Norwegian destroyer Stord acting as anti-submarine screen, was some way to the westward of the eventual scene of battle, steering to the eastward.

The weather during the previous night had been extremely bad and few people, even in the battleship, had had much sleep. There is no daylight in these latitudes, though there is a period of twilight in the middle of the day. The whole of the main action, which started in late afternoon, was therefore fought in the dark.

Vice Admiral R. L. Burnett with the force of cruisers was at this time to the southward of the Russia-bound convoy, which was in the latitude of Bear Island. He himself was on the Belfast, with the Norfolk and Sheffield in company. The convoy was escorted by destroyers and corvettes.

About 0930 Admiral Burnett sighted the Scharnhorst at long range, steering toward the convoy. Speed was increased to 27 knots and all three cruisers opened fire, the Norfolk obtaining a hit.

This engagement lasted until 1030, when touch with the enemy was lost due to her superior speed in the weather conditions prevailing. She was last seen steering off to the northeast, having been driven off from the convoy by the determined attack of Admiral Burnett and his cruisers.

Heads Between Foe and Her Base.

During this time my force still was many miles to the westward, proceeding at speed with the intention of getting between the Scharnhorst and her base at Alten Fjord.

Admiral Burnett, who was joined by the destroyers Musketeer, Matchless, Opportune and Virago from the convoy escort, now raced back to support the convoy in case the enemy should attempt another attack on it.

About 1230 the expected happened and the enemy reappeared from the westward, making toward the convoy. The cruisers, who were stationed ahead of it, opened fire, as did the enemy, obtaining a hit on the Norfolk, killing one officer and six ratings and seriously injuring another six.

The Scharnhorst now fled to the southward with the cruisers in close pursuit. The pursuit to southward lasted all afternoon. Admiral Burnett had fleeting glimpses of the enemy and was able to keep me informed of the enemy's movements, my force coming up from the west and to the south of Burnett.

From this invaluable information I was able to decide a course on which I must steer to intercept the Scharnhorst before she got too near her base.

The stage now was set for the main action, the Scharnhorst being pursued by the cruiser force with dogged persistence and the Duke of York, making all speed to intercept to maximum advantage.

During this flight the enemy altered course lightly, which enabled me to engage a little earlier than I had expected. It actually was at 1649 (4:49 p.m.) that the Duke of York, having turned to southward, parallel to the Scharnhorst, illuminated her with a star-shell at a range of just under six miles.

Duke Fires Broadside At Once.

At 1650 (4:50 p.m.) the Duke of York opened fire with a broadside of her 14-inch guns, followed by her 5.25's and the Jamaica's 6-inch. Although the enemy fired a star-shell it was not until ten minutes later, at 1700, that she opened fire with her 11-inch on the Duke of York.

From then on until 1824 (6.24 p.m.) the Duke of York and Scharnhorst fired at each other continuously, the latter's tactics being to fire a broadside and then turn away so that her length was hidden and only the narrow width of her beam presented as a target.

With her superior speed the Scharnhorst was gradually drawing out of effective range. Several hits had by this time been observed and one obtained at about 1806 (6.06 p.m.) succeeded in inflicting damage which by 1830 had reduced her speed to twenty knots.

Though the enemy fire was always accurate and the ship was straddled time and again, the Duke of York received only two minor hits which penetrated the masts.

Masterly, resolute handling of his ship by Capt. Guy Russell, who commanded the Duke of York, can have been the only reason why she was not more seriously damaged.

By 6:24 p.m. the range had opened unduly and, as a reduction in speed had not yet become apparent, the Duke of York ceased firing, as fire could not be effective at such a distance, and the enemy did likewise.

A few minutes later she was seen to open fire again with all her armament at a much closer target. This proved to be the destroyers of the Duke of York's screen, who had been creeping up on the Scharnhorst, waiting for a chance to get close enough to deliver a torpedo attack.

Damage inflicted by the Duke of York's gunfire by now had made itself felt and the Scharnhorst had slowed down to twenty knots. The destroyers had an opportunity which they seized with both hands.

Torpedoes Sent Point-Blank.

About 1845 (6:45 p.m.) the Savage and Saumarez swept in on the starboard bow of the enemy and the Scorpion and Stord on the port bow under murderous fire from the Scharnhorst's guns. They pressed on indomitably and the range was under one mile when each in turn fired torpedoes point-blank and turned away under smoke to make good their escape.

Only the Saumarez was hit and sustained damage to her upper works, one officer and ten ratings killed and eleven ratings wounded.

At appropriate intervals at least three underwater explosions were clearly heard by the Duke of York. From then on, the fate of the Scharnhorst was sealed.

The Duke of York had been steadily gaining on her, but she still was making fair speed and firing all her guns at the destroyers when, at 1901 (7:01 p.m.), the Duke of York again opened fire.

From then on the Scharnhorst was repeatedly hit by 14-inch shells. Interior fires glowed and flashes of exploding ammunition were seen. She started to circle, her speed gradually dropping, until at 1928 she almost stopped steering to the north.

At 1932 (7.32 p.m.) the Duke of York ceased fire to allow the Jamaica, which had been detached for the purpose, to close in and finish her off with torpedoes.

Other forces by this time were on the spot. Admiral Burnett on the Belfast, with the Norfolk, who had been engaging whenever they had the opportunity, now closed in from the northwest, and the destroyers Musketeer, Matchless, Opportune and the Virago arrived from the west, where they had been acting as guard in case the Scharnhorst broke back in that direction.

Many Torpedo Hits Made at End.

Between 1931 (7.31 p.m.) and 1940 (7.40 p.m.) the Belfast and Jamaica attacked with torpedoes from one side of the Schornhorst and the destroyers from the other. Many hits were scored, and it is impossible to say at present what ship or ships may have fired the final shot. It can only be said that somewhere between these times she sank in position not far to the northward of North Cape.

It only remained to carry out a search of the area for survivors and other evidence of her end, and this resulted in the Matchless picking up six and the Scorpion thirty from the sea. So the action ended. (The Scharnhorst normally had a crew of 1,400.)

The cruisers had by their dogged pugnacity given safe conduct to the convoy and delivered the enemy to the Duke of York. The Duke of York fought the Scharnhorst hard, skillfully and well, and after being subjected to the full weight of the enemy's fire for over an hour and a half won a capital-ship gun action at night.

The skilled handling of the Savage, Saumarez, Scorpion and Stord in instantly perceiving the opportunity for their audacious attack and the gallant way in which they pressed it home under intense fire insured the eventual destruction of the Scharnhorst.

with France and the defences on the invasion coast.

It was attacked three times in recent months—the last time Nov. 11th.

The Kiel shipyards, which have turned out such warcraft as the Luetzow and the Gneisenau, was last raided Dec. 13th., when 900 tons of bombs were loosed on the target with good effect.

Yesterday's raid apparently equalled or exceeded that assault in intensity and weight of bombs dropped.

Darkened the Heavens

One returning flier said the vast fleet of warplanes literally darkened the heavens, and another said the regularity with which the big bombers unloaded their cargoes of explosives reminded him of a relay of dump trucks in operation.

R.A.F. and American medium bombers, meanwhile, maintained a dawn-to-dusk shuttle service across the English Channel, hammering at the French invasion coast with the Pas de Calais area as their main objective.

In these raids on Northern France R.C.A.F. fighters went along as escort and an R.C.A.F. communique announced that they damaged several enemy planes. All Canadian aircraft returned safely, the communique said.

The German news agency, D.N.B., said in a Berlin broadcast that the attack on Kiel was made through heavy cumulus clouds from altitudes of 20,000 to 27,000 feet and admitted that great damage has been caused.

London Had Alarm

The Germans sent a comparatively small number of planes over Britain last night, giving London a 32-minute air raid alarm — its first since last Sunday night. Bombs fell in one London district and in one area in the home counties, causing some damage and casualties.

Two of the enemy raiders were shot down.

A four-year-old boy was killed, while his brother, 6, and a girl 14, were injured when bombs wrecked several houses in a home counties village.

A fleeing raider was believed to have jettisoned his bombs in a southwest coast district, but damage and casualties were slight.

Drive in Central Ukraine

Moscow, Jan. 5 — (AP) — Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's long-expected drive against the Germans' Central Ukraine positions gained momentum in the plains south of liberated Belaya Tserkov today while Marshal Fritz Von Mannstein's troops battled desperately to hold back the Russians from seizing their badly-needed lines of communication.

The Nazis were counter-attacking repeatedly, seeking to keep control of the railway running from Belaya Tserkov and Tsvetokovo westward to the Odessa-Lwow line. They also were fighting hard in the Smela area to hold the railroad running south to Novo Ukrainka and westward to a junction with the Odessa road. Another communications line which the Nazis battled desperately to retain was the highway connecting Belaya Tserkov with Zvenigordka, 60 miles to the southeast.

Through this entire network of rail and road communications in the lower middle Ukraine it became a race between Von Mannstein's harassed forces to get out of untenable positions before they are completely encircled by fast moving Russian spearheads driving in from the southwest and west.

Front dispatches reported the Russians were pushing south from captured Belaya Tserkov along a front 40 miles wide in hot pursuit of the retreating Germans.

The War Today— Multitude of Objectives Described As 'Invasion Targets'

By DeWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

Day after day air forces based on Britain are drenching the coast across the English Channel with bombs directed at a multitude of objectives which are described mysteriously as "invasion targets," that is, targets which must be reduced before the land forces can be put ashore for their drive on Berlin.

Yesterday medium bombers slashed at Nazi installations in the French coastal zone for long hours. Authorities are silent as to the exact objectives but unofficially it's suggested the airmen were hunting emplacements for rocket-guns.

The Allies aren't taking chances on this rocket-gun, for experts know that such weapons can be constructed to throw shells containing terrific explosive power over long distances. While accuracy in placing the shells may be lacking, great devastation might be caused in general areas like London — or to an invasion armada in the Channel.

Rocket Gun Only One of Problems

The rocket-gun, however, is only one of the problems. The spadework now being carried on by the air fleets is a lobar which will save thousands of men when the day of invasion finally arrives.

But we shouldn't let that blind us to the fact that even under the best of circumstances the casualties among the landing forces are likely to be heavy. I think we should get that idea firmly fixed in our minds, to help us meet the shock when the day of reckoning comes.

Among the targets on the invasion coast are railway communications and rolling-stock, which can move Nazi supplies and troops up to the battle line. Airfields and grounded aircraft are constant objectives, for invasion will be accompanied by a titanic conflict in the air. Heavy artillery emplacements are a particular menace.

Enemy Supply Bases Objectives

Tank bases also are prime targets. Enemy supply bases such as ammunition and gasoline dumps, are constant objectives.

Dare-devil mine-sweepers — the unsung heroes of the sea — will run their noses up into the fields of floating explosives and clean out many of the mines. The sweepers won't get all of the mines, of course. Land mines are dealt with largely by bombing and shelling from warships in the pre-landing stage of invasion. When the moment of invasion arrives, Allied bombs and shells will open a path on the beachheads. But many mines will remain, to torture the first wave of troops which passes over them. Once our forces are established ashore, experts with mine detectors will start clearing up.

LONDON LETTER

By DOUG HOW
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

London, Jan. 5 (CP)—As a young fellow, we got to know about the Cockneys much the same way that hand-me-down gossip taught that MacDonald was good and Laurier was bad, our folks being Conservative for years back. They were just part of the family legend that everybody came by at one time or another.

Then we came to London and, well, all we can say is that the next generation is going to hear more about Cockneys and less about politics. The Cockneys will lend themselves to narrative because every kid has heard about them anyway, so there is a basis.

We can add a lot, though, from personal experience.

Khaki Jim, for instance, will be a thundering specimen after three or four generations on the family tongue. He is amazing in the flesh but even he can benefit from the influence of legend.

Khaki Jim is a lanky individual, gaunt in face and in body. He goes about with a beard that starts off grey and ends up white and stops about an inch out as though it is in difficulties of decision.

Khaki Jim wears clothes that would be better off if they had never gone beyond the imagination of some 1920 tailor but their most striking offnote is the fact that he has entirely civilian dress with the exception of the Khaki tunic he's had since the last war. That's where he got his nickname.

The last we heard of him he was carrying around mail addressed to "the manager of Hyde Park stepladders."

He was proud of that job. It gave him a certain authority over the people who want to spout off in the park and need a ladder to do it well.

There is also Joe, the bus conductor who is lonely for peace for a strange reason.

Joe's bus runs along Oxford Street early in the morning and for years Joe amused himself greatly in daily conversation with the scrubwomen going to work in the big department stores along that way.

Then the war came and there was all sorts of work and, one by one, the scrubwomen got better jobs until only Mary was left, and she had a hare-lip. Mary conducts a spirited conversation despite her disability and Joe appreciates her, but it's not the same.

In fact, Joe is so lonely for the old days he is thinking of taking Mary to wife, so there won't be anything left in the mornings to remind him of old times.

Drew Says Conviction in Britain Germany Out by Summer's End

Toronto, Jan. 5 — (CP) — There is a general conviction in Britain that Germany will surrender by the end of the coming summer, Premier Drew of Ontario said yesterday at a press conference at which he discussed his one-month overseas trip from which he returned at the weekend.

One basis for the conviction, he added, is the bombing raids and "the wonder is that Germany has been able to stand the bombing as long as she has."

"I saw convincing evidence in the case of one German city that 90 per cent of its buildings were not usable. While that was only one, the percentage of buildings out of commission in many German cities is so high that it is difficult to see how city life can be carried on in the remaining buildings."

The premier's discussion of the progress of the war and conditions overseas came in answer to questions after he had issued a prepared statement in connection with the reopening in the next few weeks of Ontario House in London. He said he had outlined plans for Ontario House at a meeting of the cabinet earlier and that there had been general approval of what had been done.

Agent General Appointed

An agent general had been appointed "but for reasons which will be apparent when the announcement is made it is not yet possible to reveal his name," said the prepared statement. Col. Drew amplified that by saying the announcement would come in three or four weeks. In the meantime S. E. Percival, on the agent general's staff before Ontario House was discontinued under the government of Mitchell F. Hepburn, was preparing the building for its official opening.

The statement described the activity of Ontario House as fourfold: to assist the armed forces from Ontario on overseas service; to stimulate interest in Britain in Ontario products; to interest British manufacturers in establishing branch plants in Canada; and to receive applications from persons who wish to move to Canada after the war.

The premier told questioners that the immigration plan would be selective and that it would be conditioned on prospects for employment. The province's first duty was to provide employment for the men and women from the armed services and war industry when the war ended. He said he believed the Dominion government would not seek to restrict any "proper" provincial plan for bringing immigrants from Britain.

Sub-Chasing Patrol Home

An Eastern Canadian Port, Jan. 5—(CP)—Weather, icebergs and a necessarily restricted diet were the main discomforts of crews of a flotilla of submarine-chasing motor launches—first Royal Canadian Navy ships to patrol off Labrador—now back at their home ports here.

Lieut. Ross McDiarmid of Winnipeg, commanding officer of one of the launches, termed the morale of the crews "wonderful," despite monotony, constant patrolling, cold weather and dehydrated food.

The flotilla didn't encounter any submarines, but the crews said the presence of the motor launches was responsible for the fact no ships were sunk.

"We felt that because we were there the subs gave us a wide margin," said Lieut. Gavin Clark of Toronto, "and believe me the ships passing by felt very much the same way." The launches had some "pretty close calls" with icebergs and high seas, but came through unscathed.

Other officers serving with the flotilla were Sub-Lt. J. M. Duck, Windsor, Ont.; and Sub-Lt. J. E. White, London, Ont.

PLANES COLLIDE IN AIR

Aylmer, Ont., Jan. 5 —(CP)— During routine flying operations at No. 14 S.F.T.S. yesterday two Harvard training machines collided in the air. One of the student pilots is dead and another student and two instructors are injured but are expected to recover. The machines were said to have been coming in for a landing on the runways and were not more than 30 feet in the air. One injured is PO. John Sweet of Aylmer.

NEW NAVIGATION DEVICE AMAZES NAZI OFFICIALS

Targets Can be Bombed Regardless of Weather Conditions

CATHODE RAY TUBE

Stockholm, Jan. 5 (AP) — The accuracy of a secret new navigation device which permits the R.A.F. to bomb targets with precision regardless of weather conditions has amazed high German military officials who have observed how it was used in the systematic pattern destruction of Berlin, it was learned today.

A source close to German official circles said the Germans were caught flat-footed by the Allied secret weapon which permits night pattern and precision bombing almost on the scale of daylight bombing.

Eyewitnesses said there is remarkably little wastage of bombs. There is only a small amount—perhaps not more than 200 yards— of overlapping as the attackers move from neighborhood to neighborhood.

An anonymous Swedish scientist said in the newspaper Dagens Nyheter that the R.A.F. was apparently using a radiolocation navigation device transmiting infra-red rays which pierce fog and cloud. When the rays are reflected from the earth, they are recorded on a cathode ray tube forming a pattern which the navigator can read like a map.

This scientist credited the development to a Russian-American scientist named Zworykin who was said to live in Camden, N.J.

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF Y.M.C.A.

Halifax, Jan. 3. (CP)—The Canadian Council of the Young Men's Christian Association will observe its 100th anniversary with a special program in Montreal next June, L. E. Shaw president of the Dominion organization, announced here over the weekend.

"Never before in its history has the Y.M.C.A. had such responsibilities and opportunities", Mr. Shaw said. Winning the war is the immediate task, but then will come "the even more important job of helping young people make the most of the peace for which they have fought".

SPECIAL JURY PANEL FOR LONERGAN

New York, Jan. 4—(AP)—A request for a special jury panel to try Wayne Thomas Lonergan, 26, on a charge on first degree murder in the slaying of his heiress wife was granted today by general sessions Judge George L. Donnellan.

Lonergan is accused of strangling and bludgeoning 22-year-old Patricia Burton Lonergan in a bedroom of their triplex apartment last Oct. 26. The trial is expected to begin late this month or early in February.

MOTORIST ESCAPES DROWNING

Brockville, Ont., Jan. 5 —(CP)— John Rankin of Kingston, Ont., escaped drowning yesterday when he crawled from the rear window of his car after it had gone through the ice of Charles Lake, 15 miles northwest of Brockville, and walked two miles to the nearest farmhouse, where he was given clothing and shelter. His car has not yet been recovered.

Bandetto Zenella Held in Custody

Toronto, Jan. 5 (CP)—Facing a charge of armed robbery in connection with the holdup of George Butcher, a truck driver, on Dec. 13, when 600 cases of liquor were stolen, Baudetto Zanella, 31, was remanded to Jan. 11. No bail was set.

He is the sixth man charged in connection with the hi-jacking and is described by police as the "master mind". The liquor, valued at $35,000, was recovered in a barn in Etobicoke.

Zanella had eluded police in two raids in Toronto Sunday. Early Monday they surrounded and entered a Barrie residence with revolvers drawn and handcuffed him before he awoke. A $100 reward had been offered for information leading to his arrest.

CHILDREN STEAL WALLET ON BUS

Windsor, Ont., Jan. 4 —(CP)— Windsor city police today are pondering what to do with two children who last night stole a wallet containing $130 and personal papers from Michael Lacyk of Windsor.

Lacyk told police his wallet was stolen while he was riding on a city bus and the children—an 11-year-old girl and her 9-year-old brother—were identified as the thieves.

Police said the girl confessed after a few minutes' questioning.

Police recovered $100 and still are hunting for the other $30. The children were said to have torn up the papers.

U-BOAT CLAIM IS UNCONFIRMED

London, Jan. 4.—(CP)—The Berlin radio claimed today Nazi U-boats had sunk "six more" Allied destroyers in the Atlantic and added "this brings Allied losses in destroyers during the last ten days to 21". There was no Allied confirmation of the claim.

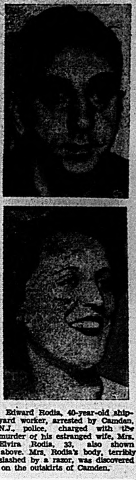
QUEEN BACK to SCHOOL.

Pasadena, Calif., Jan. 3. (AP)— Queen Naoimi Riordan, 17, and her six princesses sat in the Royal box while 68,000 "subjects" paid her homage. Now it's bobby socks and back to school; the royal gown and crown are back in the closet. Suppressing a queenly yawn, she plunged resolute fingers into sudsy dishwater. The Tournament of Roses is over.

ONE SLED STOLEN AND TWO ARE LEFT AT DOOR

Decatur, Ill., Jan. 4. (AP)—When Clarence Seip's son Ronald, nine, reported the theft of his sled Seip informed several of Ronald's playmates that he knew "who took the sled", and warned of grim results if it didn't show up. The next morning Ronald's sled was parked on the Seip's porch—with another one alongside it.

WIFE-SLAYER



Edward Rodia, 40-year-old shipyard worker, arrested by Camdan, N.J., police, charged with the murder of his estranged wife, Mrs. Elvira Rodia, 33, also shown above. Mrs. Rodia's body, terribly slashed by a razor, was discovered on the outskirts of Camden.

CHEF'S NOTABLE RECORD

Southend, England (CP) — Some repatriated Southend-on-Sea prisoners of war gave the town's mayor a souvenir obtained from a German train guard—it was an ash-tray bearing a German price tag but with the crest of the borough of Southend-on-Sea.

Two Suggestions

Mr. H. B. Fetterly, one of the citizens whom Mayor Rollins called on for a few remarks at the council's inaugural on Monday, made a couple of suggestions to the council which they might, he thought, take up, and which would please the people.

One proposal was to take steps to eliminate the blowing of whistles of trains passing through the city. There are a good many crossings in the city and the whistling is particularly noticeable. If some step, in conformity with public safety, could be taken to eliminate or reduce the number of times for the blowing of train whistles, there is no doubt the public would appreciate such an action.

Mr. Fetterly also drew the council's notice to the lack of complete identification of the city streets by street signs. In proof of this he pointed out that many citizens are now disturbed in the late hours at night and early in the morning by persons seeking direction about the city. This situation is complicated by the greater number of residents in Belleville today and the large number of strangers in the city for the first time or for a short period of time. Street signs in prominent positions for motorists and pedestrians to see would save visitors' and citizens' time.

Hitler's Record of Prophecy

Hitler's record as a prophet and a military strategist through "intuition" is surely at a low ebb. The Ottawa Journal has chosen four statements of his to show how Germany and he have fallen:—

Hitler in 1941: The year 1941 will bring the completion of the greatest victory in our history.

Hitler in 1942: The year 1942—we will all pray to God for this—will bring the decision for the salvation of our nation and the nations allied with us.

Hitler in 1943: The day will come when one of the contending parties in this struggle will collapse. That it will not be Germany, we know.

Hitler in 1944: In this war there will be no victors and losers, but merely survivors and annihilated.

And people will hope that long before the end of this year there will be no Hitler in a position to make any more prophecies.

Masaryk's Views

Jan Masaryk, Foreign Minister of Czechoslovakia, the first state against which Hitler exercised his policy of aggression after his forced "anschluss" or union with Austria, has some views on the after-war era. These he expressed in Washington. As a Czechoslovak, his views are naturally of importance as the first blow of the Nazis was felt by Czechoslovakia where Hitler with perfidy and utter defiance of principle and betrayal of his promises made at Munich behaved like a savage of the lowest depths of degredation in the treatment of the Czech people. Brutal disregard of the nations was everywhere seen and the world then knew for certain that Hitler was aiming at world conquest, with the Czechoslovakians as the first victims.

So the words of the son of the founder and first President of Czechoslovakia carry import to the world of the United Nations. He foresees Hitler taken care of by the military or ending his life at the end of his bloody tyranny, he sees two types of war criminal trials, those of the outstanding criminals who will be taken care of quickly and then those for the lesser ones. He sees the need of British and American troops to help clean up the Nazi terrorists after the war.

Mr. Masaryk foresees a period of quarantine for Germany in which she will have to prove herself worthy before the quarantine can be lifted.

He has a hopeful view of the Axis satellite countries which he says need to have the crust of the totalitarian sympathizers at the top shorn off and then he believes these peoples will be able to join the peace-loving nations.

Estimates Mr. Churchill

Mr. Churchill has become more than a great political and military leader. He is, in his own lifetime legendary, a symbol, the personification of his people.

When one thinks "Britain," one sees his face, and hears his voice and the word uttered by that voice. It is that which makes him unique, as no other leader is unique. For he is not merely the leader of his nation; he is a timely apotheosis of the nation.

He is subject to mistake and error, as a nation is. His virtues though, are the virtues that every British child has been taught by his history and his great personalities to admire. Above all, and as the parent of all virtue, courage generosity and chivalry. Thus Churchill appears to his people as they would wish to appear themselves and in his character they find that which they would unconsciously emulate.

He has exactly the same faith in his nation that he has in himself, neither more or less. Certainly no other conservative would say of the Communists of his country, "They are Englishmen, and I fear no Englishman."

At the time of his greatest grandeur when Britain under his last minute leadership stood alone and staring into the terrible eyes of defeat, he seemed to drag the dead out of their coffins and stand them on their feet, to support him and England—Eliabeth and Wellington, Drake and Nelson, Cromwell and Pitt—as though to say: These are England; these are you; these live on and fight in and through you.

War Develops Desert

After more than two years of exploration work in and around the extinct volcano of Kohi-Sultan, it is announced in Khelat, Baluchistan, reasonable quantities of sulphur can be obtained for Indian industry in a region described as India's "Western Desert." The operations began as a war expedient in 1941 by the Utilization Branch of India's Geological Survey. Considerable quantities of sulphur ore containing 50 per cent pure sulphur have been concentrated in localities known as Batal and ower Niri, comparatively accessible regions. Large amounts of lower grade ore can yield additional sulphur if mixed with the ores of richer quality.

Mussolini had a luxurious flying boat for himself and now Mussolini is the world knows not where but the comfortable sea-boat is being used by those who can make better use of it than the former Duce did. It is being used on special missions by the Allies. It is also officially stated that a number of other Italian flying boats are being used for sea rescues by the United Nations.

Hitler has had to admit that his U-boat war has been a failure. And he places the failure as due to "one single invention of our enemy's." That is a hard admission for a man to make who belittled the courage and fortitude and the scientific skill of the democratic peoples of earth. Now he has had to admit British and other Allied skill. Of course there are many factors which have helped to spike Hitler's plan to score victory on the seas.

The news the other day told of a new chemical weapon against body lice, the carriers of typhus fever. The anti-louse chemical under experiment rendered a room destructive to house flies for three months and wide post-war use is seen of it as an effective means against other pests that plague man, beast and plant. The American chemical is now limited to military use. The war has produced many new combinations of chemicals and devices which in after-war days will doubtless be utilized generally.

JUST FOLKS

A CHILD'S WISH

Perhaps—although I quite forget
  Just what I thought when four or five
  And both my parents were alive
And oft about me used to fret—
I wished that grown I soon would be
And have some rights allowed to me.

For instance children get no pie
  Unless they eat their spinach up
  Or drink of milk a second cup,
But grown-ups pass the spinach by.
"No thank you" is all they have to say
And pie is served them anyway.

Now children small this wrong behold
  And wish when they "no, thank you!" say
  We'd take the spinach dish away
And never frown at them or scold
And never say and mean it, too:
"No spinach? Then no pie for you."

I don't remember, as I say,
  Just what I felt about it all
  When I was but a youngster small,
But I suspect I used to pray
The time would quickly come when I Could spinach pass and still have pie.

"UNHAPPY NEW YEAR!"

Canadian Scene A Century Ago

By J. L. G.

The fortitude of the settlers showed itself in many ways. No matter what had to be done, it was done energetically and cheerfully. Even to the making of ink. . . Housewives were still swapping recipes for home-made inks in the middle decades of the 19th century. But they did not go to the Great Outdoors for plants and herbs to be boiled into ink-essences of various colours. . . .as their mothers had to do. There were plenty of shops where "superior" ingredients could be obtained for inks. A type of ink recommended for winter as well as summer (because freezing did not make it paler) was made as follows: "Take two quarts rain water, half a pound of nutgalls, three ounces gum-Arabic, three ounces sulphate of iron. Soak the nutgalls in three-quarters of the water, and the gum-Arabic in half the remaining water warmed, and the sulphate of iron in the remainder. Let them stand in the separate vessels forty-eight hours, then mix together and the ink is ready to be used".

Sugar and ink don't usually chum around together, but they can do good work in partnership. This was known 100 years ago. School girls and boys needing copies of writings put a little sugar into the ink they were using. They laid on the writing a sheet of unsized paper, dampened with a sponge, and pressed the whole with a moderately warm iron. This gave a fairly legible replica—not as clear as that obtained today through the use of carbon paper.

Like a fragrant memory from the past comes another recipe: this time for dried scents to put into sachets: "Half pound of lavender flowers, half ounce of dried thyme, half ounce of dried mint, quarter ounce of cloves, quarter ounce of caraway seeds, one ounce of common salt. The lavender flowers must be rubbed from the stalk, the thyme and mint reduced to powder, and the cloves and caraway seeds bruised in a mortar. The whole should then be mixed with the salt, which must be well dried before it is used. When the ingredients have been thoroughly blended, the compound may be put into silk or muslin bags for sachets".

Naturally the lone man without a gun was at a disadvantage when wolves hove in view. It is not surprising that many a traveller made a dash for the nearest and highest tree and climbed for dear life. Or that he kicked up his heels in a sprint towards a neighboring hamlet. The settler riding horse-back could get away speedily. . .but sometimes he had a thrilling tale to relate of further adventures. For instance, when the thaws began in the late winter he'd feel the ice give 'way under his steed as he crossed a stream, and barely reach the far bank. Or in summer, he'd pass over a floating bridge and, looking back, see the bridge disintegrating the current taking charge and sweeping the whole structure quickly downstream. . . . Bridges were few and far between in the old days. When the makeshift floating bridges were carried away, the traveller was forced to delay his trip until a new bridge could be built, or else proceed to a fordable section of the river.

Such delays often caused great suffering. If supplies were low when the settler began his journey to town then there was dire need of food by the time he was expected home. As time passed and the traveller did not come—for bridges take time to build—the hungry ones in the homestead in desperation, dug up the potatoes they had planted for seed.

Premier Drew's Work in England

(Ottawa Journal Editorial)

We shall hear more of it later on, but clear it is already that Premier Drew's visit to England was no junket-tour, but a trip of hard work with good results. Ontario House in London is to be re-opened, with an excellent site, and British industrialists have been informed of post-war opportunities in this province, and the British people told about what is offered here for immigrants, and some spade-work done for Ontario markets.

All this is the legitimate work of a Premier of this province, and it is infinitely more important and profitable than political or party controversy around Queen's Park. Col. Drew is clearly the sort of politician whose horizons are not bounded by petty party patronage matters at home; he sees the future of Ontario on a large canvas and has the vigor and imagination to try to make that future what it ought to be.

For this province, too long afflicted with petty feuds and vendettas, this is a welcome change.

Since a bounty of $4 was handed out for a wolf's head, it paid Canada's settlers to be good shots. Records inform us that many pioneers cleared $100 to $200 for bagging the nocturnal marauders. They did well, too, with bears, which fetched $2 a head.

Leases for Multiple Dwellings Frozen By Prices Board

Montreal, Jan. 5 —(CP)— Leases for multiple dwellings across Canada became frozen today, following an announcement by the Prices Board Tuesday night that tenants in such dwellings "may not be evicted during good behavior."

The announcement said the new order, which in effect rescinds most of the provisions of Order 294, would become effective today. Order 294 provided that landlords could evict tenants on six months' notice if they wanted the dwelling for themselves or for relatives.

Landlords can still evict if they want the dwelling for themselves under certain conditions, while landlords of cottages and single dwellings are not affected by the order cancelling eviction notices already sent.

Here's how the new order works out:

Tenants in multiple dwellings—apartments, triplexes, duplexes and flats—may not be evicted except in certain cases, and eviction notices already given, effective May 1, are void.

A landlord may still evict a tenant from such a dwelling providing he needs the dwelling for himself, but to do so he must serve a new notice to vacate on a special Prices Board form. Such a notice must be served before Jan. 31 for May 1, and after that it must be served six months ahead and not to become effective in mid-winter.

No landlord can evict from such a dwelling on the grounds he needs the dwelling for a relative—he must use it himself or let the tenant stay.

NYASALAND COTTON

Zomba (CP) — The latest cotton crop in Nyasaland was the largest to be produced since 1935. Of the total of 7,691 tons, 1,141 tons were produced by native tenants on private estates.

CHINESE IN BIBLE

Some authorities say that it is barely possible that the Chinese are referred to in the Bible.

In Isaiah 49:12 the prophet says: "Behold, these shall come from far: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim."

Bible scholars tell us that the correct translation here would be 'the land of the Sinites," since the Hebrew original refers to a people rather than a country.

"The land of Sinim," or "the land of the Sinites," obviously refers to a distant people to the east or south of Palestine.

Most authorities question the suggestion that Isaiah was speaking of China, but it is nevertheless a fascinating conjecture that he did so.

The Greek geographer Ptolemy, who lived in the second century A.D., mentioned an Oriental people under the name of "Sinai," supposedly the Chinese.

"Sinai" as used by Ptolemy and by later Greek and Roman writers may have been a Western corruption of the Chinese Tsin, which occurs in many place names and is the source of Tsing, one of the native names of China.

Both the Arabs and the Syrians, close lingual kinsmen of the Hebrews, referred to China as "sin" or "tsin."

It is possible that Ptolemy merely adapted this word to his vocabulary.

The Septuagint, a Greek translation of the Old Testament made at Alexandria long before Ptolmey's time, translates "Sinim" in Isaiah as "Persians."

There is a tribe of people called "Sina" who live on the foothills of the Hindu-Kush mountains in Afghanistan.

Despite the similarity in names, it is not believed that Isaiah referred to Mt. Sinai or the Wilderness of Sin to the southwest of Palestine and comparatively near.

Nor is it probable that the prophet had in mind "the Sinite," a tribe in near-by Phoenicia mentioned in Genesis 10:17.

At any rate, "Sino," used instead of "Chinese" in such combinations and words as "Sino-Japanese," "Sino-Soviet," "Sino-Russian," "sinology," "sinologist" and "sinologue," is derived from the Greek and Latin "Sinai," and is preferred to "Chino' because it is more euphonious.

REID—KNOTT

Beauchamp Payne united in marriage Betty Audrey Knott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Knott, to LAC. Wilfred McCrouf Reid, R.C.A.F., Mount Pleasant, P.E.I., son of Mr. and Mrs. Norman Reid, Dundas, Ont.

Professor E. Wheatley, Mus. Bac., A.R.C.O., played softly throughout the ceremony.

Given in marriage by her uncle, Mr. Andrew Knott, the bride was lovely in her long white sheer gown, fashioned with shirred bodice, rounded neckline designed with silver bead trimming, bishop sleeves and full sweeping skirt. Her finger-tip veil of embroidered tulle illusion was caught to her hair by a Mary Stuart coronet and she carried a colonial bouquet of pink Delight roses, forget-me-nots, violets and stevia.

Miss Margaret Lane, as maid of honor, was wearing blue net over taffeta with bolero. Her matching shoulder-length veil fell in graceful folds from a halo headdress and she carried a colonial bouquet of Briarcliffe roses, forget-me-nots, baby 'mums and stevia.

HUMPHREY—ARNOTT

Evergreens and tall white candles formed the picturesque and impressive setting in Tabernacle United Church today, January 5th, at three-thirty, when Ethel Louise Arnott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Arnott, became the bride of Norman Edward Humphrey, only son of Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Humphrey. The Rev. Dr. A. J. W. Myers officiated at the ceremony. The wedding music was played by Mrs. M. P. Duff.

Entering the church on the arm of her father to the strains of the Wedding March from Lohengrin, the bride was a picture of loveliness in her wedding gown of white brocaded satin, fashioned with sweetheart neckline, fitted bodice, full skirt falling in sweeping folds and long sleeves ending in points over her wrists. Her veil of silk net, caught to her dark hair by a coronet fashioned in Mary Stuart design, draped softly around her head and fell in soft folds to her finger tips. She carried a sheaf of Better Time roses.

Miss Florence Goodman, Napanee, as maid of honor and Miss Helen Arnott, sister of the bride, as bridesmaid, were dressed similarly in exquisite gowns of turquoise blue brocaded taffeta. Clever Costume Jewelry

By ALICE ALDEN

THE PARADOXICAL situation of the basic frock that demands plenty of costume jewelry to set it off, and the limitations of materials imposed on costume jewelry designers, has had clever repercussions. Designers have seized on all sorts of new and different materials with which to work. Nina Wolf uses blistered seashell-nature-browned for a clever clip, which she has studded with simulated stones and pearls. The earrings in amber plastic have turquoise bead centres.

The Marry-Go-Round

'Til The Lawyer Comes

"What to do 'til the lawyer comes" is something every woman should know. First aid to fractured marriages would often save the sufferers from a painful and unnecessary operation.

A reader of this column asks me to repeat some rules, published here some years ago, which might prevent her best friend from rushing to the lawyer, the moment she feels a divorce coming on.

Why is it that we women always want to DO something, in an emotional crisis, when the best thing to do is to stop and think? Stop the flow of your emotions and use a pulmotor on your common sense. Then, sit down calmly and diagnose your case.

Take your own temperature, and find out whether it is just a touch of over-heated temper and high blood pressure or a real case of chilled love which is causing the emotional disturbance.

Ask yourself if you are really serious — or if this is just an impulsive gesture, to "make him sorry."

Do you honestly want to get rid of him — or do you only want to get rid of his family? Or of the boredom of point-ration housekeeping? Or of the other woman?

Compare him with the husbands of all the other women you know, and honestly decide whether you would exchange him for any of them. Honestly — now! This is the gold-test. Are you romantically interested in any other man — or is this only a touch of jealousy, hurt vanity or liver trouble?

How much alimony do you think he can pay — and how long do you think you can make him pay it? There's many a skip twixt the promise and the check — and remember that, while alimony won't get on your nerves, it is not much company around the house in a blackout.

Can you visualize yourself going to the theatre or night-clubs alone? And do you think you prefer waiting for an uncertain Boy Friend's telephone-call to waiting for a husband's tardy but practically certain arrival?

Decide, once and for all, whether you prefer eating alone in a restaurant — or squabbling across a tasty home-cooked dinner, with plenty of vitamins. And finally, make up your mind whether you will sigh with relief or regret, when you miss the sound of his key in the latch, evenings.

When you have positively decided all of these things, you can see your lawyer — if you still want to. But remember that parting with a husband is like having a tooth extracted. This is going to hurt a little—when the anaesthetic wears off.

It is always better to save a tooth—or a marriage — if you can possibly do it with first aid.

Girl Drivers Doing Good Job

By MARGARET ECKER,
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Somewhere in England, Jan. 5—(CP)—Men as civilians may rant at women drivers—but the Canadian Army Overseas is glad, and proud, to see a Canadian Women's Army Corps girl behind the wheel of a motor transport.

"The CWACS who drive for me certainly do a fine job—I wish the men drivers did as well," said L. Cpl. Jack Brooks of Toronto, in charge of the tranpsort section of a large Canadian Army Camp here.

"Look here," he said, pulling up the hood of an army staff car. "No engine could have been cleaner, more free of dirt and grease. Pte. Rosemary Ball of Vancouver drives this car. But they're all as well kept as that."

But the proof of the driver is out on the road and it doesn't take CWAC drivers many miles to prove they can handle their cars.

Pte. Edith Hill of Montreal drove us around London one day on a tour of CWAC barracks. She swooped in and out of lanes and winding streets and didn't seem to have a moment's confusion even when darkness came and a big American truck loomed at us on the wrong side of the road.

"They're always doing that," she laughed. "It took all of us a long time to get used to the left hand drive."

PINE GROVE W. I.

The closing meeting of the year was held Thursday, Dec. 30, at the home of Mrs. J. H. Frederick, with a small attendance of nine members and one visitor. The president was the presiding officer. Accounts were ordered paid and a letter was read from Mrs. Heasman. The secretary was to write a letter of thanks to Mrs. Hudson and letters to Mrs. Holmes and Mrs. Heasman wishing them both a speedy recovery. Current events were given in a questionnaire by Mrs. H. Dafoe. Collection was $2.20. Mrs. F. Finkle, convener of the topic "Christmas Recollections," conducted the following program: Reading, "Christmas Spirits," Mrs. L. Finkle; "Yuletide Legends," Mrs. F. Campbell; "Mistletoe," Mrs. H. Coulter; "There Was An Inn," Mrs. C. Ross; "Traditional Christmas," Mrs. C. Marisette. A sedate professor and his rollicking poem, "The Night Before Christmas" was read by Mrs. F. Finkle. Mrs. J. H. Frederick read a poem, Mrs. C. Marisette gave a contest on Turkey. A lunch was served and a social hour enjoyed by all.

Nurse Describes Life in Africa

A Canadian Army Hospital Somewhere in England (CP) — Nursing Sister Frances Tetlow of Welland, Ontario, doesn't look on front-line nursing as either adventurous or dangerous, even if her tropical experiences have landed her in hospital.

Jaundice and a form of arthritis that crippled her knee brought her back to England but she limps cheerfully around the hospital on crutches thinking longingly of her life in a tent hospital on the African desert.

"It took them a long time to convince me I should come back to England," she said. "Maybe they're right—but I would like to have stayed in North Africa. It wasn't exactly exciting—and there was nothing dangerous about it."

Miss Tetlow was with a Canadian General Hospital that moved to Africa in July. There were no buildings, so they set up their hospital under canvas on baked earth that turned to gumbo every time it rained.

It was so hot in the daytime the nurses wore khaki uniforms of light drill, and so cold at night they wore heavy battledress.

"It didn't take us long to get used to the life," she said. "The food was good. And we didn't see any activity—only a few planes at the time of the invasion of Sicily.

"Wounded Canadian boys coming back from the field were glad to have Canadian nurses. They said we talked their language."

Beside her bed was a beaming rubber "Ferdinand the Bull" — "He goes everywhere with me, ever since I left Canada," she said.

"You know—the more I see of the world, the better I like Canada. Africa is interesting, but it isn't as romantic as we thought it would be—it's mostly smelly Arab towns."

Miss Tetlow, who trained in the Toronto General Hospital, came to England with the first group of Canadian nurses in June, 1940.

FASHION FLASHES

IT'S GOING TO BE BRIGHT this spring judging by the orders placed for toppers in such shades as lemon yellow and rosy red. Mostly these toppers are cut on easy, casual lines and are single-breasted.

A NEW USE for buttons appears in the form of button costume jewelry. A novel design is a lapel pin composed of red and white and white and red plaid and striped buttons and plain buttons in flower form on a shiny red plastic stem.

IT'S FUN to give a big boost to simple frocks of the basic variety, with the aid of exciting accessories such as a pale pink taffeta sash embroidered in gold, bright green and lilac sequins on the ends that tie into a big, smashing bow. Not difficult to make and most effective with a black frock.

YEAR AFTER YEAR navy trimmed with touches of white expresses the spirit of sartorial Spring. A smart frock is of navy wool, fashioned in slim lines, trimmed with narrow white pique around the neckline, with similar piping on the sleeves. A matching bellhop jacket has tiny white ball buttons.

EVERY TIME we go out at night we note more long skirted formal frocks. Enjoying her soldier escort's admiring glances was a slim beauty wearing a black crepe sheath with a deep square decolletage outlined with black silk fringe. Fringe edges the narrow cascade ruffle down the side of the side-draped floor-length skirt.

NO END to the pretty blouses seen in showroom and shop. Heaven blue silk sheer is used for a charming blouse made with a neckline that ties into an enormous self bow. Tiny stone-set silver studs for closing and there are matching buttons on the tabs of the long, full sleeves.

GOOD NEIGHBOR fashions are coming to the fore what with beautiful accessories and fabrics sent to us from Latin America. From Uruguay comes a wonderful fleece fabric-dyed in melting pastels and ideal for topcoats, as it is warm yet light. We saw it made into toppers of lemon yellow and cloud pink, detailed with self-toned saddle stitching and lined in satin to tone.

NOVELTIES abound in fur styles. A very clever design in a stole of silver fox worked so as not to be too heavy at the top, and shaped at the waistline where invisible loops allow it to be attached to coat or dress belt to give the idea of a tuxedo affect.

A GREETING to Spring comes in the form of a postilion hat of pearl gray felt appliqued with mauve-pink and lavender and purple velvet violets, misted with a pink veil.

Gifts for Wedding Anniversaries

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

Would you please publish the gifts that apply to the various wedding anniversaries? The only lists I can find are short ones, giving only the most "important" anniversaries; that is, first, fifth, tenth, twentieth and so forth. But I am particularly anxious to get a more detailed list, that is, the gifts for the years between. Is there such a detailed and up-to-date list?

Anne

Here's the up-to-date list of gifts now customarily applied to wedding anniversaries:

First—Paper.
Second—Cotton.
Third—Leather (or Linen).
Fourth—Silk (or Books).
Fifth—Wood (or Clocks).
Sixth—Iron.
Seventh—Copper, bronze or brass.
Eighth—Electrical appliances (or Pottery.)
Ninth—Pottery.
Tenth—Tin (or Aluminum.)
Eleventh—Steel.

Nowadays, as a matter of fact, the symbols for the wedding anniversaries, especially for the ones before the fifteenth, are not taken very seriously and unless the invitation specifies the type of gift, it is usually not considered necessary to limit your gifts to a certain kind. Unless the symbol is to be featured at the party, it's really so much more sensible to give a gift you think the guests of honor will appreciate, will find useful in their home.

Also, for the later anniversaries, symbolized by jewels, a joint gift of value, perhaps embodying the jewel, perhaps of the color of the jewel, is given by the family, or by relatives and intimate friends. Other guests often send flowers or other gifts in the "jewel" color.

Introducing a Soldier

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

When I introduce a friend of mine, who is Private First Class, should I introduce him as "Private First Class John Jones" or as "Private John Jones?"

L. W.

In an introduction "First Class" is omitted. Just as, when we are introducing a lieutenant, we say, "Lieutenant Jones," and don't use "First" or "Second."

PERIOD OF MOURNING SHORTENED

Mrs. Colin P. Kelly, widow of the flier who sacrificed his life to save his companions in a bomber in the Philippines Battle was married a little while ago to Lieutenant J. Watson Pedlow.

She said, in speaking of her marriage: "Life must go on," which seems to be the current opinion when bereavement strikes home. The hero's widow said of her remarriage: "Of course, you can never forget the past, but I don't think the past should affect the present so much that there can be no future. Every woman whose husband is killed—either in war or peace—has to face the problem of how to lead her life. She can retreat into a shell of memories, or she can realize that life will and must go on."

How differently things were regarded a generation or two ago when Queen Victoria's mourning for her husband set a pattern on both sides of the Atlantic. She wore widow's weeds for thirty-nine years; she refused to have articles in the rooms occupied by her beloved Arthur disturbed. And Strachey even mentions that she had hot shaving water brought to the Prince Consort's dressing room for years after he had passed away.

It was not until she celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of her reign as Queen of England, that her son, the Duke of Connaught, persuaded her to have a white ribbon introduced into her immemorial black bonnet, as she rode out to take the heartfelt applause of her people.

One doesn't have to be so old as to remember the apparently inconsolable mourning that women wore for deceased husbands. After three years of that terrible corrugated iron-looking crepe, widows passed into a season known as "lightening her blacks." There was no Dickensonian humor about the expression. It was seriously said of the period when the widow introduced a dash of lavender or a bit of white in her mourning.

And many a waiting admirer took this dash of white or lavender as the time to "pay his respects", which might or might not develop into something warmer as her bonnets grew gayer, and finally emerged from lavender into colors.

It was during the last World War that word was passed along that patriotic women should not assume mourning. The taboo, I believe, became a law in Germany where the numbers of black-clad women had its effect. Today, one seldom sees the "deep mourning" of a generation ago.

Surgery Sometimes Avoided by Dissolving Kidney Stones

Physicians have been trying to find a means of dissolving stones that form in various parts of the body, but without much apparent success. Surgery is still the generally accepted method of treatment.

Stones may form in the urinary bladder and in the kidneys, and often are caught in the ureter, a little tube which leads from the kidney to the bladder. Kidney and bladder stones may vary in their chemical make-up. Some of them are composed of what is known as calcium phosphate and magnesium phosphate, substances which come from the foods we eat.

Doctors Howard I. Suby and Fuller Albright, of Harvard Medical School, have prepared a solution which they think can be successfully employed in dissolving this kind of kidney and bladder stone. They have used it for a number of patients, and in most instances have been able to get rid of the stones, either completely or partially.

The solution they used is composed of citric acid, magnesium oxide and sodium carbonate, dissolved in water. Other solutions made up of citrates have been employed for this purpose, but have been found irritating to the lining membrane of the bladder. The solution which they use has not been found irritating to any extent.

Before the solution is employed, X-rays should be taken. These help in determining whether the stone is of the type which can be dissolved. By means of air injected into the bladder, and ureters and pelvis of the kidney, the exact location of the stone can be determined.

In carrying out the treatment, a narrow tube, known as a ureteral catheter, is passed into the ureter, and the solution is pumped through it into the pelvis of the kidney. A second catheter is passed into the bladder, so that the bladder may be emptied without the urine causing irritation as it passes over the ureteral catheter. The catheter in the ureter may be left in position for weeks or months if necessary. From time to time, X-ray plates may be taken to determine how rapidly the stone is being dissolved.

When this treatment is used, it is advised that the patient be given one of the sulfa drugs, such as sulfathiazole, to prevent or combat infection.

While this treatment is not useful in all types of kidney stones, it would seem to be well worth trying in these cases in which the stone is of the type that will dissolve. By means of this treatment, operation may sometimes be avoided.

Coming From Behind to Win Belleville Juniors Open Season With 8-3 Victory Over Trenton

Locals Have Makings of Fine Team When They Reach Condition Peak

MOHER LEADS SCORERS

Rallying strongly in the final two stanzas, Belleville's 1944 junior O.H.A. squad gladdened the hearts of some 500 hockey fans at the Hume Arena Tuesday night, when they won the opening of the season over the Trenton kids by an 8 to 3 score at the Hume Arena.

The teams were tied at 3-3 at the end of the initial frame when the game was tied up on no less than four occasions. However, that ended the Trenton scoring as Belleville scored two in the second and a trio of counters in the third to run their night's count to eight. Dick Fitzpatrick, former Trenton goalie, took over the net-minding for Belleville in the second stanza after Maurice Rollins started, and Fitzpatrick took that old toll on his former teammates to blank them for the final 40 minutes of play.

Moher Leads Scorers

Jerry Moher led the scoring for the homesters notching three counters while Billie Holway and Bernie Meagher sank the boot heel into the Trenton twine twice each and Johnny Semark registered the odd counter. Holway, Day, Barrett and J. Wardhaugh added to their scoring prowess with two assists apiece. Frank Hamilton with two goals and Joe Scott with one accounted for all of Coach Stan Jackson's visitors' goals, despite Trenton's strong rally in the last period when the visitors were continually thwarted by Fitzpatrick at the Belleville goal-mouth with some sterling net-minding.

Holway Scores First Goal

To Holway went the opportunity of scoring the first goal of the season as Billie broke through to miss the open net by a fraction of an inch and Meagher was back on a corner pass from Holway to hit the post behind Harvey. Doug Day drew the first penalty of the season, when he took Lesperance out of the play inside the Belleville zone. Hamilton broke from his own end and stick-handling to centre ice broke fast and went in alone to open the season's scoring in favor of Trenton shortly after the five-minute mark and while Day was still decorating the cooler bench. All were even, when Jack Wardhaugh raced around left defence and passed to Moher, who packed the corner beautifully to knot the count. Holway carried the Trenton defence out of position and set up one for Meagher, who also made sure at close range giving the locals a goal advantage, but it was not for long as Hamilton rapped in his second counter taking Filion's goal-mouth pass, that gave Rollins no chance. Joe Scott put Trenton one up when he backhanded Taylor's wide pass into the Belleville cage, as the locals showed signs of tiring and Trenton took the initiative giving Rollins a busy session, but Maurice staved off additional scoring by the visitors until Day and Holway combined neatly for the final goal of the stanza, that ended 3-3. Taylor and Bush were chased for mixing matters at the bell.

Score Two in Second

In the second round Rosetti dumped Lemorre for a cheap penalty and Fitzpatrick was given a busy session, as Coach Jackson moved five to the attack and swarmed the Belleville cage without results. Filion and Harry Wardhaugh tangled and were chased before Harvey came out to beat Jack Wardhaugh and Billie Holway from what appeared to be a sure counter. Holway fired a long pass to Moher at the centre line and Moher made no mistake as he only had to skirt one defenceman and score. Some minor penalties were seen before Meagher, Barrett and Jack Wardhaugh got together on a neat three-ply play, that saw Meagher bulge the twine and the period ended 5-3 for Belleville.

In the last stanza Trenton carried much of the play in a desperate effort to score, but it was the Doran-Holway sextette, that ran up the goals. Holway scoring from Day, Moher getting his third from Bush and Semark counting the last goal on a pass from Barrett.

Seen at the Game

As Coach Toots Holway has been confined to his home through illness all week he viewed the game from the office gondola, while Manager Jack Doran handled the substitution work from the bench. Art Black of Trenton and Fred Reid of Belleville took care of the timing, while Ken Watt was the local goal umpire.

Directly after the playing of the National Anthem. His Worship Mayor Rollins faced the puck and the O.H.A. season was officially under way.

Prior to the game J. E. Semain, vice president of the Belleville branch of the Army and Navy Veterans in Canada, No. 201, entered the Belleville dressing room and presented the management of the team with a cheque for $35.00, as gift from the "Vets", to be used for the purchase of hockey sticks for both the local junior and juvenile teams. The gesture was highly appreciated.

Lionel "Gunner" Arnott, "Bouncer" Holway and Bill Green, three of former Belleville hockey stars of two decades ago or more, took in the game last night and are still wondering if the kids of today are as good as their puck ancestors. Bill's son, Doug Green, plays defence and at one stage in the game Green and Billie Holway were on defence for Belleville. "It's a long time since a Green and a Holway teamed up for a Belleville defence pair," remarked Bill recalling the old ice battles with Kingston and Cornwall.

Local fans immediately recognized Harry Filion, younger brother of George Filion, another of Trenton's good hockey players. And also Lemorre and Lesperance were given a hand. Fans didn't take to the new centre line business, but Referee "Seedy" St. Louis showed he's been reading the official book and turned in a good chore of whistle tooting.

Drop around and see the kids, you'll like 'em.

Canadiens Run Latest Winning Streak to Seven by Defeating Toronto Leafs at Home by 6-3

Win Gives Habitants Their 12th Triumph in 13 Starts at Home

BRUINS BEAT HAWKS

By The Canadian Press

Sooner or later sports writers are going to run out of adjectives for the superiority which has enabled Montreal Canadiens to make a parade of the National Hockey League race.

Canadiens survived their first 14 games without defeat and the latest Montreal feat is a seven-game victory streak which has stretched their league lead to 5½ games over Boston Bruins.

Canadiens won no. 7 last night before 12,730 home fans, walloping Toronto Maple Leafs 6-3 for their 12th triumph in 13 starts at Montreal Forum. Bruins held the Habitants to a 2-2 tie at Montreal in the first game of the season.

Bruins made it a good night for home clubs by collapsing Chicago Black Hawks 6-4 on third period scores by Art Jackson and Dit Clapper. The result sent Bruins into undisputed possession of second place, two points ahead of Leafs.

Art Jackson also counted the first Boston goal to share honors with Herb Cain, who now has collected 26 goals in 25 games. Bill Cowley snatched two assists to swell his league-leading total to 52 points.

Snaps League Record

Cowley thus boosted his lifetime assist total to 258, snapping the National League record of 256 held by Frankie Boucher of New York Rangers. The Bruins, besides arriving at their own six-goal total, also lent a helping hand in three of the four Chicago goals. Shortly after the first faceoff, a Bruin defenceman deflected the puck into his own cage for a tally credited to Clint Smith. Twice in the second period, clearing shots by Boston rearguards were intercepted and converted into goals by Cully Dahlstrom and Fido Purpur.

The only "honest" Chicago goal was made by Doug Bentley while Bruins played a man short late in the first period.

The Montreal-Toronto game marked the debut against Montreal of Paul Bibeault, former Canadiens goalie recently signed by Leafs.

But Canadiens swept to the front early, Maurice Richard scoring twice before Don Webster got Toronto's first goal. Fern Majeau, Phil Watson, Butch Bouchard and Toe Blake rounded out Montreal scoring while Lorne Carr achieved Toronto's two other goals.

Montreal University Admitted to League

Montreal, Jan. 5 — (CP) — University of Montreal was admitted into the Quebec Senior Hockey League last night, and a schedule for a four-team circuit covering the remainder of the season was drawn up.

The University club had been previously admitted, but later league members expressed doubt as to the calibre of a team the club could ice and demanded a player list and a $2,000 bond.

The University posted its bond at the meeting last night, and submitted its player list. After a short discussion, the remaining three teams in the loop voted to admit the new squad.

The new schedule, the fourth this season in the chequered career of the league, calls for the season's opener at Ottawa Saturday night, when the new University squad will make its bow against Commandos.

Montreal fans will see their first game of the revised schedule Sunday, with U. of M. at home to Ottawa, while Royals go to Quebec.

The Dec. 26 game at Quebec, when Aces swamped Royals, was retained as part of the revised schedule, giving Aces the present leadership of the loop.

(In Toronto, President Pete Campbell of the Toronto club declared there was no chance for big-league ball in the Ontario capital without Sunday games.)

Guelph (CP)—Two of Ontario's leading five-pin bowlers will meet here Saturday for a challenge purse of $100, the trundlers being George Hall of Guelph and Charles Loxton of Sarnia. OSHAWA WINS 11th GAME OF SEASON TO HEAD GROUP

Defeats St. Catharines, Leader of Group Two, by 7-5 Count

ALL TEAMS IN ACTION

By The Canadian Press

Oshawa Generals won their fifth game of the season and continued on top in group one of the Junior "A" O.H.A. series by administering a 7-5 defeat to the Falcons at St. Catharines last night, for the latter's third setback of the winter in 14 scheduled appearances. The Falcons continued to hold a lead over Galt Kists in group two. Bill Ezinicki and Bob Love set the scoring pace for Generals with two goals apiece but Thorpe of Falcons was the star performer, notching three of the losers' five counters.

In the double-header at Toronto, both St. Michael's College and Hamilton had to come from behind in the third period to dispose of their respective opponents by one-goal margins. St. Mikes scored three in the final frame to win 5-4 from Galt Kists. Bob Schnurr, former Kitchener ace, punched the net four times in an outstanding performance for the Saints while Frank Dunlap, who had played for the Toronto N.H.L. Leafs early in the season, secured the single. Galt's four counters were divided by Ubraico, Morland, Podolsky and Curik.

Scored Early Goal

Toronto Young Rangers scored the only goal of the first period against Hamilton but finally bowed to the visitors 3-2 when Comfort and Tomiuk counted one each in the third stanza.

Stratford Kroehlers held off Port Colborne Recreationists to win 3-2 at Stratford, after Sicoli had scored the only goal of the first period with Kaiser of Ports tying it up. In the last period, Stoddard and Tindal counted for Kroehlers, with Kadosky scoring the second for Port Colborne.

There was no scoring in the first frame at Brantford in the encounter between Toronto Marlboros and Lions and the latter went into a 3-1 lead in the second only to see the Dukes run in four during the last period to grab a 5-4 verdict. Leading scorer for Toronto was James, with two, and Junkin, Harding and MacNabney had one each. For Brantford, Turner, Hewson, Davis and Jeffreys shared the four goals.

Efforts to Form City Hockey Loop Will Be Made

Efforts to organize a Belleville City Hockey League will be attempted at the Hume Arena shortly after eight o'clock this evening in the Board room.

Already three teams have signified intentions of sponsoring teams in the porposed City loop, Reliance A. C., Stephen Adamson Company and Baker's Fruit Market. However, it is the hope of those seeking to revive City League hockey that other local industrial firms and business houses will be officially represented tonight.

"Three teams do not round out an ideal league, but an additional one to three more clubs would elevate the group into something worth while," stated one man who is paramountly interested in City League hockey today.

The league is primarily for the working men, who desire exercise and recreation and with no intermediate hockey team in Belleville for 1944 a strong league should be realized when the teams convene at the Hume Arena this evening.

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

Economy.

Two men were boasting of the housekeeping abilities of their respective wives. "My wife won't enter a greengrocer's shop. She buys all her vegetables straight from the farm, so that they are nice and fresh," said one.

Said the other, "My wife does better than that. She went straight to the market gardener and insisted on choosing a vegetable marrow that was still growing. 'How much for this one?' she said. 'Eightpence,' said the gardener. 'Too much,' she said. 'What is the price of this little one?' 'Fourpence,' was the reply. 'All right, I'll buy it,' and pays on the spot. Then she added, 'Don't cut it now, I'll call for it this day fortnight'."

Juniors Break Ice.

Although the patronage was not exactly what should be expected with only one O. H. A. team in a city the size of Belleville, the 500 or so present at the Hume Arena last night went home quite satisfied with their 1944 hockey lot and they'll be back the next game and bring a friend. It's not the fact Belleville won over Trenton, but Belleville has a team of battling kids, who twice came from behind last night before they smothered Trenton 8-3. The fans like a fighting team and it appears as though the Holway-Doran sextette is just that. True enough they were a mite short on condition last night, but so was Trenton and it was all even on the score. However, the Belleville kids want to get in a powerful lot of skating and shooting practice before they meet the Marmora-Stirling combination, who have been practicing for exactly three weeks.

Just Coment.

Maybe it was simply because they had never seen the new Centre Line before, but the local sextette seemed at a loss to take advantage of this new ruling. Once Bill Holway used it to an advantage and Jerry Moher was in the right place at the right time and the result was a goal. However, generally speaking Trenton were much better versed in this art, but no doubt a few practices will take care of this situation. Another bad feature was the blind passing of the locals, but here again it takes time to iron out these angles, that finally click and when they do Coach Holway has the nucleus of one of the best junior squads seen locally in many a moon. There were three or four who seemed to stand out last night, but as it was the opening game to name stars would be unfair. Manager Jack Doran announced after the game the entire 26 players trying for positions would practice the remainder of the week.

Like Old Times.

It was "old home week" in the Hume Arena last night when hobknobbing together were "Gunner" Arnott, visiting from Preston, "Bouncer" Holway and Bill Green, a trio of local boys who brought hockey glory to Belleville in the early 20's when there was none of this "A" and "B" business and no blue lines of any degree to give a forward a head start. At one stage last night Doug Green and Bill Holway teamed together on the local defence. "It's a long time since a Holway and Green worked on a Belleville defence," wise-cracked Bill Green.

Then at the Trenton end of the rink there was Harry Filion, brother of George Filion, one of the better hockey players to come out of Trenton in the last 20 years. Harry is the image of George and is in the Navy. Then young Lemorre, who played wing for Trenton, comes by his hockey honestly, as the Lemorres have been playing hockey in Trenton for decades back. Yes, it was like old times last night.

Les Canadiens In.

Looking around the N. H. L. this season one need go no further than Montreal, and when speaking of the Canadiens, you can mark down in your notebook right now that they are going to be the National League champions of the 1943-44 season. Right now they are so far in front of the parade they could go into a tailspin and still back into the throne seat.

Dick Irvin's Montrealers are a sound hockey club—the only sound hockey club in the N. H. L. this winter. From Goalie Bull Durnan out there isn't a weak link in the chain.

Not since the days of Morenz, Joliat and those other colorful Flying Frenchmen of a decade or more ago have the Canadiens been a club over which their supporters could get excited. No, that is, until this year.

Remember When—

The first game of the newly-organized National Hockey Association was played at Montreal 35 years ago tonight, Les Canadiens beating the Cobalt "Silver Kings" 7 to 6. The N. H. A., operating in opposition to the Canadian Hockey Association, was enlarged 12 days later when the pick of the C. H. A. teams merged under the National League Association. The present National Hockey League was formed in 1917.

Toronto, Jan. 5—(CP)—Vancouver claims the only Chinese player in Senior hockey—20-year-old Larry Kwong of St. Regis in the Pacific Coast League. Larry's ambitions lean toward the National League and there's a possibility he might make it because Kwong is so good the minor leagues are reported interested in him. Kwong figures his race may help him up the ladder. He told Alf (Vancouver Sun) Cottrell: "The fans like to see a Chinese player as a curiosity. That's my good luck. But it has disadvantages. Ever since I was a midget there has always been a player or two trying to cut off my head just because I am Chinese. And the bigger the league the bigger the axe they use." Larry will need more than a talent for arousing curiosity if he makes the big time but it's possible. A right-winger, he counted seven goals and five assists in nine games this season. He's well up in the league scoring tables in competition with many former N. H. L. players. Kwong learned his hockey at Vernon, B. C., and played senior with Trail Smoke Eaters and Namaimo clippers before this season.

Adams cited a long list, including Sprague Cleghorn, Eddie Shore, Babe Seibert, Dit Clapper, and explained forwards were accustomed to moving around and organizing plays . . . Art Barton, clever forward with the British Columbia University team which won the Canadian Basketball title two years ago, has gained his army commission. . . Horse Sense Bridge

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Shifty Corkscrew Pest can play his best with your cards not pressed close to your chest. If his eyelids drap as if to nap, you will find his eyeballs in your lap.

Besides being unethical, peeks are not essential to good bridge. Not even to bid safe slams. Efficient partnership bidding tells all you need to know about the holdings of opponents.

Loiter with this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠A K J 7 5
♥A K J 7 5
♦5
♣J 5
NORTH
♠Q 6 4 2
♥Q 6 4 2
♦A J
♣A 4 2

After an exchange of bids, south learns quickly that north has five tricks and support for spades. With his own seven, south sees 12 tricks. And he knows spades can be trumps.

But he does not yet know that a slam is safe. Nor, will he know until he finds out how many aces and kings are held by opponents. And opponents are not foolish enough to tell him.

How can he get that information. By learning how many aces and kings are held by his own partner. He can add them to his own. The rest must be held by opponents.

Therefore, slambitious players need some method of finding out how many aces and kings are held by their partners. It is one of the essentials to the bidding of safe slams.

You must not ask "how many aces and kings have you partner?" At least, not in just those words. And partner must not answer "two aces and no kings." At least, not just like that.

It must be done legal like. With bids. And Horse Sense has the ideal way of doing it; the safest, simplest, most efficient ever devised. It is known as The Kibitzer's convention.

Many years ago, I invented the first wholesale ace-showing convention. That was before Culbertson ever dreamed of his. So, ace-and-king-showing did not pop out of a brainstorm.

You'll like The Kibitzer's convention.

AT THE McCARTHY

"NAVY BLUES"

"Navy Blues" a story of reckless gobs and gorgeous gals frolicking on and off a battleship in Hawaii, and starring Warner Bros. cinema clowns Ann Sheridan, Jack Oakie, Martha Raye and Jack Haley, will start next at the McCarthy Theatre.

In this potpourri of comedy, sailors Jack Oakie and Jack Haley try to filch their shipmate's pay checks and pawn their battleship's trophies with almost disastrous results; Ann Sheridan both hog calls and hog collars her man Herbert Anderson; and Martha Raye chasing her ex-husband, Jack Haley, gets thrown into jail accused of being an international spy.

The plot revolves around Gobs Oakie and Haley who go to great lengths to see that their battleship, the Montana, wins the fleet gunnery championship, and they go to even greater lengths to see that they win the bets which they have made at 15 to 1 with the tars of the U.S.S. Wisconsin.

Music and dancing by the Navy Blues Sextette, dressed in hula skirts and leis feature the production's softer moments. "In Waikiki", "Your a Natural", and other song hits of the show were written by Johnny Mercer and Arthur Schwartz.

"The Gay Sisters" is the second big feature coming next to the screen of the McCarthy Theatre. Three wealthy sisters who live in a spacious home that is daily seeping into a greater stage of decay and who are obviously trying to keep dark some closely guarded secret of the past, is the intriguing story of Warner Bros.' newest film, "The Gay Sisters".

The picture features a brilliant cast made up of Barbara Stanwyck, George Brent, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Nancy Coleman and a fine newcomer for whom film critics and preview audiences alike predict a bright future, Gig. Young.

Irving Happer directed the film which was written by Lenore Coffee. The excellent supporting cast in made up of such Hollywood favorites as Donald Crisp, Gene Lockhart, Larry Simms and Donald Woods. The fine musical background was written by the incomparable Max Steiner.

British Associated News completes three hours of first-class entertainment.

By HYE BOSSIN

In the USA they have revived Rudolph Valentino's "The Eagle," in which he co-stars with Vilma Banky. Today's audiences laugh at the scenes that used to thrill the fans. The unrestrained type of acting went out with silent pictures. One reviewer claims that those who saw the film when it first came out are laughing at their own youth as much as anything on the screen. . . J. Carrol Naish, who may win the Academy Award as the best supporting player for his portrayal of an Italian prisoner in "Sahara," has never played his own nationality on the screen—which is Irish. After serving in the last war he stayed in France to become an actor. In 1926 he decided to go wandering again and shipped out as a deckhand on a boat bound for Shanghai. The boat got engine trouble and turned into a port not far from Hollywood. Naish jumped his ship, went to the Cinema City and has been there ever since. . . Margaret Sullavan, one of the screen's finest actresses, has always followed her own inclinations. She decided she would like to appear in a play and now she is on Broadway in "The Voice of the Turtle," a smash hit.

Gene Tierney will star in "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn". . . Bob Hope will wrestle a 600-pound bear in "Road to Utopia". . . Allen Dwan, the ex-Torontonian who has directed so many films, is now a producer. He is responsible for "Around the World," which stars Kay Kyser. . . Vera Vague noticed a soldier wearing an unusual bracelet. She held his wrist and read the inscription: "Let go of him. He's mine—Louise". . . Bill Daniels, who was Greta Garbo's cameraman, is photographing Lionel Barrymore in "Three Men in White." "Maybe," Barrymore joked, "you can make me look like Taylor or Gable so I can be Hedy Lamarr's leading man". . . When Alfred Hitchcock, 100 pounds lighter, returned to England his friends said with amazement, "We never knew they were that short of food in the United States". . . Jack Pearl, famed some years ago as radio's Baron Munchausen and in obscurity since, will be back before the public as a movie comedian. . . Alan Ladd is taking singing lessons.

When Samuel Goldwyn organized a Hollywood troupe to tour army camps his announcement that only one red-head would be included caused much aggravation among his carrot-topped girls. Two of them, Virginia Cruzon and Dorothy Garner, got into a real brawl, hair-pulling and all, over who was to go. It seems it was a draw—because Sam decided to take them both to keep the peace. ... Hollywood is muscle mad. Everyone exercises and the place is over-run by physical instructors. In the gym at one studio this sign is featured: "The secret of health is the eating of onions. But the trouble is to keep it a secret". . . Claude Rains goes back to his native England to appear on the stage. . . Publicity isn't always a real guide. Though the papers are full of Frank Sinatra, the singer, Bing Crosby just won a radio poll by getting twice as many votes as his new rival. . . "Sweet and Low" will be the story of the life of Benny Goodman, the famed orchestra leader.

AT THE BELLE — Bette Davis and Paul Lukas play the leading roles in Warner Bros.' filmization of Lillian Hellman's prize-winning play, "Watch on the Rhine," now on the Belle Theatre screen.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Born to Sing"
(Musical Comedy)

One of America's most unusual orchestras appears on the screen in "Born to Sing," coming next to the Capitol Theatre. It is also one of the wonders of Hollywood.

It is Peter Meremblum's youth orchestra, composed of youngsters who play the most difficult symphonies with the ease and talent of grownups. It was organized some years ago by its founder and has won national music fame.

"Born to Sing" is a lilting musical presenting a group of talented young singers, dancers and musicians, the cast headed by Virginia Weidler, turned from drama to musical comedy, Ray McDonald, young dancing star of the New York stage, and Leo Gorcey. Its climax is a lavish presentation of "Ballad for Americans," sung by Douglas McPhail, young baritone and a huge chorus representing all walks of American life.

Players include Beverly Hudson, new singing discovery, Dickie Hall, five-year-old concert pianist, Darla Hood of "Our Gang" fame, "Rags" Ragland, Sheldon Leonard, Henry O'Neill, Larry Nunn, Margaret Dumont and Joe Yule.

In addition to "Ballad for Americans," the picture's score includes four new songs by Earl Brent: "I'll Love Ya," "Here I Am, Eight Years Old," "I Hate the Conga" and "[illegible]," this last number danced as well as sung by Miss Weidler and Ray McDonald.

"The West Side Kid"

Donald Barry, who plays the title role in Republic's "The West Side Kid" which will be seen at the Capitol Theatre next as the added attraction, got his start on the stage in "Tobacco Road" with Henry Hull. Now they are together in "The West Side Kid."

A funny cartoon and the serial, "Secret Service in Darkest Africa," complete another of our January big hit programs.

AT THE BELLE

"Watch on the Rhine"

"Watch on the Rhine" Warner Bros.' new film based upon Lillian Hellman's famous play of the same name, begins an engagement at the Belle Theatre today. Directed by Herman Shumlin, who both produced and directed the successful Broadway production, the picture tells of the selfless heroism of human beings in their fight against the forces of evil.

Starred in the film are Bette Davis, one of Hollywood's foremost dramatic actresses, and Paul Lukas, who scored in the Broadway hit which ran for over a year. A talented supporting cast features Geraldine Fitzgerald, Lucile Watson, Beulah Bondi and George Coulouris. Others in the cast include Donald Woods, Henry Daniell, Frank Wilson, Eric Roberts, Donald Buka and Janis Wilson.

The Canadian Movietone News, described by Lowell Thomas, and "Fin 'n Catty" a funny Merrie Melodie Cartoon in color will also be exhibited.

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was at the movies with my sister Gladdis and pop was suppose to send me to bed at 9 sharp, and I was sure he wouldn't forget and hoping he might, and I was looking at the comics on the floor and pop said, Far be it from me to interrupt your litterary endeavors, but have you finished your homework?

Sir? Not quite all a ways, I said, and pop said, Yee gods are you ever going to learn the importance of properly combining the element of speed with the element of time? And when I say speed I mean efficient speed, and there's nothing efficient in skimming over the comics, even though you skim as lightly as a sailboat on the ocean blue, as long as you're using up time that's suppose to be reserved for your homework. For Peet sake it's about as efficient as a bird using up its energy to practice flying circles and figures eights when it's time to be moving South for the winter social season. But on the other hand speed used correctly in relation to time will reward you with honestly earned leisure for frivolities. The bird who plugs along southward without dillydallying will have time for a dip in the Gulf Stream before retiring, and the boy who diligently finishes his homework will have time to digest the comics without having to hear long instructive speeches from his father, pop said.

But G wizzickers, pop said, in my little book of 5000 Facts and Figures it says that sound travels at a speed of a thousand feet a second and light travels 186 thousand miles a second, so no matter how fast I did my homework I'd be slow in comparison, so after all what's a use? I said, and pop said, it says in my little book of Twenty Thousand Trivia that a snale travels at a speed of a mile a year and cold mollasses travels an eighth of an inch a minute, so even at your slowest you'd beat them both. In other words there's plenty of use. Now get busy, he said.

Which I did, proving statistics are only good for an argument as long as you're the only one has them.

CHAPTER 12

"Tell me what to do." The girl's voice showed no sign of emotion—only a kind of impassive submission.

Dove seated himself comfortably on the edge of the bed. "Have you let yourself become involved with Colin Rae?"

"I am involved only with the party." This time her voice sharpened. Then he smiled. "I think we shall get along."

Again she said, "Tell me what to do."

"Two things—both of them urgent and both you will find out from Selkirk: First, I want to know exactly where his trappers are working between here and Hudson Bay. Second, I want to know when the company plane makes its rounds of the northern trading posts."

"You are almost ready, then?"

His eyes flickered. "We have not been idle. Except for two patrols, there is not a Mountie between here and the south shore of the bay. They are down in Learmonth, waiting for trouble between the Crees and the trappers and we will give them just enough to keep them there. Then, after the ice comes, we strike."

In deep earnestness Dove raised his hand. "The echo of that blow will be heard around the world."

The guttural syllables ceased, and for a time he watched her, wrapped in the blanket, knees under her chin.

"I am wondering," he said at last, "if I should talk to you of loyalty. They told me you were not entirely willing to come here until they reminded you that your father is still in Austria. And perhaps I should remind you there is no safety for you—here or in the States—if you prove unfaithful. Otherwise you will go far. Men find you desirable. Even I am not insensible to your attraction. Use it. Use it on Colin Rae, or"—the shadowy smile came and went—"or is that advice unnecessary?"

Quickly she asked, "What of him?"

"He may be in our way. He—" Dove broke off. "But win his confidence." He glanced again through the window.

"You think that will be difficult?" she asked.

"Nothing will be difficult if you keep your head."

"Why should I lose it?"

He began polishing his glasses. "For the one reason that makes women the best and worst spies in the world—they possess what is popularly described as a 'heart.' A heart, meine kleine, is a dangerous luxury for those who follow our path. You are permitted one loyalty alone—the Party. And here, I am the Party." He made a quick sign toward the window. "We will talk again."

When Colin pushed open the door, he saw only a small mild-mannered man, adjusting his gold-rimmed glasses and a girl swathed in blankets, watching him with long, green eyes.

Mechanically Colin poured fresh water into the boiling kettle—nothing seemed real, neither the people about him nor what he himself was doing.

He heard Dove say, "It's a day for coffee," and Irina's murmured reply. It was as if all this were happening to someone else — or had happened long ago. Wildly impossible that he should be standing there dropping coffee into a blackened pot while through his mind swirled the memory of two arms tight about his neck and warm lips on his lips.

Through sheer will power he pulled himself back to his task and soon the fragrance of steaming coffee filled the cabin. He carried a cup to Irina, and saw with angry wonder that even yet his hand was not quite steady.

They drank while Dove talked of trapping and of coming trouble with Tennant. Then at last he rose.

"Time to be getting over to Cross Lake." He drew on his horse-hide mittens. "These days before freeze-up get busier and shorter." He looked up at Rae. "So this winter you're really going to trap?"

"I may not," Colin answered quietly. "I may go out."

There was no disguising the surprise in Dove's eyes—surprise and perhaps relief. "But I thought you had decided to spend the winter here."

"In my life nothing ever seems to be decided."

The finality in Colin's tone left nothing more to be said, and with a nod and a "Thanks for the coffee," Dove closed the cabin door.

Slowly Colin turned. They were alone. It was a moment that had to be faced a moment made inevitable by all that had happened before, yet it took more courage than he thought to meet her eyes.

Irina spoke first. "You meant that, about going away?"

"Don't you think I'd better?"

"But why?"

"You know the answer."

"Colin, we kissed—that's all. Is it so very much?"

"Not with anyone else—but you happen to be Rodney Selkirk's future wife."

She may have winced. "You can always blame it on the woman. Most men would."

"I'm not thinking of blame. I'm thinking of tomorrow and the days after. I'm thinking of the man who happens to be in love with you." He gathered up her clothes and laid them on the bed. "These are dry now. I'll go out and start the motor."

Her two hands closed about his arm. "Colin, don't make me sorry about that kiss."

"Aren't you?"

She threw back her head and her smoky eyes caressed him. "I'm glad."

The low, fervent voice raised a faint rustling of echoes, her hands were on his wrist and again he felt the spell of her. He took a quick step back. "We'd better go now, while there's time. I'll wait for you down by the lake."

But the cold motor gave him trouble; his fingers were unutterably clumsy, and Irina had seated herself in the canoe before he was able to start. She did not speak as he wrapped the blanket about her, then, lowering his head before the storm, turned toward the centre of the lake. The wind was biting cold, the hail stinging their faces, and seated at the tiller Colin steered for Learmonth, glad that they could not talk, welcoming the savage lash of the storm.

Only once Irina spoke, just before they reached the inn. "Colin," she asked, "you won't say anything about this to Rodney."

"Suppose Dove talks?"

"I don't think he will."

Colin lifted her to the dock and shoved the canoe out into the stream. But once, through driving hail, he looked back to see her standing there, gazing after him—a lonely, solitary figure holding a cold, whimpering pup in her arms.

Throttle wide open, he steered straight into the storm, but his thoughts, racing faster than the motor, took him back to that cabin by the lake shore and once more he was kneeling, looking up into the shadowy triangle of a woman's face; once more soft, eager lips swayed toward him, and small white hands pressed his neck. She was very lovely; she had saved him down in Winnipeg and she had reached out to him from her loneliness.

But Rodney Selkirk loved her. Colin pulled his coat tighter. Selkirk loved her and there was work ahead—work that called for cold reason and for steadfast, undistracted vigilance; there could be no place for encircling arms or soft lips His job was the man hunt.

Shielding his eyes, he peered across the waters; then suddenly brought the canoe about in a tight arc and steered toward the Indian school. Dove's absence might provide a long-awaited chance to talk with Dr. Benedict—and anything was better than being alone with his own unprofitable reveries.

Again he thought of Selkirk, and drew a deep, sharp breath. Well, it was done and could not be undone. No amount of regret could alter the past. In this life you had to pick yourself up and start again. But one thing alone was certain—there must be no more trips with Irina.

The hail had changed to driving snow when Colin tied his canoe to the dock and went directly to Benedict's little office in the Hall.

He found the doctor at his desk, bending over a paper covered with figures. As he entered, Benedict threw down his pencil with a grunt of exasperation.

"Money." He waved Colin to a chair. "Blair says I'm a child in arms when it comes to money. I don't ever seem able to get along with it or without it. Then all at once you need some and you have not got it."

Colin remembered how heedless this big physician had always been of his own worldly gain; the story was current in Learmonth that whenever Benedict visited some ailing Cree family he not only paid for the prescription he gave, but sent them a load of privisions.
sent them a load of provisions.
Colin asked.

"I want a new type of compound microscope. I can save human lives with it by making a more prompt diagnosis, but Dove can't get it—he's spent his allotment—so I'm trying to find out if I'm solvent."

He frowned at the figures, like a schoolboy at some difficult problem in mathematics. "I've never thought much about money, Colin. Maybe that was a mistake. It gets more important as you get older. Not for me—I'm too old to matter—but for Blair. I've got her to think about."

"Blair will always take care of herself."

"How? There isn't much for a girl to do up here, you know. When the war's over, all the pilot jobs will go back to the men. I've got to leave her a little something when I go and I'm not doing it. It's not fair."

"I think you're wrong to worry about Blair."

"Well, I do worry."

"About Blair, or"—Colin hesitated—"or something else?"

Sharply Benedict turned. "What else? What else is there?"

"I don't know. But I do know this: you've changed since I last saw you and I believe it makes Blair much more unhappy than any prospects of poverty."

The physician's laugh boomed out, but to Colin the laugh sounded strained. "That's all nonsense! What could I be worrying about?"

"Dove."

Fear sprang to Benedict's eyes but relentlessly Colin went on. "The only way out could hurt Blair—"

Benedict was on his feet. Raising a warning hand for silence, he seemed to be listening, then he half whispered, "Let's go to my cabin. We can't talk here."

"Dove is away."

"I know. But that's not all. Come."

Puzzled, Colin followed the doctor across the clearing and inside the cabin the two men sat down before the stove.

Benedict pushed the tobacco toward Colin. "What do you know about Dove?" His voice was not quite steady.

For a moment Colin did not answer, while he asked himself how far Benedict could be trusted. It was not impossible that the doctor might be wholeheartedly in league with Dove and Colin would endanger everything by talking too soon. He thought of Blair and decided to take the chance.

"Strange things take place wherever Dove happens to be," Colin said slowly. "I testified against him in the inquest after Van Downe's death."

"I know and it came to nothing."

"Not quite nothing. The last word hasn't been spoken."

That look of fear had returned to Benedict's eyes; he laid a hand on the other's arm.

"Careful, Colin. Don't ask me why, but just be careful. Let Dove alone. And if you're trying to help me, I tell you solemnly you can't. You can only hurt yourself. If Dove ever—"

Benedict stopped. Feet were crunching on the hail-strewn path and Blair entered, cheeks glowing and dark hair powdered with snow.

At sight of Rae her face lighted. "Been thinking about you." She took off her mackinaw and added, "Freeze-up is coming at last."

But when Benedict had left them she looked after her father's huge half-bent figure going across the clearing, and her eyes were grave. She turned to Colin.

"For three nights he's been over in the Hall with Dove, and each night I've seen lights passing through the attic. Father says they are checking over equipment for the trapping season, but I know they've been up in that room. Each morning there's the stain of some chemical on Father's fingers and an odor on his clothes—I've smelled it somewhere before, but can't remember where."

Colin watched the puzzled Blair. "Anything more?"

"Only one thing. They're using a powerful current for something; the lights in the cabin flicker and go dim but there's no sound of a radio. Colin, something is happening up in that room and the thought that Father could be a spy against his country is getting me down. I won't believe that—I can't. But what can I believe?" Earnestly, a little fearfully, she looked up at him. "What did Father say to you just now?"

"Very little."

"He's hiding something. He's—"

The voice was tremulous, and Colin laid a hand on her shoulder. "I know how you feel. There's nothing harder to do than what you're doing now—watching and waiting." He walked the cabin's length, then turned. "Dove's gone to Cross Lake. Do you suppose there might be a chance?"

She made a quick gesture of protest. "You mustn't. Father would hear you."

"I could go in by the chapel."

"They've kept the chapel locked, they've been on the watch, one or the other of them, night and day. Almost as if they suspect. Please—it's too big a risk. Can't you wait?"

Reluctantly he nodded. "I'll have to, I suppose." He began restlessly moving about the cabin again, then he asked, "How soon do you start flying mail to Winnipeg?"

"As soon as the ice is thick enough to land on skis."

"Good. You've got a job the very first trip. There's a picture hidden away in Alec's cabin—an old picture of a group of aviators in the first World War and one of the men in it looks like Dove. I wanted to turn it over to the Army when I was in Winnipeg, but hadn't a chance. I can't trust it to the mails but we've got to get that picture traced. It's going to be your job to take that picture down and get it into the right hands—someone we can trust to follow through and keep his mouth shut."

"Then I think I know where to take it, to Colonel Dowling in military intelligence. He was up here with his daughter last summer. I guided them. He'd be safe, Colin." Blair's voice was recapturing its old eager ring, and her eyes were bright again with interest.

Looking down into her darkly glowing eyes, Colin pondered: because of one woman he had almost decided to quit Learmonth; because of another, he knew he would not go. Whatever the future might hold he and Blair were allies.

"You look so serious." Her voice brought him back.

He laughed. "I was thinking that there's no one in the world I can be myself with so completely as I can with you. You're a grand pal, a—"

She laid her hand against his mouth. "Call me 'little sister' again and I'll scream."

That night the storm broke. Howling down from out the north, the first great winter blizzard whipped across the land, driving men and animals to shelter. Steadily, through the night, the temperature fell, and all next day no living thing went forth, while snow sifted high amid the spruce clumps, and ice crept out from the shallow waters of the shoreline to meet across the channels, covering rivers and lakes with an ever-thickening cap that would soon become a highway for trapper and hunter.

By early morning of the second day the snow had ceased and torn clouds revealed the cold, sparkling stars, but hour by hour the grip of winter tightened and with the sunrise Learmonth looked out upon a changed white world—the winter world of the North.

The day after freeze-up, Colin turned the photograph over to Blair, and on her first trip to Winnipeg she had delivered it into Colonel Dowling's hands. "He's having copies made," she told Colin. "He wants to send one of them to London. It may be two or three weeks before we hear anything."

Colin nodded. "The minute you do hear, fly over to the cabin. And remember, if Dove makes another night trip, let me know. Until then the safest thing for us is to work at our jobs. Your job is flying the mail; mine is trapping."

And the next day he and Alec began to trap. Hanging his steel traps in heavy balsam smoke until the resin had obliterated all man scent, Colin began work ten miles back from his cabin, following a small stream that he had known in earlier days. The main trapping was for cross and red fox on the Upper Nelson, where Olsen had warned Alec to keep away. Alec himself was plainly nervous when they entered that forbidden territory.

"What happens if we meet Olsen?" he asked once.

"That," Colin answered, "depends on Olsen."

Before many days, their lines extended for miles along the streams and up over the ridges, while the great white calm of winter lay across the land.

Colin chafed because nothing was happening. No word from Winnipeg about the photograph; Dove showed no signs of resuming his midnight trips up the lake and two weeks had passed since freeze-up.

Then, without warning, on December 7, the settlement was shocked by the news flashed up from Winnipeg—the Japanese had attacked the American fleet at Pearl Harbor. Colin heard it late that afternoon from a trapper and his mind flashed back to the map he had seen in Dove's secret room; it had been a map of Pearl Harbor. The other map had shown the Atlantic coast; would that mean an attack there by the Germans?

At Least Two German Raiders Are Shot Down

London, Jan. 5 — (CP Cable) — Many Londoners were awakened early today by anti-aircraft fire when a few German planes penetrated inland over England. At least two were shot down.

Bombs preceded by flares were dropped over the metropolitan area and the home counties. In one southeast coast district a fleeing raider apparently jettisoned its cargo.

Damage and casualties were light. A boy of four was killed and his brother, aged six, and a 14-year-old girl were injured when bombs wrecked four semi-detached houses in a home-counties village. The bodies of two babies were dug from the ruins of the cottage which collapsed on their occupants. An elderly shepherd and two women were also killed and persons all over the village were treated for superficial wounds. One firewatcher returned home to find his wife and two young daughters killed.

An aged man was killed at Erith, Kent, when an anti-aircraft shell exploded behind his house.

FULL-TIME DEPUTY BEING SUGGESTED FOR CHURCHILL

Such an Appointment Would Spare Premier Some of His Work

NAMES MENTIONED

By ROSS MUNRO
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 5 — (CP Cable) — The question of naming a full-time deputy for Mr. Churchill if the Prime Minister on his return to Britain is obliged to spare himself in the future is being broached in political circles here as parliament prepares to meet after the Christmas recess.

His latest illness seems to make it conclusive that he will not be able to carry on the great burdens he has borne since May 10, 1940, when he succeeded Neville Chamberlain.

Clement Attlee is at present Deputy Prime Minister as well as Lord President of the Council but there are rumors that some other member of the cabinet may be appointed deputy with the single purpose of relieving Mr. Churchill of some of his work.

However Mr. Churchill undoubtedly will continue to give final direction to British policy.

Eden One of Those Mentioned

Foreign Secretary Eden is prominently mentioned as a possible deputy and his companions point out he has been more closely associated with the Prime Minister in the great international developments of the last year than any other cabinet member.

As leader of the House of Commons, Eden has no peer in grasp and understanding of current foreign affairs problems.

Some observers however feel he could not spare any time from foreign affairs at the moment and someone else with less exacting international problems could be a better selection.

Ernest Bevin, labor minister, and Herbert Morrison, Home Secretary, are certainly in the running, although the controversy over release from custody of the Fascist Sir Oswald Mosley possibly reduced Morrison's chances.

Sir John Anderson, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is another possibility. In some circles there are forecasts that Sir Stafford Cripps, Minister of Aircraft Production, may return to more active parliamentary and political work.

Many members confidently expect that before next January Mr. Churchill will have told the House that victory has been won and the House may be grappling with vast problems of switching industry from war to peace footing.

ARREST MAN ON MURDER CHARGE

Russian - Born Toronto Bookbinder Charged With Murder of Jacob Beresner

Toronto, Jan. 5. (CP)—A suspect who gave his name as Joseph Smith was arrested by police today and charged with the murder of Jacob Beresner, 55, Russian-born Toronto bookbinder who died Monday, 24 hours after he was attacked in his store.

Police said Smith was picked up in a raid early today and charged with the murder after questioning.

Yesterday a reward of $1,000 was offered by the Police Commission for information in the case.

Beresner was beaten over the head Sunday night with a flat piece of iron used in pressing books. When found by his wife, his wallet was missing but it had contained only $3 or $4, she said. He died without regaining consciousness.

Before coming to Toronto Beresner, a Jew, worked in Germany, Austria and France.

Question Mother Of Deserted Babes

New York, Jan. 5 —(AP)— The mother of two babies who were found alone in a cold, drafty east side flat, frostbitten, hungry and weak, was questioned by police today.

Police identified her as Mrs. Frank Jiro, adding that the young woman, who appeared to be in her 20s, came to the police station voluntarily.

The children, a nine-months-old boy and a girl about two, were discovered yesterday when a patrolman entered the locked apartment through a window to investigate the source of water leaking into a flat below.

The boy, clad only in a shirt and sweater, was tied by his feet to a bed. The girl had no clothes. She was lying in her crib with only a thin blanket as a cover.

Neighors said they had not seen the couple who occupied the flat since Monday.

Allied Bombing Reacts Disastrously For Germans in East

London, Jan. 5—(CP)—Bombing of the Schweinfurt Bearing Works in Germany "reacted disastrously for Hitler on the eastern front," a Soviet commentator said today in a Moscow broadcast.

"This was a hard blow to Hitler's war machine and it reacted disastrously for Hitler on the eastern front," he said. "Allied bombers are raiding war industries with the result seen in the catastrophic retreat in the east."

Sixty bombers were lost in the Schweinfurt attack Oct. 15.

Terminal Produce Market Proposed For After-War Era

DIED IN VAIN

Detroit, Jan. 5.—(AP) —Anita died in vain.

A mound of earth over a 20-by-15 foot grave hid Anita's 12,000-pound carcass today, and none of her 4,000 pounds of fat had found its way into the war effort.

Anita—she was the Detroit Zoo's favorite elephant—had to be buried because a fat rendering plant couldn't get a crew to the Zoo in time. Zoo Keeper John T. Millen said the condition of the carcass would not permit further delay.

The elephant's fat was to have been used for explosives. Anita, injured last Thursday in a fall into the elephant house moat, had to be destroyed, and the Wayne County Salvage Committee entered a race against time in trying to find a rendering plant capable of handling Anita's great bulk. The race was lost.

GERMAN ARMY RETREATS INTO PRIPET MARSHES

Regroup Forces For Stand Along Polish Frontier

Vatutin's Men Head South at Swift Pace After Taking Berdichev

ATTACK AT KRIVOI ROG

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Moscow, Jan. 6 —(AP)— The German army of Field Marshal Fritz von Mannstein has retreated into the Pripet Marshes and reformed for another stand along the Polish frontier west and south of Olevsk, a customs station which the Soviets captured Monday.

This stiffened resistance on the main route from Kiev to Warsaw developed as the massive drive of Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's 1st Ukraine Army swept southward toward the Dniester river, the Rumanian border, at an accelerated pace following the capture of Berdichev, a pivotal rail centre 25 miles south of Zhitomir.

Advices from the front said that Von Mannstein had taken up positions favorable for defence with his left flank protected by the marshes and was making a determined stand west of Olevsk along the railway leading to Kowel, a city 130 miles inside the Polish border, and also in the region southward between Gorodnitza and Novogorod-Volynski. Capture of the latter town, less than 20 miles from the pre-war border, was announced Tuesday.

Destroy Two Vital Bridges.

After his own forces had retreated across to their present positions, the Nazi commander had an opportunity to destroy the bridges over two tricky water barriers in this area—the Ubort river which flows just west of Olevsk and the Sluch river which swings in a northwesterly direction from Novogorod-Volynski.

A dispatch to the Moscow News, English language weekly, said the Russians had broken through the German defences along the Sluch.

Previous reports had placed the Russians across the Polish border in the area between Clevsk and Sarny, a town 35 miles inside the frontier.

It was evident that a growing battle was in progress in this sector and that the Russians were bringing new pressure against the Germans in the Dnieper bend southward as well as conducting a large scale offensive northward around Nevel.

The German communique broadcast by Berlin said heavy battles are in full swing northwest of Berdichev where the Soviets have attacked "with unabated violence." The Germans also said that the Russians had resumed attacks north of Krivoi Rog and east of Kirovograd, and had renewed attempts to break through southeast and northwest of Vitebsk.

Drive Gains Speed.

The Russian drive southward picked up momentum as the result of the capture of Berdichev and a dispatch to Izvestia reported fierce fighting in the villages along the highway to Vennitsa, an important rail centre on the Bug river. Another objective of the Red army was Zhmerinka, 20 miles beyond on the Odessa-Lwow railway.

There was every indication that the Germans had fortified both places and would make a desperate effort to hold them.

Beyond Tarascha, south of Kiev, the Soviets closed in on a 35-mile corridor which the Germans hold between Kanev the region around Smela and south of Cherkasy. Reports said the Germans' upper defence line to their positions in the Dnieper bend was rapidly crumbling.

Dispatches said little about the Baltic army's operation north of Nevel beyond the fact that it was a large-scale operation and assuming more importance daily.

Berdichev Important

Fall of Berdichev after a bloody five-day siege gave Gen. Vatutin's southern wing the green light to speed up its march to the Dniester River, where the Germans were said to be rushing new defence fortifications. Capture of Berdichev won a special order of the day from Premier Stalin and 224 guns fired a 20-salvo salute to the victory.

Tank and infantry columns were pushing on toward Vinnitsa, 50 miles due south of Berdichev, first stop on the 100-mile drive to the Dniester River bastion of Mogilvo Podolski. Capture of Vinnitsa and Zhmerinka, rail junction on the Odessa-Warsaw railway 20 miles further south, would deprive the 500,000 Germans inside the Dnieper river bend of a large part of their communications and further narrow their escape corridor to the west.

BOMBING DEVICE

Russian-born Dr. Vladimir K. Zworykin who invented a secret bombing device, now further developed and being used by the R.A.F. As a result Germans are amazed at the accuracy of the R.A.F. bombadiers, through clouds in night raids. Dr. Zworykin is associated with R.C.A. research at Camden and Princeton, N.J.

Hospitality to Boy in Uniform Pays Dividends in Kind Deeds

(Editor's note: If Canadian families sometimes wonder whether their hospitality to servicemen is worth the bother, this story by Cpl. H. R. How of Moncton, N.B., should help to banish their doubts. He recently returned to Britain from North Africa).

By Cpl. H. R. HOW
Royal Canadian Air Force

London, Jan. 6 — (CP)—Thousands of Canadian women who have opened their homes to boys from all over the Empire, who are training for flying duties, must sometimes wonder whether their individual efforts are worthwhile. Entertaining may seem such a small contribution — and there are so many boys.

Possibly Mrs. Pauley of Moncton, N.B., thought just that way when, one cold night in January, 1943, she entertained three R.A.F. lads. One, Sgt. Al Fance, was a red head.

Ten months later, and 5,000 miles from the Pauley home, a man was making his way slowly on crutches towards the convalescent marquee of an R.A.F. hospital in North Africa. He entered the tent and threw himself down on an empty bed.

A voice from the next bed said "What part of Canada are you from, mate?"

"New Brunswick."

"Moncton"?

"Yeah."

"Don't happen to know of a family by the name of Pauley? They live on High Street."

"Nope. Moncton's quite a size you know."

Silence followed. The fellow on crutches glanced at the boy on the next bed. Red hair, cheerful face. At tea time the new arrival at the tent hobbled over to the mess hut. He was in a quandary, for he discovered it was impossible while on crutches to carry the filled plates.

A voice behind him said: "Let me have your plate."

It was the boy from the next bed.

After tea, and back in the tent, the lad from the next bed suggested cards.

"Do you play German whist?" he asked.

"Nope."

"Come. I'll teach you. By the way, my name is Al Fance."

That night the Canadian learned how to play German whist. Night after night they played. And every day, at every meal, Sgt. Fance asked for the Moncton boy's plate, and asked if he would like a "sweet."

Came the day when the Canadian packed his bag and prepared to leave the convalescent's marquee. He tried to thank Fance.

"Don't thank me" Fance said. "Remember the day you came in? I asked you if you knew a Mrs. Pauley from your home town. Well, once she was very nice to me, and I haven't forgotten it — so you had better thank Mrs. Pauley."

So, Mrs. Pauley and all the other Canadian women who have helped to make boys from overseas feel at home, and may sometimes wonder whether it is worthwhile, you have the answer. Too, you have fervent thanks of one of your neighbor's kids who is overseas. You see — I was the guy on the crutches.

U. K. SUBMARINES SINK 8 SHIPS IN MEDITERRANEAN

Sunken German Or German-Controlled Vessels Include Large Tanker

BRITISH ACTIVE

London, Jan. 6 — (CP) — British submarines have sunk eight German or German-controlled ships, including a large tanker, and have damaged two others in recent operations in the Mediterranean, the Admiralty announced today.

The tanker, the announcement said, was attacked and sunk in convoy in the Gulf of Genoa. The other vessels listed as sunk included a small naval auxiliary and three small cargo ships — including two ammunition carriers — destroyed off the French Riviera, a medium-sized supply ship in the Aegean and two smaller merchant ships in the same general area.

As is customary, the admiralty did not announce the names of the submarines involved, but issued the names of their commanders, Lieuts. M. F. R. Ainslie, D. Lambert, G. E. Hunt, Boyd, L. E. Herrick, C. Gordon and J. P. Fyfe.

Lambert piloted a submarine into the Yugoslav port of Kotor soon after the German-Italian occupation in 1941 in a successful effort to rescue British Minister Sir Ronald Campbell. Lambert went ashore and the submarine had to leave without him. He was captured and hel da prisoner-of-war until the Italian capitulation.

Neighbors, Police Join in Search

Toronto, Jan. 6 — (CP)—Neighbors and police joined in search today for David Charles Jackson, 16-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. George Jackson who disappeared yesterday from his Bayview Ave. home.

There was no immediate suggestion of kidnapping and the only clue was provided by the child's three-year-old brother, Douglas, who told his mother: "He's gone."

Jackson said his wife, now under a physician's care, took the children into the backyard of their home, then returned shortly after to find David had disappeared.

Flashlights and motor cars were used in the search, which covered more than a square mile before it was adjourned until dawn.

'1944 Will Be a Year Of Decisive Actions In War'—Roosevelt

By DOUGLAS CORNELL
Associated Press Staff Writer

Washington, Jan. 6—(AP)—President Roosevelt, in a report placing total lend-lease aid to United States Allies at $18,608,000,000 through Nov. 30, declared today that 1944 "will be a year of decisive actions in the war."

He declared the United Nations had increased their powers to defeat the Axis and had "beaten back our enemies on every front."

At Allied war councils at Teheran and Cairo a few weeks ago, the President said, plans were made for major offensives which will speed victory.

"With the closer unity there achieved," he asserted, "we shall be able to strike ever increasing blows until the unconditional surrender of the Nazis and Japanese."

He credited lend-lease with increasing the power of Allied offensives, emphasizing tremendous increases in shipments of munitions.

It was his 13th report of lend-lease since the program began in March, 1941.

Although the first 11 months of 1943 accounted for $10,356,000,000 of the total of lend-lease aid, compared with $7,009,000,000 in all of 1942, a table in the report showed that the flow had been lessening every month since a peak was reached last August.

Exports Show Big Increase

Exports, the assistance actively delivered to recipient Nations, added up to $13,844,000,000 through October—more than one and a half times the sum for all of 1942. Munitions accounted for $4,674,000,000, an increase of 142 per cent over the corresponding 10 months of 1942.

Russia got $3,550,000,000 of the exports and the United Kingdom $5,980,000,000.

Lend-lease aid to Russia in the first 10 months of last year was up 63 per cent over all of 1942, with aircraft, ordnance and other munitions constituting 56 per cent of the export value.

"The lend-lease and we have furnished," the report asserted "has been effectively used in the Red Army's advances in the Ukraine and White Russia. Through October we sent to the U. S. S. R. nearly 7,000 planes, more than to any other lend-lease country; more than 3,500 tanks and 195,000 motor vehicles, including trucks, jeeps, motorcycles and other vehicles."

Munitions comprised 48 per cent of lend-lease exports to Britain in the first 10 months of 1943. The report told how lend-lease planes and bombs are helping to devastate German industries and mentioned tremendous offensives to be launched from Britain.

Reverse Lease-lend

Mr. Roosevelt mentioned also in his letter the flow of reverse lend-lease supplies — provided for the United States by Britain and other Allied countries.

"The flow of lend-lease assistance from the United States to our Allies and of reverse lend-lease assistance from our Allies to us has increased the power of our united offensives," he said. "The lend-lease program has made stronger the ties that bind the United Nations together for a common victory and in common determination to assure a lasting peace.

WAR CASUALTIES SPEED WESTWARD TO THEIR HOMES

Many Hoped to be Rehabilitated and Return to the Line

STRANGE INCIDENTS

Halifax, Jan. 6—(CP)—Casualties of war, hundreds of Canadian servicemen and women sped westward aboard two hospital trains today after landing at this port from the Canadian Hospital Ship Lady Nelson.

Almost all veterans of the land and air fronts set up by Canadian arms in Europe, they were victims of battle or accident in North Africa, Sicily and Italy, in the skies over Nazi-held Europe, or on the training grounds of Britain.

For many of the 500 who came down the gangplank here yesterday, their role in the war had ended. Others hoped to be rehabilitated in the Dominion to return to their places in the battle line.

A few members of the C. W. A. C. were among the returning Canadians. There was a handful, too, of veterans of the Dieppe raid.

But mostly the home-bound fighters were battle casualties of the Sicilian and Italian fighting. The red patch of Canada's 1st Division, with the crusader shoulder shield of the hard-bitten 8th Army, predominated among them.

Pte. Bob Hawksin of Winnipeg was in an armored car that attacked a Nazi tiger tank and was put out of commission by the giant machine.

Blown out of the car, he was taken prisoner by Italians and returned to the Canadians next day when the Italian capitulation was announced.

Two who lived through strange accidents, Flt. Sgt. Ken Burns of Verdun, Que., was navigator on a Stirling bomber when a bomb from another British machine ripped through its fuselage one night over Hanover. He escaped unscathed that time. But on a later operation over Kassel, Germany, cannon shells from a Nazi night fighter fractured his skull and all but wrecked the plane.

Flt. Sgt. Burns reported with satisfaction that Sgt. Bill Forrest of Trail, B.C., downed the Nazi before he could get another burst away.

Loses a Leg

A Spitfire pilot, Flt. Sgt. Leo Tremblay of Quebec City, lost a leg and was badly burned when his plane crashed through a building while taking off on a night flight. But he hoped to follow the example of some other similarly wounded

5TH ARMY OPENS OFFENSIVE ALONG TEN-MILE FRONT

One-Mile Advance Made Under Heavy Artillery and Mortar Barrage by Foe

FIGHT IN SAN VITTORE

Algiers, Jan. 6 — (AP) — Mud-stained troops of the Anglo-American 5th Army in Italy have opened a long-awaited offensive on a 10-mile front on either side of the Via Casilina, the main road to Cassino and Rome, Allied headquarters said today.

The ground forces, supported by waves of dive-bombers which twisted through low hanging clouds to lay bombs on enemy gun positions, advanced an average of a mile in the first day of their offensive. The front stretches five miles on either side of the important highway.

British troops surged forward in the southern half of the sector from a point west of Rocca. The attack opened in driving sleet and rain.

Americans battered their way inside the pillbox maze of San Vittore where they took half the ruined town and are fighting the Germans for possession of the other half. They swept down from heights around San Vittore on the north side of the road, northwest of captured Mignon.

Lt.-Gen. Mark Clark's offensive broke weeks of minor activity along the 5th Army's front.

San Vittore, six miles from Cassino, had been converted into a fortress with every house a pillbox and Germans dug into wine cellars where Allied artillery could not reach them.

Front dispatches said the Germans opened up the fiercest artillery and mortar fire in many weeks as British and Americans rose from their positions and began the offensive.

"The Germans are fighting bitterly for every inch of ground in their customary style, but have been driven back at least a mile in most places," a military spokesman said.

Rain and Sleet

The Allied difficulties were increased by rain which swelled the watercourses, by snow in the mountains and by sleet which threw a clammy blanket on expected air support.

But despite the hazards the dive-bombers roared in under the clouds, skipping just above the ground at 300 miles an hour to strafe and bomb the enemy's emplacements.

Because of their speed the aircraft were unable to observe accurately the damage they did, but a pilot who led one mission reported seeing German troops scatter wildly under the attack.

DIRECT HIT MADE ON JAP CRUISER OFF NEW HANOVER

Two Freighters Sunk and 17 Jap Planes Downed in Aerial Assaults

AIRDROMES BOMBED

Allied Headquarters, New Guinea, Jan. 6 (AP)—The destruction of 17 Japanese planes and two fighters, and a direct hit on an enemy cruiser rewarded Allied aerial assaults ranging from Dutch Timor to New Ireland, a southwest Pacific command communique reported today. The Allies lost four aircraft.

United States marines on the eastern flank of their expanded invasion holdings at Cape Gloucester, New Britain, took the initiative against Japanese in the Borgen Bay area, using tanks and artillery with aerial support to drive the enemy farther east.

Today's communique said a direct bomb hit on a Japanese cruiser off New Hanover, north of the enemy base at Kavieng, New Ireland, was scored by a bomber from Admiral William F. Halsey's South Pacific air fleet.

Catalinas manned by Royal Australian air force fliers bombed Kavieng airdromes' supply areas Monday night, starting many fires, and the next day bombers blasted shipping in the harbor there and shot down three of 19 Japanese interceptors.

Food, Fuel Indices Show Chief Declines

Ottawa, January 6 — (CP)—The official cost-of-living index declined from 119.4 at November 1 to 119.3 at December 1, making the total wartime increase 18.4 per cent., the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported Wednesday.

"Decreases in indexes for foods and fuel and lighting overbalanced a rise in home furnishings and miscellaneous items," said the Bureau. "The food index dropped from 133.1 to 132.7 with declines for beef, pork, oranges, turnips and cabbage of greater importance than increases for butter, eggs and potatoes."

The Bureau said reduction in the fuel and lighting index from 113.3 to 111.9 was due to rebates in electricity bills in a considerable number of large cities. The index for home furnishings and services advanced from 118.2 to 118.8 due to increases in the furniture and chinaware sections.

Mosquitos Bomb Berlin and Other Targets in Reich

U.S. Bombers Shoot Down 95 Nazi Planes In Sweeping Raids Over Europe

52 PLANES LOST

By GLADWIN HILL
(Associated Press Staff Writer.)

London, Jan. 6 (AP)—Stettin, Germany's biggest port on the Baltic, was blasted by R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. heavy town wreckers last night and Berlin was bombed by Mosquito raiders in a double-edged assault calculated to disrupt the emergency supply system of the battered capital and shatter an important maritime lifeline to the Russian front.

Three R.C.A.F. squadrons flew with the Stettin raiders.

The Air Ministry, in announcing the Stettin attack, said the assault was carried out in bright moonlight on a heavy scale with the storm of bombs well concentrated on the objectives.

Besides hitting Berlin for the second night in a row, thus allowing the bomb-pitted capital but one night's surcease since Sunday, the Mosquitos directed other blows at targets in western Germany and northern France.

Fifteen aircraft were lost in the assorted attacks which included the 1,300-mile round trip raid on Stettin.

The latter port, a city of 260,000 which is 75 miles northeast of Berlin, was last hit April 20.

Key Peg in Structure

Besides being an important marine and railroad terminal for supply of Germany's Baltic front in Russia, Stettin is a key peg in Hitler's industrial structure where many submarines and small ships are turned out.

With extensive damage in the last few weeks to communications into Berlin and the disruption of the commercial centre of Leipzig to the south recently, it was likely, too, that much emergency traffic—including the shipment of bread—into Berlin had been diverted to routes through Stettin.

The bombing of the port city may, therefore, have been another blow in the battle of Berlin.

Berlin Half Destroyed

Reports from Switzerland yesterday said the German capital was now half destroyed and that another 25 per cent of the city was badly damaged.

The operation was the R.A.F.'s third big raid in five days of January and the fourth in eight

$50 Penalty Weekly For 31 Weeks For Rental Overcharge

Syracuse, N.Y., Jan. 6—(AP)—Mrs. Mary Bochino, 71-year-old widow, who charged 50 cents per week above the U.S. office of Price Administration maximum rental for an apartment must pay $1,500 to a tenant.

Morris R. Ward, the tenant, paid $5 weekly rental for 31 weeks. He sought, in his action, the $50 penalty provided under the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 for each week.

Justice Frank J. Cregg, directing the jury's verdict, said Mrs. Bochino had violated the act and therefore the court could exercise no discretion, however, much sympathy it had.

Winter Weather Over Entire Front

By DOUGLAS AMARON
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With Canadians in Italy, Jan. 6 — (CP Cable) — Winter weather closed down over the Canadian front Wednesday, limiting fighting to patrols and consolidation of ground gained between the Ortona-Pescara road and the Adriatic.

Wind blew in from the sea with gale force after an all-night rain which churned up mud dried by two days of sunshine. It was as cold and dry as a March day in Eastern Canada.

Victory by Maritime province troops (The Carleton and Yorks) Tuesday at "Point 59" cleared out the last of the enemy packed below the Tesore river and the only contact yesterday with the Germans was by mortars and artillery. Even they were quieter than usual.

The Germans were all dislodged from their coastal strongpoint by 10 o'clock Tuesday night after a brisk fight which the Martimers described as a field day. The enemy, obviously taken by surprise, left many dead behind them, 19 prisoners and all their weapons and equipment.

Canadian casualties were exceedingly light.

The attack was made by a company commanded by Maj. Jack Kennedy of St. Stephen, N.B., with platoons under Lieuts. Don Smith of Saint John, and George Morris of Sussex, N.B., seizing the objectives.

Australians Capture Nearest Point To Tokyo So Far by Sheer Daring

By KENNETH SLESSOR
(Official Australian War Correspondent.)
Distributed by The Canadian Press.

Australian Headquarters, New Guinea, Jan. 6—In gaining a foothold atop Shaggy Ridge, hung like a knife blade over the great Ramp Valley of New Guinea, Australian troops reached an outpost which is the nearest point to Tokyo so far obtained by Allied forces in the southwest Pacific.

It was a campaign of impertinence.

Dubbed the "one-man front" because the ridge top and its approaches are so narrow only one soldier could fight his way at a time, Japanese positions were captured in two hours.

The key to Shaggy Ridge itself is the "pimple."

This volcanic and rocky top, perched like a petrified sugar cone on the crest of the saddle, rises almost perpendicularly 100 feet above mile high Shaggy Ridge itself.

Its summit is only four feet wide and its rocky flank facing the Australian end in a slightly rounded, steep slope called the "Rock Face."

Natural Fortress

As a natural fortress, it commanded not only every inch of the single file trail approaching its face but also our own forward positions and transport airfields in the valley below.

From the notes of officers who have just returned it now is possible to give a clear outline of the fighting on Shaggy Ridge.

When the Japanese were driven out of the Ramu Valley last October, they made their stand on the dominating mountain spur which was christened Shaggy Ridge.

Of the eight miles of spurs, the Japanese held four miles to the north and the Australians four miles to the south with the fearsome "pimple" between.

For weeks the Australians clung grimly to their end of the ridge, harassing the Japanese incessantly but unable to go further against the threat from the "pimple."

Try Surprise Move

Australian commanders decided their best bet was to try to surprise and confuse the Japanese defenders by something special in the way of bombardments.

One of the greatest artillery barrages of its kind in the southwest Pacific was organized. More than 4,000 25-pounders were poured into the area of the "pimple."

The daily harassing fire of Australian guns had just ended when suddenly every available gun in the region burst into terrific and sustained barrage. Then the guns be-

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

EIGHT INCHES SNOW THIS TIME LAST YEAR

According to the official weather bureau in the city there was eight inches of snow lying on the ground one year ago today. The deepest the snow had become up to January 5th., last year was ten inches. The "unusual" weather this year indicates a mild winter, so far, but one of these days the city may find itself snowed under.

FOUR INCHES SNOW FALLS IN KINGSTON

Bay of Quinte area apparently is being favored above certain other near-by centres in a complete lack of snow thus far this season. Wednesday's drizzle of rain which continued most of the day and subsequently froze to make pavements and sidewalks icy, late in the evening turned to slushy snow and shortly after midnight the ground was covered. A slight turn for the milder, however, resulted in the wet snow disappearing down drains and sewers.

It was different in the district east of Belleville it was reported by travellers who stated four inches of snow fell in Kingston during the night.

City Public Works Department worked continuously Wednesday in an effort to keep streets sanded but the rain served to wash it off the grades. Calls for sand for sidewalks were frequent this morning.

POLICE RECOVER CROOKSTON MAN'S CAR

Taken by joyriders for a short spin, a Buick coupe, the property of Walter Bronson, Crookston, was recovered by police early Wednesday evening.

Mr. Bronson appeared at the police station shortly before eight o'clock complaining that his Buick coupe had been stolen from its parking position off Front St. Accompanying P. C. Evans in the police cruiser Mr. Bronson patrolled city streets until later Mr. Bronson's car was found parked at the upper end of Front St., some distance from where it was originally parked.

ASKS MORE CARE IN DUMPING GARBAGE

In an effort to keep fresh garbage as far from occupied houses as possible, the city engineer's department is asking that such refuse be dumped as close to the waterfront as feasible and in rows running east and west. When garbage is dumped indiscriminately the piles sometimes extend to the extreme north part of the city dump with resulting increased unpleasantness to residents living in the immediate vicinity. Recommended procedure is for the garbage to be dumped in east and west rows following which the material is levelled off by the bulldozer.

Acknowledgmens and thanks for ditty bags received during the Christmas week were received by Murray and James Arnott, sons of Sergt. and Mrs. C. R. Naturally the two lads are proud of the cards received.

CHARGED WITH FAILURE TO REPORT TO CAMP

Charged with failing to report to the Chalk River conscientious objectors' camp, Raymond A. McCoy, 156½ Church St., Belleville, was apprehended by P. C. Wright today on a warrant issued from Toronto. McCoy was arraigned before Miss Mary Butler, local justice of the peace, and remanded in custody until toomrrow's city court. Authorities announced McCoy had appeared before a conscientious objectors' tribunal at a previous date and established himself as a conscientious objector. It is alleged by the Selective Service mobilization authorities that McCoy failed to observe the order of the tribunal, namely to report at the Chalk River conscientious objectors' camp. The matter will be heard in tomorrow's court.

Slippery Streets Cause Several Minor Accidents

Despite the exceedingly slippery streets due to rain on Wednesday comparatively few motor accidents were reported in Belleville.

Theron Sager, 75 Dundas St., and driver of the city bus, reported to police the west hill bus had collided with a hydro pole on West Moira St., breaking the pole off. Mr. Sager was the driver and told police the slippery condition of the high-crowned street at the scene was responsible. The radiator of the bus was also damaged. None of the bus passengers sustained injury.

Boy Hit.

Seven-year-old Jerry Goyer, 90 South John St., was hit by a motor car near the intersection of Dundas and Church Sts. yesterday afternoon after he ran directly into the path of a motor car driven by Harry Yanover, 129 South John St. Fortunately Mr. Yanover was proceeding at a slow rate of speed, owing to the slippery conditions of the street, and the lad escaped uninjured.

Skids Into Truck.

Later in the day on Station St. a motor car driven by Malcolm Barriage, of this city, skidded into Callaghan's ice truck. The matter was reported to police and Barriage stated the road was quite slippery and the accident unavoidable. He assumed responsibility, he told police.

A Direct Winters transport skidded into the ditch opposite Albert College on West Dundas St. but no damage was reported as the result.

Motor vehicles in general experienced difficulty in obtaining traction, as sand placed on the streets by the Public Works Department was soon washed away by the rains, leaving the streets in an icy condition.

Unable to Negotiate Hills.

News stories are scarce these days, but as long as the rain and sleet continues there will be a regular flow of accounts of slippery streets, feet that cannot be controlled on the icy pavements, and many graceful and some not so graceful falls. Earlier in the day most of the exits from the city were closed to vehicular traffic due to the sleek surface of the roads, and until the city sander arrived, many private cars, trucks and large transports were unable to negotiate the hills. One instance is that of a large transport and trailer owned by the Borden Ice Cream Company, that arrived in the city before the rain began. The driver, when he did try to leave for Toronto, found that the West Hill resisted his every effort. After taking several trial runs at the hill he tried to get out via Yeomans Street, but this also was unsuccessful. The truck was brought back to the West Hill where, after a considerable amount of coaxing, and the application of ashes to the icy road, the driver managed to make the hill and proceed toward his destination. No word has as yet been received by Mr. Bill Hopson, manager of the Borden Company, as to whether he was successful in passing the Port Hope hill.

Police Direct Traffic.

City police were kept active throughout the day directing traffic and diverting it from the hills, especially Victoria Ave. hill. An incident developed on this street when an R.C.A.F. ambulance tried to climb the slippery hill. The wheels of the vehicle spun at top speed but made no progress. Constable Harold Taylor went to the rescue and suggested that they give up trying to make the hill and go along Dundas. The driver of the ambulance agreed to the suggestion and they decided to turn the car around. There were four passengers in the back compartment, two stretcher cases and two who were "walking casualties," or not sick enough to warrant a stretcher. The two latter airmen were called upon to lend a hand and, between them and Constable Taylor, they pushed the ambulance around until it was headed down the hill. Had they waited another two minutes their way would have been made easy as the city sander arrived on the scene and sprayed sand over the surface of the road.

Rains All Night.

The rain continued throughout the night intermitantly with snow and a total of 0.36 inches fell. For a short while around midnight it looked as though the city was going to be blanketed with a heavy coat of snow, but the snowfall gave way to the rain after a few minutes and melted into a thick coating of wet slush. Pedestrians found the slush uncomfortable, where it hid puddles of water beneath its deceiving cover and, where what appeared a fairly solid looking patch of frozen slush, there was a pool of water that saturated shoes and stockings when the foot crushed through the crust.

An effort to establish the reason for the "unusual" weather failed to account for it. Belleville may not be isolated in this condition of mildness mid-way through what started to be a severe winter, but the citizens of the city are urged by the Medical Health Officer to take extra precautions to protect themselves from colds, which might develop into flu. Wet feet should be guarded against by all means.

H. Cory Gives Account of Trenton's Financial Standing to Rotary Club

Trenton, (Special) — Following their usual custom at the opening meeting of the New Year, Trenton Rotarians were hosts to the Mayor and council on Monday evening, January 3rd., with Mayor H. R. Cory as the principal speaker. He was introduced by Past President of Rotary, W. H. Ireland.

Mr. Cory gave first hand facts and figures regarding the town's financial standing, as only one could do who has guided the ratepayers' interests for the past ten years.

Of the present he reviewed figures, telling of the various debentures, etc., and stressing the fact that after 1946 the only town debts would be high and public schools, the latter of which expires in 1947 leaving only public schools to be dealt with.

He told of the extra expenditures which had been paid during the past year showing a total of $28,711 spent in 1943 over and above 1942, which included a reduction of two mills in the tax rate. Current figures, he said, show surplus at the end of 1943 of $87,036.35 and this amount has been definitely earmarked for the building of a new city hall, the need for which has been keenly felt for many years and cost of which will be approximately $100,000. The site has already been chosen and it is expected the property will be bought immediately namely, the Capitol theatre lot and the Bensley House on King Street, at a price of $1,500 and $3,500 respectively. The council also proposes the spending of $500 for various war services during the coming year, $5,000 extra for streets and sidewalks, $5,000 extra for sewers and $1,500 for the Bay Shore Park.

Speaking of the proposed Trenton General Hospital, His Worship said that before any donation would be made from the town's funds, the people would be given the opportunity of expressing their willingness by ballot.

Of interest to all was the startling statement that for the first time in the history of the town the uncollected taxes were below the $100,000 mark, namely $87,686.57.

The thanks of the Rotary Club to Mayor Cory for his interesting address was expressed by Rotarian Joe Berry.

Although they are wanted in Hamilton now, the court moved to ascertain if the Big Brother Movement of that city would be responsible for the teenage lads in the event suspended sentences were meted out.

Burton Corby, Sidney Township, appeared on a charge of stealing his employer's truck. No evidence was adduced and the matter was enlarged for one week. Corby was allowed his freedom on his own recognizance.

Butler, local barrister, appearing for the accused woman, was granted a week's enlargement. After two years at it, he took a half-holiday to celebrate his 80th birthday.

Number of 'Fags' Sent Growing Larger Each Week

With the holiday festive season all but a forgotten memory the business of providing cigarettes for Belleville boys serving overseas is again prominent in the activities of the Kinsmen "Fag Fund".

The provision of Canadian smokes must continue weekly if the morale of our troops is to be kept at the high level shown in the North African, Sicilian and now Italian campaigns, to say nothing of those in the North Atlantic sea lanes and the boys flying over enemy territory in our bombers and fighter planes. It is for these Belleville boys the Kinsmen "Fag Fund" continues to operate and provide cigarettes for our own city's sons each week.

The list of Belleville boys sent individual packages of 300 cigarettes this week through the fund reads:-

One of three brothers in the armed services, Pte. Ralph Edmund Bassett, son of Mrs. Nettie Bassett and the late Clarence Bassett, 1½ Everett St., is seriously ill as the result of being wounded on Dec. 23 in Italy, according to word received by his mother. Veteran of the Sicilian campaign, Pte. Bassett enlisted in the Hastings & Prince Edward Regiment in 1939 and went overseas with the 1st contingent. One of his brothers, Pte. Clarence C. Bassett, enlisted in the Royal Montreal Regiment in 1939 and later transferred to the Survey Troops and is believed still to be in England. The second brother, Pte. Elmer F. Ice Storage Soon Under Way

With the turn of the year and through reason of ice houses becoming depleted of last year's pack, local ice dealers are again preparing equipment for the sawing and storing of next summer's ice supply. Smith Coal and Ice Company, which with Callaghan's, supplies the majority of the ice needs for the city, today indicated that a start on the annual ice harvest was expected to be made next week.

No ice for storing has yet been cut in the city it was intimated, although the Smith Company stated they had been cutting what was needed for immediate use of their domestic customers.

Sub-zero temperatures of a week or so ago served to create a good depth of ice on the Bay of Quinte, there being approximately 12 inches of good clear ice in the area ordinarily used for ice cutting purposes. The almost complete absence of snow this season has resulted in there being absolutely no snow ice which normally is evident in other years.

BLASTING A JAP BASE IN MARSHALL ISLANDS

Geysers of smoke and debris fly skyward from the Japanese aerodrome at Jaluit, Jap base in the Marshall Islands, as bombs from U. S. navy planes score direct hits during the attack made last November. Systematic destruction of these island bases continues to tighten the noose that eventually will strangle the Japs in the Pacific.

Tito Steadily Driving Nazis From Banja Luka

London, Jan. 6 — (CP) — Headquarters of Marshal Josip Broz' (Tito) Yugoslav Army of Liberation announced today his forces were steadily driving the enemy from Banja Luka as the sixth day of bitter street fighting raged in that Croatian base of the 2nd German tank army.

All enemy units were declared driven from the valley of the Cetina River which empties into the Adriatic just south of the port of Split.

The bulletin said trapped Germans had attempted to break out of the encircled town of Novomesto in Slovenia, but a stout ring of Partisans threw them back.

U. S. SOLDIERS GRATEFUL

Cairo, Jan. 6 — (AP) — American soldiers aboard a convoy yesterday chipped in $4,000 to express their gratitude to R. A. F. fighter pilots who drove off two attacks by enemy planes. The money will go to the dependents of any casualties among the air crews defending the convoy.

PRINCE BERNHARD HONORED

Washington, Jan. 6 — (CP) — President Roosevelt has presented Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands with the insignia of Commander of the Legion of Merit at the White House, it was learned yesterday.

ALLIED GENERALS DISCUSS STRATEGY

General Mark Clark, commander of the American 5th Army, recently paid a visit at the headquarters of the Italian commander, General Capino, during which they were photographed, as shown here. The Italian army is in the field again now, helping to free Italy from the Germans. Both infantry and artillery units have been in action recently in the Mignano sector of the 5th Army front.

RAF Light Bombers Attack Objectives In Northern France

London, Jan. 6 —(CP)— Small formations of R.A.F. light bombers and fighter-bombers again attacked military objectives in northern France—the designation used in recent weeks to describe German defence installations, possibly including rocket guns—this morning, it was officially announced.

The light bombers, escorted by Canadian, R.A.F. and Allied fighters, downed an enemy fighter and Canadian fighters destroyed two more. One Allied fighter and one bomber were lost.

days—a record pace for what normally is the year's worst weather period.

Meanwhile, the Stockholm Aftontidningen reported the arsenal and the important Deutsche Werke naval shipyard at Kiel were almost completely destroyed in yesterday's heavy bomber raid in which airfields at Bordeaux and Tours in France and other industrial targets in western Germany were hard hit. The shipyard built the pocket battleship Luetzow, the battleship Gneisenau and the aircraft carrier Graf Zeppelin.

Shoot Down 95 Nazi Planes.

The big U.S. bombers and escorting fighters which participated in the sweeping raids on Germany and France yesterday were credited officially with shooting down 95 Nazi planes—the biggest score hung up since the Dec. 11 attack on Emden when 138 enemy fighters were destroyed.

Yesterday's raids, which extended over a record 800-mile front, cost a total of 25 heavy bombers and 12 fighters.

Of the 95 German planes shot down, gunners on the heavy bombers accounted for 62 while the escorting fighters—including R.A.F., R.C.A.F. and Allied craft—knocked down 33.

R.C.A.F. Spitfires helped cover the withdrawal of the U.S. bombers from Tours and a communique issued today said little enemy opposition was met and all Canadian aircraft returned safely.

Second Assault On Kiel.

Other Canadian fighter squadrons supplied fighter over for R.A.F. medium bombers pounding the invasion coast of France, the communique added.

The attack on Kiel was the second assault on that vital German shipbuilding centre by heavy bombers in as many days. The Berlin radio said the industrial city of Duesseldorf also was attacked, but this was not immediately confirmed.

To reach their targets, airmen knifed through strong defences which included rocket planes and fighters towing what appeared to be new type anti-aircraft bombs. Returning fliers said the bombs seemed to be about the size of 100-pounders and were towed on 40 or 50 feet of cable.

Despite the opposition the assault was described as successful.

PARENTS ARRESTED

New York, Jan. 6 —(AP)— Accused of leaving their two babies alone in a heatless tenement while they went to a movie, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jiro were arrested today on a charge of endangering the lives of the children.

Jiro, 25, and his wife, Julia, 23, had been taken before Children's Court Justice Herbert O'Brien, who placed the two children, Frances, 2, and Frank, one year old, in the care of the New York Foundling Hospital.

JURY RECOMMENDS CARE OF 6 CHILDREN TO C.A.S.

Windsor, Jan. 6—(CP)—Death of three-year-old Reginald Burleigh here last week was attributed, by a coroner's jury last night, to some form of violence not brought out in evidence submitted. The jury recommended Mrs. Herbert R. Burleigh, mother of the child, be relieved of the care and welfare of her remaining six children and that they be entrusted to the Children's Aid Society. airmen and get back to Spitfires with an artificial limb.

Bdr. Mert Beatty of Moose Jaw, Sask., was put out of action by a shell from a British fighter plane. Mistaking the plane for an enemy, an ack-ack battery near Beatty fired on it. Assuming the fire to be of enemy origin, the plane strafed the area and one of its small shells scored a direct hit on the westerner.

"I won't be sitting down for a long time, was the way Beatty smilingly explained where he was hit.

Battlefields Far Behind

On Board army hospital train enroute to Montreal, Jan. 6—(CP)— With Mediterranean battlefields far behind and their home towns close ahead, the second large contingent of returning Canadian wounded are aboard this train today.

Men who faced enemy fire and bitter enemy resistance in Sicily and Italy are lying in their cots and through the hospital car windows watching with almost unbelieving eyes the Canadian winter countryside—many of them for the first time in four long years.

Also on board are three veterans of the hell that was Dieppe, shot down on the beaches, captured and held in German prison camps for the past year and a half. They are Pte. Glenn D. Schwegler of Toronto and the Royal Regiment of Canada, L. Cpl. Ernest J. McMillan of Windsor and Pte. Norman W. Colley of Windsor and the Essex Scottish. The trio was part of the group recently repatriated from Germany, but were left behind to recuperate further in England.

This hospital train was loaded at Halifax yesterday afternoon, shortly after the arrival of the Canadian Hospital Ship, Lady Nelson. Routed over the main Canadian National Railways line, it will pass through Montreal, Kingston, Toronto, London and on to Windsor. It is carrying wounded and other war casualties to Quebec and Ontario only.

A second hospital train, loaded some hours later, routed over Canadian Pacific Railway to Saint John, N. B., will skirt Montreal, pass through Ottawa and proceed to Vancouver with casualties for the western provinces.

Cheerful Patients

The patients, cheerful and extremely glad to be back in their homeland, are proud that they have done their bit even if reticent to talk about it. They did no bragging about their own part in the fighting. They did not have to "sound off," as their wounds and the crusaders shield of the 8th Army, worn on their shoulders or sleeves, bore ample testimony that they had been in the "big show."

A brother of one of Canada's Dieppe heroes, Lt.-Col. C. I. Merritt, who won the Victoria Cross there, was among the wounded arriving at Halifax. He is Capt. F. W. I. Merritt, of the Seaforth Highlanders, from Vancouver, who received leg wounds in Sicily. He is aboard the coast-bound C. P. R. hospital train.

Eastern Ontario men include Pte. R. E. Shannon of Picton, Pte. H. Hyatt of Trenton, Pte. L. W. Hughes of Tamworth, Pte. H. Munro of Belleville and Sgt. J. F. Jenkins, Picton.

Western Ontario men include L. Bdr. J. P. McCauley and Sgt. H. A. Turnbull, both of Stratford, Pte. Joseph Lamarre of Waterford, Pte. D. H. Robinson, L. Cpl. J. F. Parker both of London, Pte. C. H. Mitchell, Kitchener and three from Ridgetown, Pte. C. H. Shamley, Sigmn. L. J. Wilson and L. Cpl. J. W. Legue.

5TH ARMY OPENS

None of the aircraft was lost despite the hazards from treetops, mountain peaks and small arms fire.

The taking of San Vittore would open the way to Cassino, the main Allied objective in western Italy for many weeks, and the breaking up of defences at Cassino would open the path to Rome through a broad valley where armored forces could be used.

British troops, in the southern half of the sector, captured 47 German prisoners as they advanced on the bend of the Garigliano river. Most of them appeared to be youths of about 20.

To the northeast, in the 8th Army sector, Canadians took a height overlooking the village of Torre Mucchio. Fighting was severe along the Adriatic coast, while inland British artillery shelled German transport near Orsogna.

Making one of their deepest penetrations of the Adriatic, the British destroyers Jauna and Jervis, 1,690-ton sister ships, tossed between 200 and 300 shells into German communications at Pesaro, south of Rimini.

Spitfires bombed shipping and port installations at oft-hammered Civitavecchia, northwest of Rome, and at Port Ercole near Orbetello on the western coast.

Build Siegfried Line

A development that foreshadowed heavy fighting was the information given by German prisoners that Nazi engineers were busy completing an Italian "Siegfried Line" several miles deep and as powerful as similar German fortifications in western Europe.

The intention, presumably, was to halt the Allies short of Rome as the Nazis were said to be erecting these fortifications just several miles back of the present battle line Strongest points of the line were said to be located in the neighborhood of Cassino, opposite the Anglo-American 5th Army, and inland from Pescara, Adriatic seaport which Canadian forces of the 8th Army are nearing.

Stalin Sees Year of Victory

Premier Joseph Stalin of Russia is also one who is "convinced that 1944 will be a year of victory for the United Nations." A propos of this is his view expressed in a message to Premier Puric of Yugoslavia that "the moment is not far distant when the Yugoslav people will achieve liberation from Hitler's tyranny." These expectations are founded on a mass of facts such as the Allied victories which have been taking place during the past year and more and the towering strength of the United Nations.

Montgomery and the 8th Army

One of the friendships that will endure in the hearts of men and in history is the association of General Sir Bernard Montgomery with the now famous 8th British Army. Now Gen. Montgomery has bidden farewell to the army in Italy. The farewell was a scene typical of scenes in which the general has figured. He now goes to command Britain's land forces in England for the supreme assault upon Hitler.

Montgomery's has been a remarkable record with the 8th Army, never a single failure in all the eighteen months together all the way from the sands of El Alamein to midway up the Adriatic coast of Italy. How confident he was in his army is shown in these words to his officers: "during the whole time I have commanded the 8th Army I have had only two anxious moments. My great endeavor has been to conceal that fact from anybody else and I would be interested to know if any ever knew what were these anxious moments." The first was at the time of the attack on Tripoli on Jan. 15 and the second time when the army left Tripoli advancing towards the Mareth Line. Now "the situation is good," he told officers. When he joined the 8th Army in August, 1942, "in those days things were not good."

The leader speaks in unique style. "If you were to say to me: What is the first essential for success in war? I would say the human factor. We must remember it is not the tank, the armored car or the battleship that is going to win this war. It is men, inside them. This is a terribly important thing. Everything hinges on the human factor."

He has made some of the wisest sayings and made some of the most concrete and graphic speeches for he is a believer in the spoken word. "I have never once issued a written order to my subordinate generals about operations. Command must be personal and it must be verbal; otherwise it will have no success, because it is wrapped up in the human factor."

He is a reader of the Bible and is intimate with it as his troops know. To the officers he said he had a passage from the New Testament at the back of his mind, "Except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken?"

His statement to the officers about "the human factor" in success in war was emphasized in the address which he later read to all ranks when he expressed admiration for the officers and men "who have been my comrades during months of hard and victorious fighting and whose courage and devotion always filled me with admiration."

It was to be expected that this leader would speak thus, "I feel I have many friends among the soldiery of this great army. I do not know if you will miss me but I will miss you more than I can say and especially will miss the personal contacts and cheerful greetings we exchanged together when we passed each other on the road."

There lies the secret of some of the charm of this great army leader. To those under his command he could say as they had the same experiences together, "We have not had a single failure; we have been successful in everything we have undertaken. I know this has been largely due to the devotion to duty and wholehearted co-operation of every officer and man rather than to anything I may have been able to do myself." Later on he said "that the result has been mutual confidence between a commander and his troops is a pearl of very great price."

He had great praise for the Desert Air Force which had fought with the 8th Army throughout the whole of its victorious progress. "Every soldier is proud to acknowledge that the support of this strong and powerful air force has been a battle-winning factor of first importance. We owe the Allied air forces in general and the Desert Air Force in particular a very great debt of gratitude."

There is a great deal of sentiment about this great leader who said, "When the heart is full, it is not easy to speak but I would say this to you; you have made this army what it is. You have made its name a household word all over the world. Therefore you must uphold its good name and traditions."

His last words closed on the high ideal of friendship and of "meeting again this time as comrades in arms in the final stages of the war."

General Montgomery has always had the highest opinion of the First Division of Canadians whom he has called "the veterans of the 8th Army" and recently he said during the battle of the Moro River, "Canadians always do well."

Coming Home to Roost

Hitler's attacks upon the world are coming home to roost. Quite a number are already back greatly amplified. One is the air war which he thought to use to conquer British hearts and he failed and now the air war is tearing his cities to pieces, rending his railway systems and cutting up his industrial production into shreds. For years German casualties have been coming into the land of the makers of war and they still come with deadly iteration.

Now the time approaches when there will be a complete obliteration of Nazism. The might of air, sea and land power which Hitler by his crimes invited to attack Germany has been gathering for many months and the climax nears when armed might which Hitler never expected to see will burst in upon his fortress Europe and wipe out every vestige of opposition. Germany has courted the worst pounding and hammering any nation has received or will ever receive. The proverb, the mills of the gods grind slow but they grind exceedingly small, holds as ever. Germany has begun to pay in most deadly earnest and even Hitler must realize it now.

The atrocities he launched upon the innocent call for judgment and Hitler himself with his Nazi friends will stand with the war criminals. He gave no mercy and the time has come when the war-maker, Germany will have to crave for cessation of the mechanism of war which he set in motion. Hitler's crimes are of a nature that will not be forgotten.

Bonfire Message to Denmark

This Christmas, as in previous war years, a huge bonfire was lit at Helsingborg in Sweden, directly opposite Elsinore in Denmark, as a visual Christmas greeting to the black-out Danes across the Sound, which at this point is only two and a half miles wide. This year the bonfire ritual was made especially significant by the presence of many Danish refugees who earlier in the fall had escaped to Sweden to avoid the German terror. Joel Laurin, Mayor of Helsingborg, made an address and the national anthems of the two countries were sung. On the Danish side, the Mayor of Elsinore, P. Christensen, spoke at a gathering watching the Swedish bonfire practically from the shadow of the Shakespearian Hamlet castle, "Kronberg." According to the Copenhagen correspondent of Dagens Nyheter of Stockholm, he said that the annual Christmas bonfire in Sweden was a symbol of the common Scandinavian will for freedom and desire for peace which can never be extinguished.

JAPS

When first the Japs began to rise
They took from us our shirts and ties
Our swallow-tails and high silk hats,
Our canes, brief cases and our spats
And thus equipped the world advised:
"We Nipponese are civilized!"

Next, dressed as gentlemen, they took Upon our ways a second look
And found we had throughout our land
Machines for what they did by hand.
So students from the Rising Sun
Were sent to learn how they were run.

They borrowed, copied and they stole
Whate'er they wished, in part or whole,
Always with manners most polite
And bowing both to left and right.
With smiles, to cover morals bad,
They took most everything we had.

But they forgot to take along
Our simple code of right and wrong
And so, though wearing high silk hats
And coats becoming diplomats
And like good men of culture dressed,
The Japs are savages at best.

LOOKING BACKWARDS

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

20 YEARS AGO

JANUARY 6th., 1924

Belleville Intermediates defeated the Kingston Frontenacs in a hockey match here. Weir and Frechette were the stars for the local team with plenty of credit to Boland the goal tender. For the visitors Lloyd Brown was effective, but spent too much time in the "pen" for his bad man tactics. Joe Smith is as good as ever and was also dangerous, and MacNeill their net guardian deserves a liberal share of any credit going to the enemy camp. Rink Manager Garfield Arnott had a nice sheet of ice for the boys and popular airs were played by the band. The following composed the team: Belleville, P. Boland, W. Green, W. Finkle, F. Goyer, C. Frechette, V. Weir, subs., S. Hagerman and S. Symons. Kingston, H. MacNeill, Lieut. Panet, L. Brown, F. Brown, F. Bellringer, subs., F. Gaulin and P. Murray.

The Quinte Male Quartette which is a part of the Tabernacle Choir is worthy of much praise. The Church is fortunate in securing men who can do such excellent work as was shown in their rendition on Sunday evening of "Glorious Things". At this service Dr. Haffner and Mr. Sanford Burrows rendered vocal solos in splendid voice. The quartette is composed of Messrs. A. F. Stillman, Harry R. Moorman, Fred Burke and Dr. Haffner. Much credit is due Mrs. Duff, the organist, in getting together such an excellent choir, and Lieut. Hinchey showed himself quite as capable in directing a choir as he is in directing a band.

In the municipal election here yesterday Mayor J. F. Wills was re-elected Mayor for 1914 over A. Robinson by a majority of 39. The following were elected aldermen: Messrs. O'Flynn, Panter, Platt, McFee, Wallbridge, Woodley, Duckworth, Smith and St. Charles. The following were defeated: White, Treverton, McGinty, Lott and Hunter.

The following were recently installed officers of the local C. M. B. A.: President C. P. Peppin; First Vice President C. Kelleher; Second Vice President T. Callaghan; Recording Secretary, V. Huffman; Assistant Secretary J. Murphy; Financial Secretary H. L. Ingram; Treasurer E. McGinty; Marshal R. Smith; Guard James Malyea.

INMATES IN ZOO REMOVED

London, Jan. 6 — (CP) — The German-controlled Vichy radio said today that all the animals remaining in the once-famous Berlin zoo had been removed after the last heavy raid on the German capital the night of Jan. 2. Most of the animals were sent to BBarcelona, said the broadcast.

Previous reports from Berlin through neutral sources said many of the animals had escaped from the zoo during the heavy bombing and that they had been hunted down by soldiers armed with tommy-guns.

BOATS MOVE FREELY ABOUT TORONTO HARBOR

Toronto, Jan. 6—(CP)—For the first time in 40 years boats can move about freely in Toronto Harbor on Jan. 6, for, according to harbor officials, "there isn't enough ice for a cocktail." Harbor Master Harold Snelgrove said it looks as though boats could have run in and out of Toronto throughout the 1943-44 winter.

Canadian Scene A Century Ago

By J. L. G.

Homage is due those who laid the foundations of a prosperous Canada. Let us read about the joys and sorrows of this earlier day and find hope for the future in the record of what has been accomplished by hard work and wise planning.

There were so few trained nurses and qualified doctors in Canada prior to 1840 that it may well be said that they were non-existent. However, there was usually a "born" nurse somewhere in the neighbourhood with skill in performing blood-letting and people were bled for practically every illness. Nursing developed into an art only towards the close of the century. Florence Nightingale's trip to the Crimea, where she headed a nursing staff for the care of wounded soldiers, did more to popularize nursing training and raise its status than any other event of the time.

That folk lived to a ripe old age in the old days in Canada seems almost a miracle, but an open-air life does help build hardy bodies! One of the jobs that took the men outdoors was the sheep-washing and shearing, arranged for around the end of May. After each sheep was washed clean and the fleece had dried, the wool was cut off and picked over to remove blemishes. Then the wool was spread out and sprinkled with grease, after which it was gathered up and sent away to be carded into rolls for spinning. Some settlers did their own carding.

Other outdoor work included the gathering of maple sap and the making of syrup and sugar. No wonder the maple became Canada's national emblem! Early settlers depended on this gracious tree for all the sweetness in their food. It gave the sugar for home-made tea and coffee, the icing for cakes, syrup for pancakes, taffy for candy-pulls. . . . When sugaring-off time came 'round the whole family got busy hanging out containers to catch the precious sap. This was boiled down into syrup and maple sugar. Not just a few pounds of sugar but hundreds for each household, and this was enough to tide the pioneers over until the next spring. In the hamlets, Indians peddled maple sugar from door to door in birch bark baskets at attractive prices.

Letter To The Editor

WANTON DESTRUCTION

Editor,

The Ontario Intelligencer,

I know there is a paper shortage, which to a certain extent may limit the amount of space available in the daily paper, but I trust that you may be able to allot me a small corner somewhere in your columns, for the purpose of drawing to the attention of the citizenry of Belleville an apparent practice, which I find difficult to understand.

Belleville is known as the City of Beautiful Trees, but most of the trees now adorning our streets, were planted years ago. These trees, because most of them are old, are gradually being cut down and if our city of the future is to continue to be known by it trees, new ones must be planted to replace the old ones and also to fill in those spaces on streets, which do not have a continual line of trees.

However, to this program aimed at beautifying our city, must be added an effort to teach respect for trees and the purpose for which they were planted.

Some three years ago the writer purchased and planted a tree in front of his home. A few months later that tree was broken and destroyed by someone. The following spring another tree was purchased and planted in the same spot. You can imagine the dismay of the writer, when he arrived home yesterday, to find this second tree destroyed by someone, who had broken the top completely off.

Who was responsible for the misdeed is not known nor is the writer at all anxious to learn that identity, but he would consider it a kindness to be told why he should not plant a tree. He would be saved expense, time and effort.

On the other hand, if it was a child or children who committed this destruction and it seems reasonable to believe that only a child in a moment of thoughtfulness, acted thus, I suggest that a program of education be inaugurated at once and sponsored either publicly or domestically, to teach respect for trees and all efforts aimed at beautifying our homes and our city.

Thank you.

West Hill Resident.

RING IS FIRST LOST, THEN LOSER'S NAME

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Jan. 6—(CP)—A Sault woman noticed her wedding ring missing after trying gloves on in a local store. Search was made high and low for the ring and it was finally given up for lost. From Chicago word reached the store that a wedding ring had been found in a pair of gloves bought in the Sault and would be returned upon its identification. Now the name of the ring-loser is lost.

GREAT PROJECTS OPEN NORTHWEST FOR WAR, PEACE

Gigantic Undertakings Following Opening of Alaska Highway at or Near Completion as Year Ends

By JACK SULLIVAN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Edmonton, Dec. 24.—(CP) — It took a war to tame Canada's much-storied northland, but this great territory enters 1944 sprinkled with the sweat of its conquerors — a huge invasion force that broke it down through sheer inventive genius and fortitude.

Dictates of the war made necessary the opening of the northwest, linking the arsenals of the United States and Canada with outlying defence posts. To day it bristles with a chain of strategically-situated airports, and planes, both Canadian and American, range far out into the Pacific along the great sword of the Aleutians pointing at the heart of Japan.

The path-finding for this hitherto comparative unexplored region was blazed by a band of daring Canadian bush pilots and the pioneer work proved to be of inestimable value when the time came for building the 1,630-mile Alaska Highway to the Yukon, and allied projects, including the $130,000,000 Canol oil project at Fort Norman, N.W.T., the longest open-wire telephone line in the world, stepping-stone stop-offs for Russia-bound planes and the world's longest overland mail route.

The highway snakes its way from Dawson Creek, B.C., to Whitehorse, Y.T., through wild timberlands, over treacherous muskegs and up along the lofty glacier regions of the Yukon and Alaska. An American undertaking the $115,000,000 road was started in March, 1942, and was officially opened as a pioneer road nine months later.

A Co-operative Effort.

Although built with American funds, it will become Canadian property after the war, with the stipulation that no discrimination be made against traffic originating in the United States.

Thousands of United States army engineer troops, bolstered by American and Canadian civilian crews, fought and hacked their way through hitherto - untrammelled land. These men worked with heart-breaking speed in weather that slithered from above-zero temperature to 40 and 50 degrees below zero.

Bridges were built over treacherous rivers as the workers went along. Some, including the $1,750,000 suspension bridge over the swift-flowing Peace River, compare favorably with any in the cities of Canada and the United States.

Canol, developed to provide much-needed fuel for the United States army in Alaska and Canada, is about 1,500 miles of pipeline with the Norman Wells oilfields on the Mackenzie River as its source. Completion of this project is scheduled for January 15.

Farthest North Oilfield

Canol, which stands for Canadian Oil Lines, is the farther north oil field in the world, approximately 1,000 miles north of Calgary by air.

The U.S. army signal corps also entered the picture for development of the north, completing in November, 1943, the final link in the 2,026-mile telephone system from Edmonton to Fairbanks, Alaska. It marked the first time in history overland communication between the United States and its largest territorial possession was possible.

The system extends from Edmonton to Fairbanks along the route of the Alaska Highay, then stretches from Fairbanks to Anchorage paralleling the Alaska Railroad.

Another by-product of the highway is the daily overland mail route from Dawson Creek to Fairbanks. Mail for both Canadians and Americans along the various posts and stations on the highway is sorted at Edmonton, shipped by Northern Alberta Railway to Dawson Creek and then taken over by U.S. army postal trucks.

The 1,600-mile run from Dawson Creek to Fairbanks takes a total elapsed time of three days, 19 hours.

Middle Age is What You Make It.

From time to time I look over the album of drawings of Charles Dana Gibson. One of these that always causes a smile, yet a serious smile, is that showing a very old wealthy man seated at a long beautiful table which in previous years must have been surrounding at times by many guests. All the aged man is now able to eat is porridge and milk. Underneath the drawing are the words:

"Backward, turn backward, Time in thy flight,
Make me a boy again just for tonight".

The image present in the old man's mind and shown by the artist, is a small boy seated at a table on wh'ch is a turkey and all that goes with it.

In these days when, as we grow older, we are thinking of the ailments of middle and old age—heart disease, high blood pressure, a stroke, kidney disease—it would be well for us to give the Gibson picture some thought. It is only too true that it is our eating habits—large meals, small meals, irregular meals, lack of vitamins in meals, not enough or too much "roughage" in our meal, constipation, diarrhoea and other conditions related to eating— that is the underlying cause of the heart, bloodvessel, and kidney ailments from which we suffer at middle age and older.

Although physicians today are busy with these "degenerative" diseases, they know more about food, diet, and health habits than at any previous time. A visit to your physician at least once a year not only for physical examination but for a talk on health habits, would greatly prevent or delay the onset of the diseases of middle age.

Some suggestions by Dr. Boris Sokoloff in his book "Middle Age is What You Make It" are worthy of our attention.

"Do not overload your stomach with too much food at one time. It is better to eat more frequently but only a moderate amount at one meal. Do not go to the other extreme and starve yourself. Bulk (roughage) plays an important part in stimulating the muscle walls of the intestines to activity. People on starvation diets are always constipated".

"Drink a sufficient amount of fluids daily. One cannot expect to pass a normal, moist stool if the body is dehydrated (doesn't contain enough water".)

Avoid taking laxatives and cathartics. Enemas of lukewarm water, 2 level teaspoons of salt to a quart of water—may be used when no natural movement occurs.

Bricks in Reverse

W. L. CLARK in Windsor Star

Throughout the C.C.F. sessions in Regina there was a running complaint that the other parties are attacking the C.C.F. and that other groups are pointing out flaws in the C.C.F. program and doubting the sincerity of some of the leaders of that party.

After spending the past ten years lambasting everybody in sight and imputing insincerity and dishonesty to all supporters of all other political parties, except perhaps the Communist, th. C.C.F. now finds it is no longer alone on the offensive. Members of the C.C.F. are finding some bricks being thrown at their party instead of by their party.

The C.C.F. boys should not complain. They have been calling names and making blanket charges for longer than most of them can remember. Now, some of the others are asking questions about the C.C.F. and making a few charges against the party.

CLIMATIC ZONES

The present world-wide war, with its far-flung battlefronts, is making people more conscious of geography, latitudes, longitudes, time belts and climatic zones.

The earth is divided into five grand divisions in respect to latitude and temperature.

They take their names from the prevailing climate and are known as the torrid, north temperate, south temperate, north frigid, and south frigid zones.

Their boundaries are parallels of latitude and their width is determined by the amount of inclination of the earth's axis to the plane of the ecliptic—about 23 degrees and 27 minutes.

The torrid zone is 46 degrees 54 minutes wide, and is all the earth's surface between the parallels known as the Tropic of Cancer and the Tropic of Capricorn, which are 23 degrees 27 minutes north and south of the Equator.

Because the sun is always vertically overhead at some point in this zone a warm climate prevails.

The north and south frigid zones lie between the poles and the polar circles, which are 23 degrees 27 minutes from the poles. Here the climate is cold because the sun strikes the earth obliquely, and at every point in each zone there is at least one day in the year when the sun does not rise and one when it does not set.

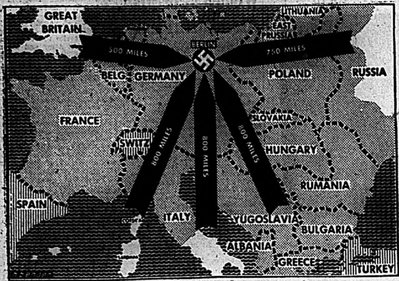
The north and south temperate zones lie between the polar circles and the torrid zone and each is about 43 degrees six minutes wide. Their climate is variable because the sun is always south of the zenith at noon in the north temperate zone and north of it in the south temperate zone, but it rises and sets in each throughout the year.

Owing to the flattened figure of the earth, the length of a degree of latitude varies from 69,407 miles near the poles to 68,704 near the Equator.

Thus the width of the torrid zone is about 3,225 miles, and the frigid zones are each slightly more than half that width.

This classification of the earth into zones is very ancient and is supposed to have been first conceived about 500 years B.C. by the Greek Parmenides. The zones on the earth's surface were intended to correspond to the zones into which the astronomers had already divided the heavens.

DEATH TRAP SET FOR NAZIS IN 1944



As the New Year begins, a determined world cries: "On to Berlin!" From every direction men will march and planes will fly. Smashing from the east will be the Russian juggernaut, while other Allied armies push through the Balkans and across the Channel. Other forces will drive from Corsica through Italy and across Poland and Yugoslavia.

Luftwaffe Can't Defend Armies and Cities Both

(By Squadron Leader John Strachey in London Calling)

It's part of my job to study the photographs of bombed German cities. I have in front of me now a photograph of the industrial area of Kassel. Kassel is an inland town of the same type as, say, Wolverhampton or Leicester or Derby—medium sized, highly industrial, a tangle of streets and railway and engineering works.

The photograph I am looking at was taken eight days after Bomber Command's last attack on the place. Patches of smoke still hang over some streets; but they're transparent and beneath them lies the shell of what once was a town. The railway stations are crumbled. In the great engineering plants every other shed is gone; and, inevitably, the buildings which housed their workers are now mere rows of gutted skeletons.

As you look at this picture you almost smell the bitter, raw smell that once we knew in Britain; you can almost feel again in your throat the dust and grit of the Blitz. Hitler did it all to us, to the very limits of his power; but that is destruction such as we in Britain never knew—not of course, that that's the reason why we're doing it to him now. On the contrary, we bomb because we could not possibly leave the factories of Germany intact for a single hour after we had the power to destroy them. For these factories are pouring out weapons which at this moment are being used to kill and maim our men, and the Russians, and the Americans, on all the battle fronts of Europe. We could not look our men in the face if we hesitated for a moment.

One by one, the main centres of German production must be destroyed. The cities of the Ruhr have gone. Now Hamburg and Hanover and Kassel have gone too. Many more will go.

What does it mean? How far has it affected the Germans? Is it winning the war for us? No one can answer those questions with certainty for the simple reason that nothing like this has ever happened before. Neither the German bombing of us three years ago nor our bombing of Germany a year ago are real guides. Then damage was done to this factory or that; now centres of production as a whole are being destroyed. How long can the people of Germany bear it?—or rather, how long can they bear it on top of everything else they have to bear? We don't know, but there's one way of making an estimate. You can judge how much you're hurting your enemy by noting how much of his effort he devotes to trying to stop you, and by that test, the combined Anglo-American bomber offensive is the thing which the Germans fear most of all today.

• •

For the German High Command have massed their fighters over their cities, to protect them against our bombs. And in so doing, they have largely deprived their armies of air cover. It has been a fascinating experience to watch the steady shift of the German fighter force away from the battle fronts and towards the cities of Germany. That shift began almost a year ago. It was as if an invisible magnet was drawing the German fighter squadrons from their armies. The magnet was the threat to Germany herself represented by the British and American heavy bombers based on these islands.

Today three times as many German fighters are over their centres of production as are over their armies. The Nazi Government has been faced with the choice of attempting to protect either its cities or its armies; for it knew that it could not protect both. The Nazi Government has chosen to attempt to protect its cities, and that has meant largely abandoning its armies.

Think what that means: it means that even if the near 2,000 German day and night fighters which are now massed over other cities had prevented us from doing any damage at all in Germany, our bomber offensive would still be having a disastrous effect upon the Nazis—simply by drawing off their fighter strength.

For the once invincible German armies have been largely deprived of adequate air cover. Those Nazi armies are conducting long, difficult retreats, back from the Dnieper, back through Italy, back to a line on which they hope to defend the inner citadel of fortress Europe. As the columns of men and vehicles wind back, every road, every railway bridge, every railway is a target for the Russians; the American and the British medium and fighter bombers; the Focke Wulfes and the Messerschmitts which ought to be defending them are all over Kassel or Hanover or Schweinfurt.

It is all a grim struggle for the complete mastery of the air by day and night. The first object of an Air Force is to destroy the enemy's air force; but that is only a means to an end. For when you have struck down your enemy's air force, you will be able to destroy his factories and cities at will; and that means that he will be absolutely and utterly at your mercy.

In that sense air war has become completely decisive. It is decisive in the sense that no country can survive the complete loss of the command of the day and night air over its cities. The final proof that this has become true has been given by the development which I've just described, namely the moving of squadron after squadron of German fighters away from their armies to cover their cities. For the German High Command knew two things; they knew that the air is the only defence against the air, and that defeat in the air over Germany would be final and total defeat.

All this may sound as if one were saying that the air war is the only thing that really matters. But of course not. The German dilemma of where to put their fighters proves just the opposite. It proves that the air attack on Germany from the west, and the land attack from the east, react on each other, help each other, and depend on each other.

Perhaps Germany could save her cities from us if her armies were not being hammered by the Russians in the east. For then she could devote all her resources to air defence. Perhaps Germany could save her armies from the Russians if her cities did not face our air onslaught in the west. For then she could devote all her resources to land defence.

There may not yet be a war on two fronts; but there certainly is a war in two elements; and that may prove equally fatal to Germany. In the same way, when we start our land attack in the west, it will not be an alternative or a substitute for our air attack. It will be still another attack against which Germany will have to try to provide fighters, guns and all the rest of the vast apparatus of defence.

Sooner or later the Germans will crack under these diverse, many-sided attacks. But we may have to go through one more period of great trial before the end. Nor do we know whether the enemy's defences will crack first in the air or on land. Will the enemy's air defence over his cities break down and enable the British and American bombers to destroy every vital factory in Germany? Or will the German divisions disintegrate under the land and air attacks of the pursuing Russians? Who can tell? And perhaps it does not matter so much. But what is worth noting is this. If the crack comes on land, in the east, our air attacks will have played their part in the Russian victory. In exactly the same way, if the crack comes first in the air in the west, the Russian armies—and of course, our own armies in Italy—will have made possible the victory of our bombers.

In a word, there are not two wars but only one war. Long ago, Maxim Litvinov said "Peace is indivisible." So also is war. Victory on land makes possible, and is in turn made possible by, victory in the air.

German Frontline Fighter Force 1,000 Larger Than One Year Ago

By GLADWIN HILL
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 6 — (AP) — The Germans' frontline fighter force — most of it concentrated in western Europe — is 1,000 planes larger than a year ago, and the Nazis still have enough bombers to give Britain some "nasty smacks," an R.A.F. commentator said today.

This commentator added that the Germans are not attacking Britain in force because of their traditional policy of risking their forces only if there is possibility of substantial gain.

The Germans might attempt a raid in force for political and propaganda reasons, he said, and "we'd be lunatics to assume we are not going to get a nasty smack one of these nights."

The commentator said Allied fighters' qualitative superiority over German bombers probably was just as great as in 1940. He noted that the 1,000 increase in German fighters, while it did not sound like a great deal, was "a very remarkable achievement" considering the constant drain on the German air force and blows against its production capacity.

The increase was achieved by a production drive and a shift in emphasis from an offensive bomber force to the more easily-made defensive fighter, he continued.

The actual state of the Luftwaffe is reflected in a plane-conservation program, as shown by refusal to oppose Allied secondary but nonetheless destructive attacks in order to build up a force against major attacks and an invasion front.

The commentator said that aside from rocket "gadgets," the Germans had a singularly blank record of technical progress in 1943 — that the principal achievement was ironing out the many kinks in the long-projected Heinkel-177 four-engined bomber. He added that some new German types may be expected this year.

Hobart Bosworth Was Familiar Figure at Gore's Landing Years Ago

Gore's Landing, Jan. 6—The recent death of Hobart Bosworth, Dean of the movie colony in Hollywood, recalls this vivid personality to many old-timers in and around the village of Gore's Landing, where he lived for some time, reports The Peterboro Examiner.

About 45 years ago Mr. and Mrs. Bosworth boarded at Lilac Lodge, which was run by the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles McBride. After buying Black Island (which is now owned by the Clegg family of Dayton, Ohio), Mr. Bosworth had a cabin built by the late John Hutchison, who was assisted by Harry Waldon, Thomas Wallace, Sr., Brady Wallace and Joseph Harris, while the stone masonry was done by the late Charles MacAllister. The lumber for this cabin was brought down from Peterboro by the steamer Beaver.

Hobart Bosworth kept a thoroughbred saddle horse and also a Great Dane dog, with which he explored the countryside. At this time he was threaened with tuberculosis and had to live a quiet life.

Liked Bushy Beards

After the cabin was completed on Black Island, Mr. and Mrs. Bosworth spent a winter there with the Great Dane for company, and tramping across to the village for supplies. Living an open-air life, Bosworth did not shave and grew an enormous bushy red beard, which enveloped his face from ear to ear. He made a trip to Toronto that winter, and on entering a store a clerk laughed at his appearance, whereat the actor stuck his face close to the frightened clerk and demanded, "How do you like my beard?"

Mr. Bosworth was taken ill on Black Island and fired his shot gun several times to attract help. No one was able to approach the island because of the dog, except the late Miss Sarah Orr, who helped Mrs. Bosworth for a time.

Ostracized

Several years later, Mr. Bosworth returned with a second wife and grown-up stepdaughter, having divorced his first one, who had made many friends during her sojourn in this village. Calling on his former neighbors to introduce his new wife, Mr. Bosworth was not received with friendliness, as at that time divorce was considered a disgrace.

About 11 years ago Mr. Bosworth motored out from Cobourg to the village, planning to revisit his old home on Black Island, but the lake had just frozen over the night before and the ice was unsafe for the trip. He called on his old friends, the late MacAllister brothers while in the village.

Whitehall Notebook

London, Jan. 6 — (CP) — There are members of the British parliament who attend sessions regularly and there are members who attend irregularly but there are only two who don't attend at all. They are Irishmen.

Of the 615 M. P.'s who represent England, Scotland, Wales and Ulster, the Messrs. A. J. Mulvey and J. Cunningham, one a journalist and the other a farmer, are the lone advocates of a political policy of absence.

In the eight years since they were elected by Ulster's constituencies of Fermanagh and Tyrone as Irish Nationalist abstentionists they have never attended a sitting of the House. Under the ruling that a member receives no pay until he takes the oath, their policy has cost them $21,600 apiece at the $2,700 rate of an M.P.'s annual salary.

As Irish Nationalist Abstentionists, Cunningham and Mulvey hold political views somewhat similar to those of the Sinn Fein party which brought many a turbulent day to southern Ireland before Eire was established.

Sinn Fein, translated means "Ourselves Alone." The aims of the Irish Nationalist Abstentionists hew to that line in that they want Ireland—all Ireland, north and south—run by the Irish, without interference from London.

The expression of that policy is to stand for two of the seats Ulster holds in the House, to win them and to ignore them.

Of the 11 Ulster seats which do get used, 10 are held by the Conservatives whose parliamentary chairman is Sir Hugh O'Neill. The other member is labor's J. Beattie, representative for Belfast.

People: the defeat of Honor Balfour in the Darwen, Lincashire, by-election wrote off another headache for Sir Archibald Sinclair's Liberal party. Pledged to the wartime political truce, the liberals saw Miss Balfour, 31-year-old London journalist, a member of their own executive, stand against Conservative Capt. W.R.S. Prescott, and lose by just 70 votes.

Miss Balfour, who scraped together enough money by her own efforts to put herself through Oxford, fought the campaign as an Independent Liberal and bluntly challenged the party truce because, she said, "It is not democracy" when 120 members of 615 have been returned by party caucus nominations.

The victor, Capt. Prescott, 31, took the seat formerly held by Capt. S.H.M. Russell, killed on active service as a Coldstream guards officer.

Carriers Do Not Consider Basic Wages Frozen

Washington, Jan. 6 — (AP) — Three railroad operating unions in the United States, still holding aloof from arbitration, had assurances today the carriers do not consider basic wages frozen for the duration of the war by President Roosevelt's decision governing two other brotherhoods.

This development, plus the appointment of a special presidential board to consider the non-operating case, revived hopes of an early settlement which would permit an end to army control of the United States railroad system.

The carriers' position in the controversy was to be presented today to committees and general chairmen summoned to Washington by chiefs of the three operating unions — conductors, firemen and switchmen — to determine a course of action.

WHERE DID HE GET THAT HAT?

Woodstock, Jan. 6—(CP) — A county jail inmate who gives his name as Stanislaw Lehoskey is the institution's mystery man. Now serving a month here on a vagrancy charge, he was picked up wearing clothes and a cap with "Jail" stencilled on the peak. He told officials he had obtained the garb from Welland jail, but neither Welland nor any other jail authorities have records of Stanislaw Lehoskey.

THE WAR TODAY

By DeWITT MACKENZIE

Are the hard-driving Russians likely to reach Berlin ahead of the Anglo-American Allies and, if so, how is that going to affect post-war problems?

It's a question a lot of folk are debating, especially since the Hitlerite line has been slashed in two at the Polish border west of Kiev, and the Nazi forces in the Dnieper-Bend trap again are in sore straits.

Well, what's the answer? First off, it's fairly obvious that if the German front should suffer a wholesale collapse, the Muscovites might indeed be marching down Unter Den Linden before an Anglo-American army could arrive. However, while the Nazis are in a tight spot, there has been no general collapse as yet and, lacking definite signs of one, the presumption must be that there's a lot of fighting to be done before any one of the Allies get troops into the German capital.

News from Moscow today indicates a stiffening of Hitlerite resistance west of Kiev. Nazi Field Marshal Von Mannstein seems to be rallying his hard-pressed troops for a stand, and we shall get a somewhat better view of the position in that theatre after he has demonstrated how much punch his army has left.

If the Germans are able to continue the skilful withdrawal which they have maintained for more than 700 miles at the extreme depth, then they will make a final defence in the fortifications on their own borders. Should this happen, it will take the combined striking-power of both Russian and Anglo-American armies to administer an early coup de grace. This presumably would bring all the Allies into Berlin at the same time.

But if the Russians should reach the German capital ahead of their Allies, would the victorious Moscovites be inclined to impose their own conditions irrespective of the wishes of Britain and America?

It's important in answering this to record that the Allied conferences of Moscow and Teheran appear to have brought the Russians into full partnership with the United States and Britain.

Now these three dominant powers are in accord which appears to ensure all-out collaboration in prosecuting the war. It also provides a degree of friendly trustfulness which should enable solution of post-war differences which are bound to arise. That doesn't mean that we aren't going to encounter some pretty stiff heart-burning, but there's ground for hope that with a reasonable degree of give-and-take the problems will be solved.

Rates Mosquito Plane Among Three Greatest

Peter B. Masefield, British airplane technical expert recently rated the de Havilland Mosquito, the North American Mustang, and the Consolidated Liberator as "the three most outstanding aircraft in the world today."

Writing in the aviation magazine "Flying," Mr. Masefield, personal adviser on civil aviation to Lord Beaverbrook, placed the Mosquito "among the galaxy of fine aircraft, combining speed with a shattering weight of fire in its fighter form, and range and bomb load in its bomber version."

In its own category, the Mosquito was awarded the unusually high ratings of 93.2 percent as a day and night reconnaissance bomber, 91.6 percent as a bomber, and 95.2 percent as a night intruder-fighter.

In his article, Mr. Masefield explained the method of choosing the different top planes and remarked that "no enemy types qualify."

BUDAPEST RADIO HALTED

Berne, Jan. 6 — (AP) — The Budapest radio halted its transmission last night from shortly before 10 p. m. to 11:00 p. m., giving rise to speculation the Hungarian capital had been subjected to an air attack. The announcer did not explain the break when service was resumed.

A similar radio shut-out occurred in Budapest Sept. 9, 1942, when Russian planes attacked the city.

2,000 Italian Soldiers Stage Successful Revolt

Barcelona, Jan. 6 — (AP) — Travellers recently arrived from northeastern Italy today confirmed reports that 2,000 Italian soldiers who had been incorporated into the German army in the Fiume sector staged a successful revolt Dec. 30.

The travellers said the Italians, all wearing newly-issued German uniforms and bearing German arms, rebelled as they were about to be loaded into railroad cars to join German forces fighting Yugoslav Partisans in southern Bosnia.

The Italians were reported to have overcome German officers directing the train's departure but failed to escape before hastily-summoned Nazi troops arrived on the scene.

However, in a five-hour battle on the outskirts of Fiume, 500 of the revolting Italians were said to have held the Germans at bay while their comrades fled northward into the hills near San Pietra. There they joined a company of Croat-Italian guerillas with quantities of arms and ammunition taken from the troop train.

The Italians lost 100 men in the battle, the travellers said, but they believed German casualties were higher because the well-armed Italians barricaded themselves in buildings, most of which had to be taken by storm. Approximately 300 Italians were taken prisoner, the travellers added.

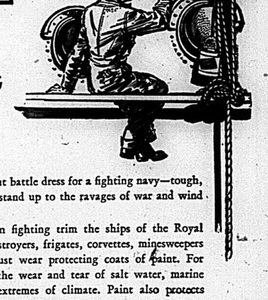
CHEMISTRY HELPS TO WIN THE WAR

WAR PAINT FOR A FIGHTING NAVY



C-I-L paint is efficient battle dress for a fighting navy—tough, durable paints that stand up to the ravages of war and wind and weather.

To keep them in fighting trim the ships of the Royal Canadian Navy—destroyers, frigates, corvettes, minesweepers and auxiliaries—must wear protecting coats of paint. For protection against the wear and tear of salt water, marine growth, rust and extremes of climate. Paint also protects in battle by ship camouflage.

For war paint the Canadian Navy uses special marine finishes and other heavy duty paints that prevent rust and fouling. Many of these paints have been developed to meet the rigid demands of war at sea. On shore, too, paint has its special values for the navy at docks, training stations and shore establishments.

Of course, paint has always been a fighter—even in peace time. It is continually battling the destructive forces of rust and decay. Its wartime uses only serve to emphasize its importance at all times.

Supplying war paint for Canada's fighting navy is one of the wartime jobs of C-I-L's Paint and Varnish Division.

High-grade paints for the protection of war material is another example of how Industrial Chemistry aids Canada's war effort.

AW2 Theda Cole Posted To Eastern Station

AW2 Theda A. Cole, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Cole, 270 Coleman Street, who enlisted with the R.C.A.F. (W.D.) early in the fall, has been posted from R.C.A.F. Station, Rockcliffe, Ottawa, to "an Eastern Isolation Station" somewhere in Canada. Miss Cole reported, while visiting here over the Christmas holidays and again on a hurried "forty-eight" last weekend that she has enjoyed each day she has been in the service since she joined, although, she remarked, the early drill periods were, to say the least, a bit tough. She managed to survive, however, and has taken to her duties like a regular trooper. Her posting to this undisclosed station suited her wishes exactly.

Miss Cole is well known to many people in the city, having been in business with her mother at the Cole Beauty Salon on Front St. She has one brother in the R.C.A.F. stationed at Trenton Air Station and a half-brother, Julius, who is serving with the United States Army in Washington State. Before enlisting in the R.C.A.F., (W.D.), Theda had expressed her intention many times, but it was not until in the fall of this year that she came to the final decision. Well aware that life on an outlying station is not the same as on one near to headquarters, Theda says that she is not afraid of becoming "bushed."

Warns Against Prejudice, Advises How to Assimilate Foreign Peoples

Mrs. J. T. McCay, of Vancouver, Tells Canadian Club of Festivals and Other Means of Teaching English Way of Life to Newcomers

"Do not be prejudiced against immigrants, foreigners, Orientals, Jews—there are good and bad in every race—you, as good Christians, should be kind in your tolerance"—were the stirring and inspiring words delivered by Mrs. John T. McCay in her address on the subject of "Assimilation of Foreign Peoples into Canada and what they are doing", to the Women's Canadian Club in Bridge Street Church S.S.-Rooms, on Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. McCay, introduced to the assemblage by Mrs. W. H. Finkle, president of the organization in Belleville, comes from Vancouver, B.C. In that city, Mrs. McCay was the founder and director of the Folk Festivals, which are conducted yearly, and her story dealt with her twenty years of work among the foreign races in Vancouver.

Many Nationalities in Vancouver.

Continuing, the speaker went on to say that there are forty to forty-five different nationalities in Vancouver city alone. "When I arrived at the coast to live, I was thrilled to meet the Orientals", she stated. "There was a population of 10,000 Chinese and 25,000 to 30,000 Japanese. But what surprised me most was the fact that the Oriental girls were not allowed to train as nurses.. I was so perturbed that I formed a delegation of a number of distinguished foreign people of Vancouver, and went and asked the superintenednt of the hospital if he would consider taking girls of foreign extraction in to train. Upon refusal, we left, but in another year we went again and this time we were successful in obtaining the request. The girls were allowed to enter the hospitals, train and try for their R.N., But when Pearl Harbor was bombed, the Oriental class of nurses in Vancouver was discontinued".

International Club Formed.

Speaking on another phase of her work during those twenty years, Mrs. McCay told that an International Club had been formed to acquaint the foreign population in Vancouver. At the conclusion of three years, the club decided to take a woman into its organiaztion, and thus Mrs. McCay became its president. One evening she was invited to spend the evening in a Greek community with two other English speaking persons and the only English thing about the whole affairs was the word "Byron". It was a celebration and everything was typically "Greek".

There were their native folk dances, songs, readings and a display of their arts and crafts.

Teach English Way of Life

"At that time," continued Mrs. McCay, "I was taking Scandinavian girls into my home to teach them English and the Canadian way of life. During their stay there, they had folk days, and everyone went to them dressed in costumes representing different part of Scandinavia. This started Mrs. McCay thinking, and she expressed the wish that there should be national evenings conducted throughout the city. So followed Japanese, Swedish, French, Italian, Chinese, Bavarian and many other national evenings. Even a garden party was held, and the various nationalist groups of Vancouver took part.

A man then took my place as president, said Mrs. McCay, and it was after that when I decided that we, of British origin, should keep these people together. So it occurred to me to have a Folk Festival. I enlisted the help of a young German who had just come to Vancouver, and we set about to make the English-speaking class of Vancouver aware of the foreign population in their city. We managed to get the help of a large hotel who gave us space for the event. We published 5,000 programs, and we asked the foreigners if they would conduct at the Festival for ten or fifteen minutes folk music with authentic costumes, and also display their arts and crafts. Everyone turned out to the great event, both the foreign population and the English. The festival grew and broadened out. The street car system, said Mrs. McCay was turned over to our disposal and we imported special programs for the children.

Puppet Show Trains in Canadian Way

"We wanted to associate the children with Canadian ways, so we conducted a program in their interests. A girl from Holland lectured to them; they were given a puppet show to show them Canadian art and literature; a girl was brought from French Canada to acquaint the children with the eastern ways; a great India lady dancer danced for them, and a Persian dancer thrilled them with her peasant dances of France.

"When the war came, the Folk Festivals flourished the same until last year when the Japanese were forced out. We published our own paper, continued Mrs. McCay, and when the men from Vancouver went to war, we were not surprised to find in one party of soldiers seventy-five Ukrainians. The Vancouver Folk Festivals attracted Ottawa which sent out a man who urged the western city to continue the function of them.

Tolerant of Refugees

"Ontario," said the speaker, "is an English-speaking province, which wields a great power. The Japanese problem is not a problem unless we make it so. They are the product of our own institutions. You must remember that there are undesirables in every race. Be tolerant of the refugees—it was they who taught us how to save and economize—it was they who brought us ideas for new industries." In conclusion, Mrs. McCay said, "everyone born in Canada should have citizen privileges, and if so, Canada will be a greater part of the British Empire."

Avoidance of Overstrain' Helps Retention of Youth

Not all persons grow old at the same rate of speed. In fact, the various parts of the body do not get old and break down at the same rate. Just what determines how long a person lives is not definitely known, but it would appear that heredity has something to do with this. In other words, the tendency to a long life runs in certain families. Of course, infections, eating habits and injuries are among the things that play an important part in the aging process.

A person grows older, the tissues tend to lose some of their water content; the cells stop dividing and increasing in numbers as rapidly as formerly, and do not repair themselves as quickly as they did earlier in life. The rate, known as the metabolism rate, at which various activities take place in the body, also slows down. Elasticity, or the ability of certain tissues to stretch is lost. The speed with which muscles and nerves react is lessened.

It would appear that the heart and blood vessels age more rapidly than do the digestive organs. As a person increases in years, the amount of acid formed in the stomach decreases, and the liver becomes more susceptible to injury. Gallstones become more common. If the gallbladder is not actually diseased, it appears to function as well in older persons as in younger ones.

The heart and blood vessels exhibit many changes with the passage of years. How much of this is due to the wear and tear of living and to faulty diet, and how much is due to the actual wearing out of the tissues because of increasing age, is not known.

The kidneys tend to break down in later life, but this is probably due to a decrease in the blood supply which in turn, is a result of hardening of the arteries. The loss of muscle power also may be due to poor circulation. The number of red cells in the blood remains at about the same level throughout life if the person eats enough of the iron-containing foods. However, the bone marrow, where the blood cells are made, seems to wear out and, in older persons, when blood is lost through accident or other means, its replacement by the bone marrow does not take place as rapidly, as in early life. The changes in the skin, hair, eyes, ears and teeth, which come with old age, are well known.

It would appear that there is no means of slowing down this aging process other than to avoid overstrain at all times, to prevent infections, and to treat abdominal disorders as soon as they occur. A well-balanced diet is important in maintaining the normal action of all the body tissues.

N. Y. Beauty Experts Report Big Increase In Use of Cold, Chemical Permanent Wave

The consensus of Manhattan beauty authorities appears to be that the cold, chemical permanent wave has passed the experimental stage and attained public acceptance—both for summer and winter, says Martha Parker in New York Times.

One Manhattan supply house for beauty shops all over the country estimates that twenty-five different kinds of cool permanent waves are on the market—eighteen of which have come into existence since last September.

A Fifth Avenue salon records "a 50 per cent. increase in the demand for our cold wave, just since last spring." Another shop has found the cold wave "unparalleled for fine, delicate hair—or any problem hair." The beauty department of a large store reports that more than half of the permanents now being given are of the cold variety.

Three reasons are offered for this upcurve in popularity, which continues in spite of failures in the pioneer days of cold waving. The first is that this season's sleek styles demand the pliant, natural sort of curl which cold permanents can produce. And feather cuts, too, benefit from a permanent that goes right to the root of the hair. The second is that equipment has been much improved. The third, and most important, is that operators have become adept in the technique.

Both manufacturers and beauty-shop owners emphasize that a cold wave can be successful 100 per cent of the time—but its success depends upon extreme accuracy in analyzing the hair texture and timing the treatment.

The principle of all cold permanents, these experts say, is virtually the same. A softening solution—usually a solvent called thioglycolic acid—is sprayed or patted on the hair and allowed to seep in until the hair shaft becomes soft and malleable. The operator's judgment, at this point, will determine how strong the solution must be and how long it will take to penetrate. Fine hair — or hair made porous by bleaching—takes a shorter time than coarse, wiry hair.

The next step is to wind the softened hair on light wooden spools, where it assumes the ringlet shape into which it is wound. There is no tension and therefore no flattening or change in the hair shaft such as occurs in heat permanents. This absence of structural change is important — the stylists explain—because it makes it possible to give one wave on top of another if necessary.

The final step is the application of a fixative, which stops the action of the softener and "fixes" the hair in its curly state. This is usually accomplished with a solution of peroxide. The hair is then rinsed, set and dried.

A good cool wave should be neither curlier nor weaker than a machine wave, and is calculated to last as long. Because the lack of heat obviates the use of thick protective pals, the curl continues right to the scalp and may even take slightly longer to grow out.

The Marry-Go-Round

Mixed Grill

Soon we'll hearken to the breaking of the vows—New Year's vows!
What a world of vain regrets,
their memories arouse!
Made with hearts so brave and gay!
Now it fills us with dismay,
Just to heart their gentle clatter,
As each new resolve we shatter.
Oh, the smashing, and the CRASHING of the vows!

A "wolf", says Cynical Sybil, is a man who feels that it would be as difficult for him to concentrate all his affections on one particular girl as it would be for him to set his heart on a pet twenty-dollar bill.

There comes a time, when even a popular girl looks forward to marriage, as a release from the monotony of playing "audience" to a different man, every evening.

The first sign that love is on the wane is a man's discovery that the brand of a girl's perfume has ceased to intoxicate him, and begun to cloy.

A man may be a font of wisdom in his profession and a power in world affairs; but, somehow, he never seems more than a spoiled boy of sixteen to the woman who loves him.

When a man goes through life a bachelor, it is not because he never had the impulse to tie himself to one girl—but because he never had the heart to disentangle himself from all the others.

Radio has done lots of marvellous things for the world; but perhaps the greatest thing it has done for humanity is to put a time-limit on campaign speeches!

Next to knowing how to catch a man, the most important thing, to a girl, is to know how (and when) to let him GO!

It would save a lot of time for the war-effort if a girl's lips, like the porch-swing, had to be freshly painted only every other season.

Fashion Flashes

READY to transform a simple sheath into an evening frock or dress up a simple dinner dress in a tunic jacket of brown lace studded with white sequin and tiny pearl clusters. The tunic ripples to a deep point in back and has a scalloped edge.

A SURVEY of a smart first-night theatre audience quickly shows the diversity of fashion now that the evening wrap and decollete evening frock have given way to informal fashions. With a short-skirted black crepe sheath, one woman wore a trench coat of brilliant red velvet with peaked revers and deep cuffs of silver fox.

STARRING in early Spring promotions is the shirt-skirt effect one piece frock. A new model, made with a black skirt, has a bow-tie top in a poppy print in cyclamen and green on white. The belt runs through applique of cut-out poppies from the material at the side of the waistline.

FRANKLY PRETTY hats are promised for Spring. Delicate pastel pink felt is used for a profile brim hat with a high, draped crown. It is trimmed with clusters of self flowers with bronze sequin centres and has a pale pink misty veil.

THE LIGHTS SHINE down on much brown at smart resorts. A delightful frock is a street-length sheath with a sweetheart neckline, fashioned in dark brown moire with a beaded design of tiny plumes scattered here and there on bodice and skirt. Beads are brown shading to pink.

TRENTON R.C.A.F. JUNIORS SHOW PLENTY OF CLASS

Twenty-Four Turn Out and Many Have Had Junior "A" Experience

WELL BALANCED

Representing all parts of Canada, 24 aspiring lads wearing the Air Force blue answered the call for the initial practice of the Trenton R. C. A. F. junior O. H. A. team at the Hume Arena Wednesday night when a cross section of Canadian youth took to the ice to prove that F/L. "Buff" Horton's "Flyers" are to be reckoned with before the curtain is rung down in group No. 2 of the junior O. H. A. The junior Flyers are grouped with Trenton, Belleville and the Stirling-Marmora "Combines".

With Cpl. Mike Dziura, former New Haven forward as coach, and Johnny Pianosi as manager the Flyers raced through a full hour's workout owing to the fact their own open air rink was not available.

In the nets was Ralph Benson, former Toronto Marlboro junior. Coach Dziura's suit was seen in aspiring defencemen, when only three appeared, but the quality was outstanding in George Pontius, who played for Carlyle last season, Gordon Donaldson last year with Hamilton Juniors and George Ellis, a hefty kid from Waterloo.

Up along the front line, however, Coach Dziura had a world of skating and proven hockey strength headed by Jack Flynn, ex-Niagara Falls centre, Al Charters, who was with Ed Wiley's Toronto Young Rangers, Johnny Jackowitz, with the Brantford Lions in 1943.

Lew Smith, who played in Regina last season took the fancy of local fans on hand, as did Frank McGee, last year with St. Patrick's College in Ottawa, these boys being classy left wing players with plenty of speed and hockey experience behind them. Then there was Norm Koehlea, right wing star with Pictou, N. S., in 1943 and Jack Allesen of the St. Georges juniors. Another junior with "A" experience was Harry Green from Guelph and Dun Hume from London. P/O. Jack Hartell of Lindsay also gave it a try as did a couple of other youngsters from Quebec, who were using borrowed skates last night.

All in all it looks as though the Flyers boast of a strong squad of tried and proven junior pucksters, who will make matters interesting for all and sundry in the local junior O. J. A. group before the season's curtain is rung down.

What's Doing in Sport

Calgary—(CP)— Because of the Air Force headquarters' ban on the participation of R. C. A. F. teams in hockey competition leading to the Allan Cup or Memorial Cup effective today the Alberta Services Senior Hockey League last night decided to withdraw from the Alberta Branch of the C. A. H. A. to play garrison hockey.

Halifax—(CP)—The Halifax Senior Hockey League found itself with only two teams today, following the last appearance last night of the Halifax R. C. A. F. against Navy before the Air Force withdrawal edict went into effect. Navy, which trounced the airmen 11-4, continues in the league with Crescents, a civilian team.

Los Angeles—(AP)—With 20 name players excused from the qualifying round of the $12,500 Los Angeles open golf tourney yesterday, Harry Basaler, local veteran, registered 142 for the leadership at 36 holes. One stroke back were Eddie Nowak of Inglewood, Calif., and Bobby Rosberg, San Francisco.

Trenton, N. J.—(AP)—Through legalized betting in New Jersey more than 10 thoroughbred-breeding farms now operate in the state, it was reported yesterday by the racing commission. New Jersey's share of track revenue for 1943 was $1,475,-232, an increase of $400,000 over the previous year.

Miami, Fla., Jan. 6—(AP)—Glamorous Hialeah Park, with its pink flamingoes and exotic landscaping, reopens tomorrow after skipping an entire winter racing season because of wartime difficulties. The horses today make a final whirl around Tropical Park, where through 19 days of racing fans have passed $6,686,020 through the parimutuels wickets, or an average of $351,295 daily.

Not One Death Due to Injuries On College Gridirons Last Year

By The Canadian Press

Announcing that not one death due to injuries suffered on college gridirons had occurred during the past season in the United States, Dr. Floyd R. Eastwood, Purdue professor at Lafayette, Ind., yesterday proposed the study of crash helmets of British and American Armed forces with a view to the improvement of football headgear. Most gridiron fatalities were due to head injuries, he reported in his 12th annual statistical review of the sport which, he declared was not so hazardous as riding, driving or walking on streets and highways. Dr. Eastwood listed 10 football deaths in 1943, nine of which had taken place in high school playing and one by an athletic club injury. None had taken place in sandlot games for the first time on record.

The Buffalo club of the International Baseball League announced last night it would train at Hershey, Pa., next spring. The selection was made by Stanley (Bucky) Harris who, as manager of the Philadelphia Phillies last year, had assembled the major league squad there.

With Gabe Paul in the armed services, Cincinnati Reds yesterday announced the appointment of Bill McCorry as travelling secretary of the club. McCorry was manager of the Ogden, Utah, club from 1939 to 1942.

New York Yankees yesterday revealed their schedule of 16 exhibition games in the spring. The squad will report at Atlantic City March 13 and will play the first pre-season fixture April 1 against the Phillies. Big league teams will be opposition in 11 of the games.

Matchmaker Nick Londes of Detroit yesterday matched Jake La Motta of New York and Fritzie Zivic to fight a 10-round bout at Olympia Stadium Jan. 14. This will be their fourth meeting in the ring, with La Motta winning their last clash.

Chicago Black Hawks were reported last night to be dickering with Providence Reds of the American Hockey League for goalie Mike Karakas but business manager Lou Pieri of the Providence club declared he was waiting for a better offer from the N.H.L. unit.

Bronko Magurski, former Minnesota football star who staged a comeback with Chicago Bears in the pro loop after a five-year layoff, announced at Minneapolis last night he had decided to return to the wrestling ring after an absence of 20 months.

Newark Bears of the International Baseball League decided yesterday to establish their spring training camp at Plainfield, N.J., using the high school athletic field.

Toronto, Jan. 6 — (CP) — Here's a friendly New Year's tip for service rookies: don't invite the sergeant-major into the boxing ring for a man-to-man fistic argument until you study his biography.

Visiting his Montreal home from the R.C.A.F. station at Yarmouth, N.S., WO. Bobby Leitham told Al (Montreal Herald) Parsley of an incident in Bobby's career as station Sergeant-Major. Leitham had occasion to give an aircraftman a couple of days C.B. The aircraftman took the punishment with ill grace and at the next station boxing show he told his mates he would like to don the gloves with the sergeant-major. Leitham heard of the challenge and accepted. Leitham tagged the aircraftman with his Sunday punch and the man was counted out. Bobby relates:

"I went over to see how he was. He was a good sport and shook hands. And as I walked back to my corner I heard him say to a guy in his corner, 'The sergeant-major has a wallop.' "

"That sergeant-major is the former bantamweight champion of Canada and once ranked in the first five for the championship of the world' said an officer sitting at the ringside."

Leitham, 32, now weighs 172 lbs.

Cauliflower Union:

Chairman Charles Jones of the Vancouver Boxing Commission reveals that body now is affiliated with the Canadian Boxing Federation. Hitherto the C.B.F. has governed boxing only in eastern Canada and the Vancouver affiliation is the first major step toward establishment of a national organization to direct the cauliflower industry. Union of the western federation with the C.B.F. would be a desirable step. The Canadian Federation is affiliated with the National Boxing Association in the United States.

Incidentally:

Murray (Muzz) Patrick, son of manager Lester Patrick and a former New York Rangers hockey player, flew from his eastern United States Army station last week-end to marry his school-days sweetheart in Victoria...another former New York Rangers defenceman, Taffy Abel, is again coaching an intermediate puck team in Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. ... Baz (Montreal Star) O'Meara says Canadiens' Elmer Lach is the best two-way forward in the N.H.L. ... H. St. Clair Silver, who observed his 86th birthday New Year's Day, still is an active curler at Halifax.

R.C.A.F. Entry To Continue In Hockey Loop

Sydney, N. S., Jan. 6—(CP)—The R. C. A. F. entry in the Cape Breton Hockey League plans to continue operating in the loop, since the league is not in the running for the Allan Cup, Shaun MacDonald, League President, announced last night.

His announcement came on the eve of the deadline set by R. C. A. F. headquarters for the withdrawal of all Air Force teams from hockey leagues in which the winners would qualify for the Allan Cup playdowns.

"We don't plan to go on and try for the Allan Cup after the league schedule is ended," President MacDonald said. "The C. B. H. L. with entries from the army, navy and air force, is in the nature of a garrison league, all the forces here are on operational duties and they are interested only in their own league."

Query About Mosley Disrupts Broadcast

Manchester, England (CP) —Albert Handel Worrall, 24 year old shop steward at an armaments factory who was fired for shouting, "what about Mosley?" during a BBC broadcast from the factory canteen, has been reinstated after workers' protests over his dismissal.

The BBC cut off the program of factory-choir singing when Worrall made the interruption.

"What I did was quite unpremeditated and I never thought it would have caused such a commotion," Worrall said. The factory management said he would be regarded as having been "suspended" for three days.

RULING BY ARMY OFFICIALS ON TEAMS EXPECTED

Decision of the Air Force Authorities Remains Unchanged

TEAMS OUT TODAY

Ottawa, Jan. 6—(CP)—An early ruling by army authorities upon the status of hockey teams engaging in league competition is expected following Air Minister Power's statement to Canadian Amateur Hockey Association officials yesterday that the R. C. A. F.'s decision to forbid Air Force teams from taking part in playdowns will remain unchanged.

There are Air Force teams in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Calgary, Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and Arnprior, Ont., and in a joint statement to the press after conferring with Maj. Power, Frank Sargent of Port Arthur, President of the C. A. H. A., and George Dudley of Midland, Ont., Past President, said they visited Ottawa merely to see if Air Force teams and players could continue in competition until branch schedules were completed or some other limited form of competition authorized.

Today is the deadline for participation by Air Force teams in Allan and Memorial Cup playdowns. It will mean the withdrawal of Air Force teams from leagues in Halifax, Sydney, N. S., Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver, and the withdrawal of Air Force players from the Combines team in Calgary and from several other clubs.

Mr. Sargent and Mr. Dudley, who were reported likely to see Defence Minister Ralston, instead called upon Brig. A. E. Nash, Vice Ajutant-General, Brig. James Mess, Deputy Adjutant-General, and Maj. Ian Eisenhardt, Sports Officer.

In their statement the hockey officials made no mention of their visit to army headquarters, and this was taken to mean that the army's policy on hockey had not yet been definitely decided.

Should the army decide to follow a policy similar to that of the R. C. A. F., Senior Army teams in Nanaimo, B. C., Calgary, Red Deer, Alta., Winnipeg, Kingston, Ont., and possibly Saint John, N. B., would be forced to drop out of their respective leagues.

CLEVELAND GAINS SIXTH STRAIGHT

Trounce Pittsburgh Pirates 9-3 in Only Game of the American League

By the Canadian Press

Cleveland Barons—leaders of the Western Section of the American Hockey League—trounced Pittsburgh Hornets 9-3 last night on home ice to gain their sixth straight victory.

With a total of 37 points acquired through 16 wins and five draws in 27 starts this season, Cleveland now stands two points behind the league's leading Hershey Bears.

Last night's Barons' centre Tommy Burlington collected two goals and three assists to tie Hershey's captain Wally Kilrea for the league's high scoring honors at 39 points. Tommy now has 14 goals and 25 assists.

Other Cleveland scorers were Earl Bartholome (2), Les Cunningham, Norman Locking, Pete Bessone, Lou Trudel, and Phil Hergesheimer. Marksmen for the Hornets were Wendell Jamieson, Bob Gracie and Tom Forgie.

"OLD SCHOOL TIE" PUBLICITY COUNTS

London (CP) — Increased wages and publicity given "old school tie" schools have been given as the reasons for a 25 per cent jump in registrations for entry to Britain's large public schools.

"Politicians and others lashed out at the 'old school tie' and for the first time many parents considered public schools seriously," it was explained at a Headmasters' Conference in London. "They studied both sides—ours and that put up by those who want state control of public schools. They decided that there is a lot to be said for the 'old school tie' after all."

BOB DAVIDSON FRACTURES JAW IN LAST GAME

Leaf's Captain Will be Missing When Team Plays Chicago

WILL MISS PLAYER

By The Canadian Press

Some of Jack Adams' best friends must have passed along word that Detroit Red Wings require additional starch on attack to improve their lowly status in the National Hockey League race.

At least, greater offensive strength is what the Detroit manager seems to have acquired in trading Joseph (Pat) Egan to Boston Bruins for William (Flash) Hollett. Egan long has been noted principally as a hard hitter and a solid blocker, while Hollett is the rushing type of defenceman.

Last year he eclipsed all N.H.L. rearguards in a scoring way, shattering the 41-point record held by Tommy Anderson of the now-defunct Brooklyn Americans with 19 goals and 25 assists. His punch will be sorely needed by the Red Wings, who share with New York Rangers the ignominy of the lowest goal total in the league.

Hollett may see action tonight when Detroit moves to New York for one of two scheduled games. Murray Armstrong recently discharged from the Canadian Army, also is expected to make his first start with Detroit.

Toronto Maple Leafs bid to regain their second-place tie with Boston Bruins in the other game, opposing Chicago Black Hawks at Toronto. Leafs will be without captain Bob Davidson, who suffered a fractured jaw Tuesday night against Montreal Canadiens.

FLASH HOLLETT TRADED TO WINGS

Pat Egan Sent to Boston With No Cash Involved

Boston, Jan. 6—(AP) — Flash Hollett, Boston Bruins defence man was traded to the Detroit Red Wings for defenceman Joseph (Pat) Egan in a straight exchange in which no cash was involved, Art Ross of the Bruins has announced.

It was expected that Manager Jack Adams of Detroit would order Hollett to report to him in New York tomorrow when the Wings play the Rangers.

Hollett's outstanding ability has long been recognized by other clubs. Earlier in the season, the New York Rangers reported they offered Ross $25,000 for Hollett. Ross neither denied nor confirmed this, but he has said that the Bruins would never sell any star player except for equal value in another player.

Sports Roundup

By HUGH FULLERTON, JR.
(Associated Press Sport Writer.)

New York, Jan. 6 (AP)—On first thought it seemed that Branch Rickey must have been talking to prod the other major league baseball magnates—or else just talking through his cigar smoke—when he suggested that pro football might supplant baseball as the national game in the United States . . . But on second thought, why not?... If hockey, another rough, tough game, can stretch out its season from 22 games which was considered the limit when the National League started in 1917—to 50 or more, the footballers ought to manage a six-months season. . . As for playing fields, a few more touches of the big dough and the clubs should be able to build their own stadium. . . in fact, some colleges (like Pitt, for instance) might be willing to sell their white elephants cheap.

Dusty Ain't Rusty.

The National League has acquired another colorful umpire in rotund Lynton (Dusty) Boggess, who will take his fifth trip to the majors next spring to call balls and strikes. ...As a player, Dusty made four trips to the big leagues but admits he was there "only long enough for coffee.". . . . The reason came out once when a Texas league rookie asked Boggess' advice on how to shake off a batting slump . . . "Shucks, kid, I don't know," replied Dusty. "Just do what I did. Retire after you've been in one for a dozen years."

Although Count Fleet twice won races at 1 to 20 odds last summer, he wasn't the year's shortest-priced winner. On May 19 a hoss named Indian Goods won at Victoria Park, Calgary, Alta., and returned $2.05 for $2 or 1 to 40.

Escaped Prisoners Jar German Nerves

London (CP) — A whole German regiment had to be diverted, the Germans themselves have confessed, against British prisoners of war who escaped after Italy's surrender and operated as guerillas behind the German lines.

Anton Weber, German front line reporter, in a broadcast heard here by Reuters told how the Germans had to seek out the British guerillas in the mountains.

"Our men made a perilous climb up into the mountains, in mist and snow waist deep," Weber said. "Their clothes froze on their bodies."

MINOR LEAGUES WILL CARRY ON ANOTHER YEAR

Nine Loops Ready for Call With Manpower Available

TO HELP GOVERNMENT

By W. G. BRAMHAM
(President, National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues).

New York, Jan. 6 —(AP)— One cannot make rash predictions with a global war in progress, but Minor League Baseball has demonstrated its determination to carry on in spite of difficulties encountered. The continuation depends upon the needs of the government in the all-important item of manpower and it has first call.

As we go into 1944 our nine leagues which finished the 1943 season are planning to carry on. Practically all of the leagues which suspended because of the war are ready to reopen the moment they are able to muster sufficient players of professional calibre. They have protected their territories and kept their organizations. They are eager to return to active play and will do so at the earliest feasible oportunity . . .

The season of 1943—the second of World War No. 2—saw 10 minor leagues toe the mark, including the experimental class E league, the first ever organized in the history of the National Association. This little circuit failed to obtain concessions it desired and was forced to shut down in July . . .

We feel the attitude of the government and the public had much to do with our continuation. The government co-operated in the continuation of the game as far as it could without affecting the actual war effort, and the public responded to prove that baseball had a place and a job to do in the emergency.

MONTREAL MAY JOIN BIG LOOP

Montreal, Jan. 6—(CP)—Montreal Baseball Club President Hector Racine, told about a suggestion this city be included in the major leagues loop, said "from a geographical standpoint we are ideally located here and I have full confidence in our sports fans to back up to the limit such a venture which, however, may require somewhat lengthy negotiations."

The suggestion to include both Montreal and Toronto International League baseball teams in the major leagues loop was made yesterday in Philadelphia by Bob Carpenter, President of the National League Phillies.

CHURCHILL NOW BETTER

London, Jan. 5 —(CP)— Prime Minister Churchill said in a letter received by Premier Stanislaw Nikolayczyk of the Polish government-in-London yesterday that he is well on the way to complete recovery and "able to play my part in the great decisions which should bring nearer to both our peoples the day of deliverance and freedom."

TOWN LEAGUE OPERATES

Smiths Falls, Ont., Jan. 6. (CP) —Town League hockey will be revived in Smiths Falls Friday when Canadian Pacific Railway plays the Lanark and Renfrew regiment and the Frost and Wood Co. team meets Westport, it was decided at a league executive meeting last night. All four teams will participate in a semi-final series, with the survivors meeting in a best-of-three final series.

NAZIS PLACED ON TRIAL

New York, Jan. 5 — (AP) — The Moscow radio quoted a dispatch from Geneva today as saying that 1,000 Nazi railroad workers has been placed on trial on charges of "defeatism" and that 280 already had been sentenced to death. The workers were arrested on orders of Heinrich Himmler, Gestapo chieftain.

MEET SOLAH

The pride and joy of the subchasing motor launch fleet of the Royal Canadian Navy are three shiny-white Eskimo husky pups donated to one of the ship's crew by the natives of Labrador for keeping enemy U-boats away from their shores. Here is Wren Lucy McCaul in an Eskimo outfit with one of the pups, called Solah.

And then there is the little one about the artist who was painting a landscape. A farmer stopped his plowing to look at the painting.

Artist—Ah, my friend, you, too, no doubt, are a lover of nature. Have you seen the golden finger of dawn spreading across the eastern sky, the red-stained sulphurous isles floating in the lake of fire that is the sunset? And have you seen the ragged clouds at midnight go scudding across the shuddering moonlight, the pale, argent light of the moon as it pales before the red rush of the rising sun?

Farmer (shuddering)—Not me. At least not since I went on the water wagon.

(Elect Captain.)

Prior to Tuesday night's junior O.H.A. game Jerry Moher was elected captain of the Belleville juniors for 1944, with Rance Bush being named as sub-captain when Captain Jerry isn't on the ice to take up his teammates' battles. Incidentally Jack Wardhaugh sustained a broken tooth during Tuesday night's game and was the locals' first casualty for 1944.

Last night's Stirling-Marmora "Combines" at Trenton R.C.A.F. scheduled game had to be postponed. However, FL. "Buff" Horton and Coach Mike Dziura, former New Haven Eagle forward, took advantage of the postponement to hold a practice at the Hume Arena when 24 young Flyers answered the call. They proved a cross section of Canadian youth, players trying out from the Maritimes to the Prairies, with such Ontario lads as Ralph Benson, former Toronto Marlboro junior goalie, PO. Jack Hartell of Lindsay, as well as boys from Niagara Falls, Brantford, Lions, Ottawa and practically every large community across the Dominion. Yes, it looks as though the going in group No. 2 of the Junior O.H.A. is going to be of the toughest nature before the end of the season. All of which should be welcome news to the hockey fans of the Quinte area.

Coach Toots Holway stated today that every one of the 26 boys seeking berths on the Belleville juniors would be back at practice from six until seven at the Market Street ice palace tonight. "For Tuesday's game with Trenton we selected those who appeared best qualified to start in the opening game, but that doesn't mean there aren't others seeking berths who won't be used Friday night in the Trenton game at Trenton," explained Coach Holway.

Also it must be remembered that the Belleville Hockey Club is also sponsoring a juvenile team in the O.M.H.A. and from the ranks of the present roster of 26, and other younger lads, the 1944 Belleville juveniles will be selected. Of course the lads attending the greater number of practices and although failing to secure a place on the junior squad, will naturally enjoy a distinct advantage when the Juvenile team is finally decided upon. After all practically all of the 26 already trying out are of juvenile age limit, that is 17 years or under on the first of January, 1944.

According to Doug Vaughan, of the Windsor Star, Red Heron formerly of the Toronto Leafs and the Pittsburgh Hornets holds the one-game goal-scoring record of the American League. Writes the Windsor scribe: "An American Hockey League fan wants to know who holds the individual scoring record for a single game. Red Heron, a gangling winger who used to wear the livery of the Toronto Maple Leafs, is the man. Heron established the record on the night of February 4, 1942, as a member of the Pittsburg Hornets when he pumped six goals past a New Haven goalie. It may be that with the assistance of the new passing rule, which has opened up the game considerably, that this mark will be broken, but the stunt, when viewed from past performances and taking into consideration what has been accomplished by American League marksmen, will take a lot of doing. American League records reveal that in the history of the league there have been only 20 sharpshooters who have scored as many as four goals in a single game and only one of that number accomplished the feat more than once, Maxie Bennett of the Buffalo Bisons, who counted four times on November 28 of this season, had a previous four-goal splurge on February 18 of the 1940 season while pastiming with the defunct Syracuse Stars. Of the 20 heavy scorers listed in the record book, only five of them are still in the A.L. In addition to Bennett, there is Gauthier and Wally Kilrea of the Hershey Bears, Thurier of Buffalo and Patterson of Hershey."

(Add another squad.)

Maybe it was the inclement weather that kept prospective teams from convening to organize a City Hockey League at the Hume Arena last night, but at any rate the Universal Moulded Products, represented by Wilf Latchford, came in at the last moment giving the City Leagers four sure starters. The other teams entered are Stephens-Adamson, Baker's Fruit Market and Reliance A.C. Now the boys are aiming for a six-teamed loop and hope to include Alemite and some other entry. The final meeting and election of officers will be held at the Hume Arena next Tuesday evening at which time industrial firms and clubs are requested to affiliate in the City Hockey Loop.

(Remember when—)

"Queen Alice" Marble made her professional tennis debut a successful one four years ago tonight, by easily defeating Mary Hardwick, the English champion at New York's Madison Square Gardens. It was her first appearance in a tour which took her to more than 50 cities in the United States, Canada and Cuba.

FIND WORK IN BRITAIN

Dublin (CP) — Prime Minister De Valera told the Dail 3,812 men were given permits to travel from Eire to Britain in October and November and 3,295 women also obtained the permits. The permits are issued if the applicant has work to go to in Britain.

REPORTS CLERGY SHORTAGE

York, England (CP) — Some churches will have to be closed and the number of services reduced in others, the Archbishop of York wrote in the York Diocesan Leaflet, because of an insufficient number of clergy for the parishes. "The sources for the supply of ordinands have temporarily dried up," he said.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 266

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Elva Tyme thinks of a convention as a jam session of visiting firemen. But in bridge, a convention is an arbitrary code meaning given to a specific bid.

A convention is a pre-determined signal that does take its normally accepted interpretation. It is a bid with a previously agreed special meaning.

Players give, take, and exchange information about their hands. They must do that only with these words: One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, clubs, diamonds, hearts, spades, no-trump, pass, double, redouble.

Any signals you give partner must be with words from that short vocabulary. And so it is with any questions you ask about his hand. Likewise, any answers he gives about his hand.

From among those few words, the two words, "four no trump" are selected for a special purpose. They are used as a convention; a signal for asking partner how many aces and kings he holds.

When should you employ that four no-trump signal? Not when you are content with a game or less. Only when aces and kings are all the added information you need for determining the safety of a slam.

First, you must know there are 12 tricks in your pair and have decided on the trump suit. Only then should you bid four no-trump as an ace-and-king quiz.

Linger with this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠A K J 7 5
♥A K J 7 5
♦5
♣J 5
NORTH
♠Q 6 4 2
♥Q 6 4 2
♦A J
♣A 4 2

After an exchange of bids with north, south sticks in a bid of four no-trump. It does not mean he likes no-trump. It is the convention signal.

He says: "Partner, I know what will be trump; I have discovered 12 tricks in our pair; tell me how many aces and kings you have."

There's a mouthful in two words.

AT THE CAPITOL — Who is that gal in the pigtails and black face? Why it's none other than Virginia Weidler, making her latest appearance in M.G.M.'s new musical "Born to Sing," now at the Capitol. On the same program "West Side Kid," starring Donald Barry.

AT THE BELLE

"Watch on the Rhine"

"Watch on the Rhine," which opened at the Belle Theatre yesterday, is much, much more than stirring and dramatic entertainment. It is an experience in a motion picture theatre that comes alive, and is real as flesh and blood, pain and joy.

The Warner Bros. studio has taken Lillian Hellman's prize-winning play and made it into an outstanding motion picture that will certainly be remembered when the time comes 'round to award "Oscars."

It is billed as a film starring Bette Davis and Paul Lukas, but when you come into the theatre you will meet Sara and Kurt Muller and that is how you will remember them, people whom you were indeed happy to know. It is the highest tribute that can be paid to acting.

Miss Davis had added a new and distinct portrayal to the impressive list of characters she has contributed to the screen.

Mr. Lukas acted out his role throughout its fifteen-month run on the stage before he transferred it to the picture. And let it be remembered that for this role he won the award of the New York Drama Critic's Circle for the season's outstanding performance.

Lucile Watson, George Coulouris, Eric Roberts and Frank Wilson are part of the fine cast that made the play a hit. They are also in the film version. Yet those of the cast, such as Geraldine Fitzgerald and Beulah Bondi, who were recruited in Hollywood, fit flawlessly into the pattern.

Ozzie Nelson and his orchestra, presenting a smart musical revue featuring Harriett Hilliard and "Finn and Caddy" a funny Merrie Melodie color cartoon precede the feature attraction.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Born to Sing"

Dickie Hall, who at the age of five plays Bach and Beethoven on the piano in a manner reminiscent of Paderewski, has another oportunity to demonstrate his prowess in "Born to Sing," lilting musical of youth, starts tonight at the Capitol Theatre. The child prodigy, a concert pianist since the age of three, made his screen debut as the son of William Powell and Myrna Loy in "Shadow of the Thin Man."

"Born to Sing" is a lilting musical presenting a group of clever young singers, dancers and musicians, the cast headed by Virginia Weidler, who turns from drama to musical comedy, Ray McDonald, young dancer from the New York stage, and Leo Gorcey. Included are Beverly Hudson, child singing discovery, Darla Hood of "Our Gang" fame, "Rags" Ragland, Seldon Leonard, Henry O'Neill, Larry Nunn, Margaret Dumont and Joe Yule.

The climax is a spectacular presentation of "Ballad for Americans," overnight song hit by John Latouche and Earl Robinson, sung by Douglas McPhail, youthful baritone, in a tableau in which every walk of life in America is depicted.

Also on the picture's musical program are four songs by Earl Brent: "I'll Love Ya," sung by Beverly Hudson; "Here I Am, Eight Years Old," sung by Darla Hood; "I Hate the Conga," sung by Leo Gorcey and Beverly Hudson; and "Two A.M.," sung and danced by Virginia Weidler and Ray McDonald.

"West Side Kid"

Donald Barry plays the part of Johnny April in "The West Side Kid," the Republic picture which will be shown at the Capitol Theatre commencing tonight as the second hit. George Sherman, the director, gave Barry his first part in pictures. Supporting players include Henry Hull and Dale Evans.

A funny cartoon and the 4th chapter of "Secret Service in Darkest Africa" complete the first week of our January parade of hits.

AT THE McCARTHY

Navy Blues

Navy Blues, Warner's Bros., streamlined musical comedy now playing at the McCarthy Theatre, trips the light fantastic from the opening scene to the closing grand finale 108 minutes later.

Here is a compote of mirth, melody, dancing and song hits seasoned well to please the entertainment appetite of the most epicureanized theatregoer.

Choicest plums in this movie dessert are the dancing-singing comediennes Ann Sheridan and Martha Raye, and the boisterous buffoons, Jack Oakie and Jack Haley.

The story which skips around on and off the battleship Cleveland anchored in Hawaiian waters, finds the Jacks hopping about from the frying pan into the fire every time. Their bag of pranks is as full as old Santa's toy sack at Christmas time.

The Gay Sisters

Warner Bros., have once again achieved a grand picturization of a best-selling novel in their excellent adaptation of Stephen Longstreet's The Gay Sisters to the screen. The film which is the second features attraction now playing at the McCarthy Theatre has everything that makes for fine screen entertainment— a swift moving story, a fine cast—romance, intrigue and brilliant dialogue.

Starring in the film is Barbara Stanwyck as the fiery, imperious Fiona Gaylord, head of the famous family. Appearing opposite her is comopsed, level-headed, George Brent as Charles Barclay, a millionaire civil engineer whose ambition it is to buy the Gaylord estate and build a project of his own, but his motive is more than just a monetary one. The picture introduces a newcomer Gig Young, who was acclaimed so whole-heartedly by preview audiences that Warners decided to adapt his character name as the one by which he will be known to movie patrons from now on and all indications are that Gig Young is a name which will gain much prominence in the near future.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was starting his 2nd cup of coffee this morning and ma said to him, Maud Hews wants me to join a new organization she's organizing, called the Gils, but really, William, I mean really, I haven't enough time for another single activity.

What are the Gils? pop said, and ma said, It's the short abbreviation for Give Lifts to Servicemen.

Cant you give servicemen a lift without belonging to the Gils? pop said, and ma said, Certainly I can, and what's more I do, and that's just what I told Maud. My limited gas is always at the disposal of any serviceman going in the same direction. So after all, William, why should I tie up the remnants of my remaining time by joining another organization? If someone would invent a 36 hour day I'd gratefully offer them a little of the exter time, but as it is there's a human limit to the fizzically impossible, as I pointed out to Maud, ma said.

And after supper she said to pop, I ran into Maud Hews downtown in the Zipper Tea Room, and to make a long story short I'm now a full fledged member of the Gils.

The dooce you are, how did you find the time so suddenly? pop said, and ma said, It seems I didn't quite understand the scope of the organization. It seems strictly limited to 6 members, she said.

That does sound like much scope, pop said, and ma said, But dont you see, we'll be the most exclusive organization in any of the services and yet we wont be tied down by a mass of rules because we wont have any rules except a few sketchy ones that we maydecide to make up ourselves, and most important of all we'll have uniforms that will be really distinctive because we're going to design them ourselves. In fact the entire membership is going to meet for that very purpose tomorrow afternoon right here in this house, she said.

Some scope, yee gods, pop said.

And he got in back of the sporting page and stayed there.

The Men Who Save Ships

By Lord Portsmouth

(B.B.C. Press Service)

London, (by Mail) — Sometimes I think that the work of the home farmer in England, in these last few years, has not been properly understood. You see, it is only possible to do that when we consider how much he has had to change his way.

Before the war, we had a comparatively small number of arable farmers as good as any in the world. On the other hand, most of what we produced in England ended as meat, milk, pigs and eggs. Our cows, pigs and chickens were merely food factories, converting grain mostly grown overseas, especially in the Empire.

Millions of acres were in permanent grass; in some countries hardly any land was under the plow. We were, in fact, importing a greater weight of animal foodstuffs than human foodstuffs. On many small farms the land was merely used as an exercise ground—as a sort of recreation park for cows. Many of the farmers had not put a plough into the land for years. They had no implements, tractors, or horses and some had forgotten the elementary arts of cultivation.

In September, 1939, this had to be altered overnight. We could only bring in about fifteen per cent of the imports of animal foodstuffs we used to take, and every acre of ground was needed for grain and milk for direct human consumption. How were we to meet this new situation?

Well, farmers in England, as in most parts of the Empire and indeed, the world, had had the thin end of the stick for years. As we farmers saw it, we had sweated, taken the risks, reaped and sowed, while others when we pictured, perhaps unjustly, as well paunched, rapacious middlemen, took the profits. Yet, somehow or other, our farmers knew it was up to them to pull the country out of the mess, which was certainly not of their making.

All the same, our Government had done two or three very wise things. It had started before the war to encourage ploughing up the grassland and the improvement of fertility. It had got a reserve of tractors and some other implements in stock and with wisdom rare in Governments, decided that British farming would do best if it were decentralized and run by its own people. So, in every county selected War Agricultural Committees were set up, consisting for the most part of well known local farmers and countrymen. These in their turn set up district committees to encourage, direct and supervise the actual farming in each district. County organizations vary enormously, because each county is given a fairly free hand to organise as it thinks fit, but generally speaking, each district consists of about 100,000 acres.

In my own county, we have six such districts and 7,000 farmers and market gardeners with holdings of over five acres. Many of these market gardeners were growing luxury crops, such as flowers, which had to go by the board. Pig and chicken farmers who had relied on bought foodstuffs had generally to go out of business, but they all bore their sacrifice with magnificent patriotism.

Dairy farmers had to be taught to grow food for their own cattle over and above their usual hay. In some cases it meant learning a new technique from the very beginning.

There was a small staff of none too highly paid technical experts in each county. Perhaps the greatest single advantage we had between the wars, was the formation of this technical staff, who really knew their job thoroughly and who now work from daylight until far into the night in field and office. They are doing jobs which would fetch five times the salary in industry or commerce.

Many of our sources of artificial fertilizer were cut off and we had to do everything to improve our use of natural fertilizers, like dung. I can remember an old farm carter making an experimental manure heap with strange ingredients saying: "I've seen a sight of dung heaps in my time, but I ain't never seen one cut capers like this 'ere."

The technical staff would have been swamped at the outset had it not been for the labours of the pioneer farmers in helping their less up to date neighbors and in passing on the findings of science and the application of good husbandry. One real "dyed in the wool" backwoods farmer I know has been persuaded much against his will to alter his habits. He came up to a friend of mine (who did the persuading) in the market and said to him: "George, you'm right about they heifers, I'm blistered if you'm not."

In my county today there are something like four hundred farmers, members of various War Agricultural Committees, giving up anything from one to five days a week voluntarily helping their neighbors, while they run their own farms as well, short handed and always making shift. It is hard to find a parallel in any industry where the whole of the work to increase production, to supervise and sometimes to order a prescribed cropping, has been done entirely, except for the technical staff, by such voluntary help. Moreover, it has not been due to the big rewards on the farming side. No farmer is making a fortune in this war. He is growing the food, but the Government by its taxation is taking all the profit above a certain figure.

It has not only been the mere physical difficulties of making thirty-five million acres of land produce full rations for between over thirty-five and forty million people—enemy action has added enormously to the difficulties. I remember watching a farmer going round on his binder one day shortly after a heavy blitz near the coast and suddenly, the farmer, the tractor and binder all disappeared in the middle of the field. They had fallen into an unsuspected mine crater. Field after field where big bombs had fallen had to be harvested almost by hand on account of the great lumps of clay thrown into the crops, which stopped the binder and could not be seen until the binder had hit them. Often, farm buildings were destroyed. I know one field in which there were a herd of cows, every one of which had been hit either by bomb splinters or anti-aircraft shrapnel.

The farmer's wife has had just about as big a job as the farmer. She has often had to house evacuees, billet land girls, do all the housework in the house for everyone, then help in the dairy, fill up Government forms—and do all the hundred and one voluntary jobs expected of her in the village as well. So, it's hats off to the farmer and his wife. Moreover, the farmer, who is the most individual of men, has to submit to control and fill in a form for everything under the sun. But there it is: they have done a good deal more than merely improve production.

Where we grew enough food for less than twenty million people before the war, they are growing enough for thirty-five million now. As each year goes by, the standard and technique of cultivation gets better and better. We are beginning to learn not to waste our straw—to turn it into manure, no matter what the difficulties; to use up town waste for pigs and chickens and even sewage for compost making; to look after our implements and make them do; above all, we have learned to improve the produce of our grassland, so that we are producing more milk now without imported foodstuffs and with half the pasture, than we did before the war.

And through it all, in spite of the tiredness and overwork and sometimes more than justified exasperation with Government red tape, there is a new spirit about in the countryside, a feeling that all the farmers of the world and especially of the Empire, will have to work together to face the same problems. Before, we used to take a sort of "shame-faced" pleasure in our neighbors' failures and now we are only too anxious to learn from their successes.

Plowing matches and demonstrations are the scene of tremendous good-natured chaff and real hope for the future. Farmers are entering into it with their own men in the same way. Again, in my county, we have some fifty-five local farmers' clubs, voluntary and independent of officialdom. There, farmers either meet in their own houses, or in the local inn in the winter, to discuss new improvements in technique, or on each other's farms in the summer to see how it is done. In much of this the farm worker shares. Farmers very often pool their implements and are always willing to lend a helping hand to their neighbors in the club, with the result that the countryside of England is looking as it should look and as it hasn't looked for seventy years, but should look for the next seventy years.

AUSTRALIANS

came silent just as abruptly and Australian fighters appeared, leading a swarm of American divebombers. For 15 minutes they rained 500-pound bombs on the Pimple. Although it seemed only a pinpoint, 75 per cent of the bombs hit the target.

Almost as soon as the last bomb had exploded, artillery cut loose with a second devastating barrage for 10 minutes. The divebombers came back to pepper the top of the ridge with bullets. Then the guns began another concentrated barrage of 20 minutes.

Then the infantry came — one man at a time in a dripping, cursing stream, charging straight at "Rock Face." The guns lifted their fire 50 yards while the Australians clawed their way up the sheer flank of the crag, each man climbing desperately behind the other, baynet fixed.

Counterfire Not Heavy

Japanese counterfire was not heavy. As anticipated, the defenders were dazed by the weight of the metal flung at them.

The "Pimple" could hardly be seen. It was as if one of the mountain clouds had come down over its smoking sides. But the cloud was the smoke of innumerable bombs and shells fuming over shaggy ridge.

Right up to the ramparts of the "Pimple" itself, the infantry scrambled, while fighters darted through the smoke like terriers lashing every target with lead. The Japanese were exterminated with remarkable light Australian casualties.

Shaggy Ridge is still shared with the enemy but the advantage now is definitely with the Australians.

Pravda Attacks Wendell Willkie On N. Y. Article

Moscow, Jan. 6 — (AP)—Pravda, the official Communist party newspaper, attacked Wendell Willkie Wednesday because of an article he wrote for the New York Times dealing with Russia and the status of Poland and the Baltic states.

Dmitry Zaslavsky, a Pravda writer, accused the United States presidential nominee of 1940 of "muddying the waters" in an effort to draw presidential support from persons who do not trust the Soviet Union as well as to win sympathy from those who do.

"Such a political gambler destroys confidence," the Pravda comment said. The newspaper added that the Baltic question was the business of the Soviet Union and one in which "Mr. Willkie should not interfere."

"As to Finland and Poland, without mentioning the Balkans," Pravda said, "the Soviet Union knows how to deal with them and does not need the help of Mr. Willkie."

The writer accused Willkie of playing "a very peculiar political game." Zaslavsky said that "under the pretext of strengthening confidence in the Soviet Union, Willkie used words and phrases with the purpose of creating mistrust."

Part of Article

Willkie's story, entitled "Don't stir distrust of Russia," appeared in the New York Times magazine section Sunday. In part he said:—

"There are already forces at work in both parties preparing to take selfish political advantage of any move that Russia may make with regard to these smaller states. The theory of those in the Republican party is that the Republicans should sit tight and see what happens. Mr. Stalin, they believe, will make ruthless territorial demands on the smaller states and these demands will produce a violent anti-Russian reaction among Americans who emigrated, or whose forebears emigrated, from those states. They take the position that by adopting a policy of suspicion toward Russia the Republican party can capture not alone these but others who, for quite different reasons, are prone to be anti-Russian. For all this anti-Russian feeling they believe will inevitably react against Mr. Roosevelt to the advantage of the Republican party.

"This kind of approach appears to me dangerously irresponsible and almost totally destructive...

"Yet such would-be Republican leaders are by no means the only offenders; on the contrary, the offences of the Democratic party are equally glaring."

In New York city Wednesday, Willkie had no comment to make on the Pravda article.

CHAPTER 13

Hurrying to Learmonth, he questioned Selkirk and Blair about Dove's activities, but there had been no change. Beyond expressing profound horror at the Japanese treachery, Dove went quietly on preparing his school for Christmas. Meanwhile, the chapel door remained locked and Dove did not venture far from the Hall.

Colin told Blair one morning when they met at the trading post, "It's too deadly quiet to last. Something is going to happen."

A few days later, he found himself a true prophet—but not quite as he intended. It happened suddenly, almost without warning and it began with Tennant's trappers.

For centuries the Cree Indians had held large sections of the back country as breeding grounds for fur animals, unmolested by hunter or trapper. No law, either Indian or white, enforced these natural game preserves, yet the tradition had been respected.

But not by Olsen. Freeze-up had scarcely closed in when the trappers of Dove's school brought word that not only were Olsen and his partner setting their lines in the very heart of the breeding grounds, but they were probably using strychnine!

One Cree dog team had already picked up pieces of poisoned bait and fallen victim; Selkirk's chief trapper had lost a dog on the trail near Olsen's main trap line. Worse followed.

Regardless of prior rights, Tennant's trappers, encouraged by Olsen's example, invaded the richest trapping grounds, and on two occasions ripped out the traps of Indians already there, smashing them or throwing them into air holes in the lake.

At first the Crees protested; then some said on Dove's advice—they turned to swift retaliation, demolishing miles of lines set out by Tennant's gang.

The culmination came when a score of younger Crees and breeds burned Olsen's cabin, destroying a store of food and a number of green pelts already caught. Vowing vengeance, Olsen began rebuilding, and the next morning another Cree dog team had made their last meal on whitefish sprinkled with strychnine.

Like wildfire the unrest spread to remote sections. Clashes on the trail brought three Indians to Benedict's hospital, and the country was rapidly dividing up into warring camps. Among the Crees there were threats against Tennant's life; and, when the white trappers only talked of burning down the school, Dove sent an appeal for protection to Winnipeg. By late December, six Mounties had come by plane to Learmonth—the last patrols from the south shore of the bay.

None knew where or when the next flare-up might come or how far it might spread—whites and breeds alike were living a war of nerves.

Newspapers of the larger Canadian cities took up the fight, some siding with the Indians; others, glad of a chance to attack the Indian Department, supported Tennant's trappers and demanded adequate protection for "modern pioneers trying to open up the wilderness."

The fur firm of J. Holmes in Winnipeg sent a radio to Dove, telling him the last shipment was of excellent quality and trusted they might expect more.

Meanwhile liquor continued to be smuggled to the Indians in ever-increasing quantities and hourly the situation threatened to get out of hand.

Selkirk made a trip to Colin's cabin, for Rae had not been in Learmonth since trapping started. Smoking together, they sat before the stove that night while Colin listened to the older man's tale of recent events, and at the end he said, "Rod, the trouble is we only see what goes on at the surface."

"Isn't that bad enough?"

"There may be something a lot worse. Look at it this way: Who could possibly gain by a fight between Tennant and Dove? Neither of them."

"Then it's utterly senseless—as I said."

"Not quite. Someone could gain—don't forget we're at war."

"That means—"

"Modern war is a war of morale; and trouble with the Crees at a time like this can be made to look like serious internal dissension. Have you heard what the radio in the United States is saying about this? It weakens our war effort; it forces a body of Mounties to stay here instead of patrolling the bay."

"What's the bay got to do with the war?"

"It's been called the weak link in the defence of this continent, Rod."

"You don't believe that Tennant is actually working with Dove?"

"No, I don't. More likely, he's being worked by Dove. I've been thinking about something Tennant told me when I first came here. Tennant said that Dove had dared him to bring in any more white trappers—told him the Crees would not stand for it. Well, you know what that sort of thing does to Nate. It's like a red rag to a bull."

"You think Dove wanted Tennant to bring those trappers in?"

"I think Dove wanted trouble. And I wouldn't be at all surprised if he didn't plant Olsen with Tennant to see that things got off to a good start." Colin laid down his pipe. "Well, that isn't my fight. I only hope I can keep out of it."

A doomed hope.

* * *

Three days before Christmas, Alec Gunn staggered back to the cabin with cut lips and a lacerated shoulder. Olsen had met him at the end of the Upper Nelson trap line and, cursing him for cutting in on Tennant's territory, knocked the old fellow down, then struck him twice with the steel chain of a trap. Leaving him lying there, Olsen had gone up the trial.

Ominously quiet, Colin taped up Alec's shoulder and put him to bed. Next morning, after a silent breakfast, Colin said, "If you're able to walk, we'll go over to Olsen's cabin."

Alec looked anxious. "He's not alone. There's another trapper staying with him."

But Colin was already putting on his parka.

Olsen and his partner were smoking in their cabin when, without knocking, Colin threw open the door. At sight of Colin's face, Olsen pushed back his chair and scrambled to his feet.

"You beat up my partner yesterday." Colin spoke only to Olsen.

The trapper glanced at Alec and laughed. "By the looks of him, I sure did." Leaning back against the wall, his fingers reached out for the heavy shovel standing by the stove. His close-set eyes were beginning to redden. "Maybe you came over to make something of it."

But Olsen's fingers never touched the shovel. Colin struck once, the trapper's head snapped back and he crumpled down beside the stove.

His partner cowered in a corner. "Don't—" he began.

Colin shook his head. "I'm not going to hurt you. But when Olsen can listen, tell him Alec and I are still trapping the Upper Nelson."

Outside, Colin examined his skinned knuckles, then turned to Alec. "While we're here, we'd better let Dr. Benedict have a look at your shoulder." Strapping on their snowshoes, they cut across the lake toward the school.

An hour later, as they crossed the clearing, Colin saw Tennant's wolf team, harnessed outside Benedict's cabin and for a moment he hesitated. If Nate were visiting Blair now, it might be a bad time to break the news of a fight with Tennant's trapper. Yet it was too late to turn back. Already the wolves had signaled his coming and Nate was waving his hand from the doorway.

"Alec," Colin said, "go over to the hospital and show Dr. Benedict that shoulder. I'll pick you up later. I'd rather tell Nate what happened this morning than have Olsen do it."

Tennant was waiting at the cabin door, the hood of his parka thrown back and the mackinaw shirt open over his great hairy chest.

"How's the firm of Rae and Gunn coming?" he called.

Colin stepped inside. "We'd be coming better, Nate, if your trappers would leave us alone."

"What's up?"

Without rancor, Colin told him about Olsen, while Tennant listened with a puzzled frown and Colin waited for the outburst that might mean war.

Instead, Tennant remained frowningly thoughtful; and, when Colin finished, Nate asked, "Is Alec hurt bad?"

"I don't think so."

"Good." Again he frowned. "What I don't get is this—I told all my boys to lay off you and Alec. I told Olsen especially because he's working over your way."

Colin interrupted. "Nate, I think that's the whole point."

"Point of what?"

"Didn't Olsen once work for Dove?"

"Sure. But he's not working for him now."

"Certain of that?"

"Why, yes." Nate caught the look in Colin's eyes. "What are you driving at?"

"Just this: It's a big relief to me that Olsen's not acting on your orders. But the fact remains, he did go out of his way to make trouble for me after you told him to let Alec and me alone. I don't think he'd do that without some season."

"And you think that reason is Dove?"

"I know that it would please Dove immensely if you and I quarrelled." Colin stood up. "When's Blair due back from Winnipeg?"

"Tonight. I was just leaving a note for her."

"You'll be taking her to the Christmas dance?"

Tennant laughed. "And every other one, I hope." He stopped, then walked close to Rae. "Colin, I'm going to ask Blair to marry me. She knows I want to—she's always known it. And she's always put me off. But now the fur trade has done well by me and well, you know I've always loved her. The first pitched battle you and I ever had was because of Blair—remember?"

"I remember." Colin's voice sounded strangely flat even to his own ears. He knew Nate was waiting for him to speak; so he put out his hand. "I'm wishing you and Blair all the happiness there is."

Just then Dove entered the cabin with his usual quiet smile, looking he said, for Dr. Benedict, and a few minutes later Colin left them.

Thoughtfully Dove looked after him. "I hear Rae is trapping on the Upper Nelson."

"He is," said Tennant.

"I'm glad to hear he called Olsen's bluff. That ought to give the Crees some courage."

Tennant grinned down at the little man. "I wouldn't bank on that. Not everybody could get away with it. Colin Rae happens to be a friend of mine—and a friend of Blair's."

Dove's eyebrows raised. "He's a friend of Selkirk's, too, but he doesn't let that stand in his way."

"His way to what?"

"To getting what he wants." Dove looked up at the ceiling. "Mr. Rae is a very smooth person with the ladies—all the ladies. I stopped at his cabin the day before freeze-up. And he wasn't alone." Smiling in reminiscence, Dove began talking slowly, while, with eyes that steadily darkened, Tennant listened.

The days just before the Christmas dance marked the height of the trapping season for Learmonth. November and December had always been the best fur months, and this year the catch was heavier than ever before. Christmas week was ushered in by the first real cold spell of winter. For three successive nights the temperature dropped to forty-five below, while across the sky the northern lights, glowing in pale greens and pinks, crackled like the riffling of a deck of cards.

But now, with the holidays at hand, Indians and breeds began to pour daily into the post, bringing the first fruits of their labors. From morning until night the store of the trading post was filled with men—white, breed and Cree—squatting cross-legged about the stove, seated on the counters, making the place blue with smoke. It was more crowded than ever the day before Christmas—the day of the dance. There was an easy comradeship around the great black stove that day—the store resounded with talk. The victories in Libya, the rout of the Nazis by the Russians and most of all the knowledge that Uncle Sam had at last risen in mighty anger — all this was cheering news from the outside world. Maybe the tide was turning.

Colin reached the post shortly after non, toboggan packed with his first catch of furs. Red fox, mostly. Twenty-four of them. Nine lynx, a few marten, and several otter. But the prize of Colin's catch was a fisher, still unskinned. He had caught it that morning, and the trappers, crowding about his toboggan, estimated its worth at over sixty dollars.

Followed by Selkirk, Colin went into the skinning shed, where a long rack had been erected for trappers to skin freshly caught animals they brought in from the trap line. A dozen men were busily stripping pelts there and throwing the carcasses to their dogs.

Laying his fisher on the rack, Colin began cutting back the skin and a moment later he saw Olsen tie his dog team just outside. Carrying a pile of furs, Olsen stamped his way inside the trading post; then, coming out, laid four red fox on the rack and began skinning them in a far corner of the shed.

The two men did not speak; but as Colin passed to throw the carcass of the fisher to his dogs, he glanced down at the fox Olsen was skinning. Abruptly he stopped, leaned forward and for a moment watched in silence; then he raised his eyes. "Nice foxes, Olsen."

A grunt and a tightening of Olsen's lips.

Colin nodded toward Olsen's gaunt team, yapping hungrily outside. "Why don't you feed your dogs?"

This time Olsen designed to speak. "Next time you write a book, you might mention that dogs don't eat fox meat."

"They eat parts of them, or hadn't you heard? Look!" Picking up the fox's stomach, Colin tossed it to Olsen's dogs.

howl of panic Olsen dropped his

The effect was electric. With a skinning knife, raced outside and tore the stomach from the mouth of the nearest dog. Trembling and pale, he whirled on Colin.

"You mind your—"

He stopped. Every man in the skinning shed was watching him, and now they closed about him.

Colin's voice was low with anger. "So you don't like your dogs to eat a fox when it's stuffed with poisoned whitefish?" He held up two of Olsen's unskinned foxes for everyone to see. "Look how bloated they are. Poisoned, all of them! Every animal here was killed with strychnine."

A growl measured the temper of the crowd. Olsen had never been liked—everyone looked on him as the ringleader of Tennant's trappers—and the men in the skinning shed pushed closer in ominous, expectant silence.

Vainly Olsen looked about him for some of his fellows, but his search met only those hostile circle of angry eyes.

Then the circle was broken by Selkirk's chief trapper. Gray eyes snapping, he elbowed his way to Olsen and his voice shook. "So that is how my dogs picked up poisoned bait near your trap line!"

Swiftly Selkirk interposed. Throwing an arm about his trapper, he pulled him back; then faced Olsen.

"We have a law up here for men who trap with strychnine." He pointed down the trail. "We give them twenty-four hours to leave the country. That's what we're giving you, Olsen."

Once more Olsen looked about him; then he hurried to his toboggan. Untying his team, he glared back at Colin and spat. "This ain't all over yet, you squealer! Nate'll teach you to mind your own business."

He turned down the trail and Selkirk looked up at Colin Rae.

"Does this mean that Tennant's trappers are using poison?"

"I don't believe Nate even knew about it," Colin answered.

But Selkirk's eyes were doubtful. "We may know before the evening's out." He walked back toward the shed. "Nate will be at the dance tonight and his trappers, too. If they try to stand behind Olsen, anything can happen." Gravely Selkirk added, "Come down to the inn early, Colin. I may need you."

By four o'clock of that short December day, the sun had already set. As host to the countryside, Selkirk had decorated the big room in Ma Corrigale's inn. The floor was waxed and a five-piece orchestra made ready for the big event of Learmonth's long winter — the annual Christmas dance.

Since dusk, the guests had been arriving. The postmaster, his wife and daughter, the school teacher who stayed at the Anglican mission; Mac—the pilot for Canadian Airways—and Dove's teachers from the school. Dove himself never came to these official dances of the Bay Company, and Dr. Benedict, detained at the hospital, sent word he might be down later. Twelve of Tennant's trappers came in a body—noisy, festive, a little drunk—but Olsen was not among them.

Dog teams were tied outside the inn, the animals curled up on the snow, watching each newly arriving team with wary, unfriendly eyes.

News of Olsen's exposure had traveled swiftly. In little groups men talked of it as they gathered that night for the dance. It cast a shadow of foreboding that would not be put aside, as each man knew what Olsen's parting threat might mean.

Ottawa, Jan. 6 (CP)—Cheese gradings in Ontario and Quebec increased 75.1 per cent in the week ended Jan. 1 compared with the same period a year ago, the agriculture department said today.

Gradings for the week this year totalled 10,944 boxes against 6,250. Since Nov. 29, gradings for the two provinces have totalled 69,169 boxes, a gain of 14 per cent over the same period last year.

The most notable gain was shown by Quebec, which produced 8,017 boxes in the week ended Jan. 1, compared with 1,693 last year.

Winter cheese production has been encouraged by a subsidy of 30 cents a 100 pounds of milk used in the manufacture of cheddar cheese, made payable on Oct. 1 and continuing until April 30.

Under existing contract, Canada seeks to provide 150,000,000 pounds of cheese to the United Kingdom over a year period which ends shortly. Due to poor weather conditions and a greatly enlarged demand for fluid milk, cheese production was down in earlier months of the contract year and it is not anticipated British requirements will be met in full.

Pre-Invasion Plea Made to Belgians

Allies Advise Them to Stay in Houses When Operations Get Under Way — Trenches and Dugout Shelters Are Advised

London, Jan. 6—(CP)—In the name of the United Nations high command, the BBC radioed pre-invasion pleas to the Belgians today to remain in their homes when military operations get under way.

"If you are on roads, you will obstruct Allied air forces which must be free to attack the enemy's communications," the broadcast said.

"If, on the other hand, you hamper the movement of the Germans they will shoot you down ruthlessly. Stay in your homes. Anything is better than the roads."

The broadcast further advised the Belgians to dig slit trenches and to build dugout shelters.

Berlin Says Rommel Ends Survey of Defences in Holland

London, Jan. 6 — (CP) — The Berlin radio said today Marshal Erwin Rommell has completed a tour of German defence installations in Holland as a part of his inspection of the anti-invasion works of Europe's west coast.

"Alarm practices and manoeuvres carried out with live ammunition again proved the high standard of training and that the divisions are ready for the attack," said the broadcast.

Evacuees Leave Berlin in Droves

Stockholm, Jan. 6 — (CP)—Fires still burned in Berlin at 4 p. m. Wednesday from the R.A.F. heavy Monday raid, and thousands of evacuees, carrying their meager belongings, jammed trains and highways out of the city, the newspaper Aftontidningen said today.

Food shortages have developed in many sections of the battered capital.

Three hundred persons were reported to have been extricated from an air raid shelter beneath Hitler's damaged Reich Chancellery after they had been trapped for 30 hours.

Dispatches to the Stockholm newspaper said also that a Nazi navy shipyard, wharves and an ammunition factory had been destroyed during the two-day heavy bomber assault on Kiel.

A thousand persons were killed Tuesday and 800 more died in Wednesday's follow-up, the newspaper said.

The United States precision bombers located their targets accurately despite a smoke screen the Nazis laid in a futile attempt to hide the port city.

Gen. Leese Tells Of Grim Fight In Italian Area

New York, Jan. 6 —(CP)— Lt.-Gen. Sir Oliver Leese, new commander of the British 8th Army in Italy, told newspapermen he believes there are many people who have not yet realized "what our men are up against," the BBC reported today.

"From El Alamein to the Sangro river, the Germans fought with their heads over their shoulders, always ready to pull when outflanked, but now, Gen. Leese stated, 'they are fighting like hell.'

"The 8th Army, General Leese said, had always fought and will fight magnificently and I am proud to be with them. But he added to the correspondents 'see that they realize at home that we are up against a grim problem in the fighting line.'"

Nazis Massacre Over 1,000 Greeks

Cairo, Jan. 6. —(AP) — The Greek government announced today the Germans had massacred more than 1,000 residents of Kalavrita and destroyed the historic convents of Mega Spileon and Agia Lavra.

The Greeks said all males over 12 years old were ordered assembled in a large space outside Kalavrita on Peloponnesus, to "listen to a speech" which turned out to be the chatter of machine-guns. Later, the Greeks said women and children of the town were compelled to assemble in a school which was set afire. The statement said scores died in the panic.

Houses then were plundered by soldiers. The convents were said to have been set upon and 15 monks were mistreated and thrown into a ravine, the statement said.

Canadian Tank Emerges Winner

Halifax, Jan. 6 (CP)—How a Canadian tank emerged winner in a grim hide-and-seek game with a Nazi tank in the Sicilian town of Ragusa was told yesterday by Tpr. George Anderson of Winnipeg aboard the hospital ship Lady Nelson.

The two tanks, Anderson said, were on opposite side of a block of stores in Ragusa's business section. Each was trying to get a bead on the other, with Canadian and German infantrymen on the sidelines passing on directions to their respective tanks.

As they shuttled back and forth inconclusively, with neither able to gain the advantage, Canadian ingenuity solved the problem. The Canadian tank commander drove his machine right through the side of one building and into a store via its back door.

Then, as the Nazi lumbered past in the street, the Canadian gunners let him have it right through the store's plate glass windows. It finished the enemy tank.

THUGS BEAT WATCHMAN

Toronto, Jan. 6 —(CP)— William Lennie, 70-year-old night watchman, was beaten into a semi-conscious condition by two young burglars armed with a blackjack whom he caught ransacking the office of a cold storage company here early today.

The thieves, described as about 17 years of age, left the watchman lying on the floor and fled. Lennie told police he entered the office to find the youths ripping open desk drawers and filing cabinets. He tried to reach a telephone but was struck over the head with a blackjack.

The man courteously reopened a door and personally conducted Mrs. Moorefield about the building, pointing out various historical spots. Then he asked:—

"How would you like to have the Governor take you home"

"That would be marvelous," Mrs. Moorefield answered.

"Then permit me to show you to my car," said Governor Olind Johnston.

FLYING PHYSICIAN PROVIDES UNIQUE MEDICAL SERVICE

Australian Doctor Uses Radio and Plane to Serve Patients in Bleak Sheep Districts of New South Wales

(Written for The Canadian Press by A. R. FORD)

Broken Hill, Australia (CP) — In this historic mining town in the heart of one of the bleakest districts in Australia, I saw the most unique social service in the world—the Flying Doctor. The New South Wales Flying Doctor covers a lot of territory as he provides medical aid to residents within 500 miles of Broken Hill. Two of the world's most modern inventions, the radio and the airplane, combine to give medical service to the isolated sheep stations of this vast territory.

The size of the sheep stations is bewildering to Canadians. In most of this country vegetation is so scarce that about 24 sheep to the square mile is all that can be maintained. As a station—the word station here is used for ranch—would be small which had 20,000 sheep, one can imagine the extent of the holdings and the isolation of the "out-back" settlers.

Before the Flying Doctor came, an accident or sickness was a tragedy in these far distant outposts. By means of the Flying Doctor life has been completely altered. A radio station has been located at Broken Hill. The doctor there is Dr. J. G. Woods. The isolated stations have had installed at a very moderate price what is called a pedal radio. They are worked by foot when operating. Each has its own call letters and at certain hours the doctor is in the radio station to listen in and give advice to patients.

I listened in as he talked several hundred miles to out-stations. One woman was worried about one of their hands who had a sore throat and would not stop work. After discussing all the symptoms, the doctor decided it was not very serious and advised the use of salt and water as a gargle and said she should insist the man stop work for a day or so.

Emergency Medicine

Then another man whom he called "Jim", said he had sprained his hand. After asking him many questions to make sure that it was only a sprain, the doctor told him to rub on it Medicine 18 from the medicine chest and bandage it up. Dr. Woods explained to us that a recent development had been the making up of a standardized medicine chest with remedies of every character for use in emergencies or simple cases.

The radio operator, also, takes telegrams from the outposts, for which a slight charge is made. There were two telegrams. One of them was from a woman some three hundred miles away in a girls' school in Adelaide. The good-natured radio operator sometimes does shopping for the people in the far away stations. He will buy saddles for the men and he gets his wife to fill orders occasionally for the women. These are sent out with the mail couriers, who travel with lorries to the most distant posts, usually once a week.

Dr. Woods makes flights with his airplane on an average of three times a week. He has one of the best pilots in Australia—and needs him because there are only the crudest airports which the station owners have been able to prepare for landing. The station manager is asked to light a smoky fire half an hour before the doctor is expected. This indicates location of the landing ground and strength and direction of the wind. If the station has a good sized mirror it is flashed in the direction from which the airplane comes. These flashes are visible up to 25 miles. The plane is really an aerial ambulance and patients who require further treatment are transported by plane on a stretcher specially built to fit into the plane.

Started by Missionary

The originator of the Flying Doctor scheme was a pioneer Presbyterian medical missionary, Rev. Dr. John Flynn, who actually served in the "out-back" by camel. He persuaded the Presbyterian Church to advance money for an experimental service. When the first experiment proved a success, Dr. Flynn arranged that the church should hand the service over to the public. Today there are six flying stations of Flying Doctor service in Australia.

Dr. Woods is a man of about 40, a graduate of Melbourne University Medical School, tall, lean and bronzed—the typical outdoor Australian. But many stories are told of his work. A few weeks ago a relay of horses had to be organized to summon him to a patient 400 miles from Broken Hill. A station hand on an out-station of Arrarbury in Western Queensland was taken seriously ill 60 miles from the nearest station with a pedal radio. A series of horsemen at various camps rode by relay to the main station where a message was transmitted to Dr. Woods. He was in Adelaide at the time, where the ambulance was undergoing overhaul. The doctor, by means of the radio network, gave instructions how the patient was to be treated. His message was sent by horse the 60 miles to the outpost. A landing ground was cleared for the plane. Dr. Woods flew from Adelaide to Broken Hill, some 300 miles and thence to the patient, 700 to 800 miles. He was taken back to Broken Hill hospital by plane for treatment.

The Flying Doctor service is maintained partly by government grants from the different states and the Commonwealth and partly by the generosity of the public.

Regular Nip Keeps Tiny Baby Healthy

Baton Rouge, La. (CP) — Baby Betty Sue Beeson, believed to be Baton Rouge's smallest baby and certainly its tiniest "imbiber", has not been affected by the national liquor shortage.

Betty Sue weighed two pounds and three ounces at birth. For a month she had alternate feedings of milk and whisky-and-water — and, according to hospital nurses liked the latter better. Now she weighs nearly four pounds.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Luther W. Beeson is still in the hospital's oxyginaire, but is expected to be taken home when she reaches six pounds, probably early in 1944.

Frontier Dash Ends Two Years' Freedom

Bladon, England (CP)—In April, 1941, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Newton got a card from a prisoners-of-war camp in Poland saying "John has eloped" and Mrs. George Grant got one saying "George has taken up running."

The men's prison mates took this way of telling the Grants and Newtons their sons, captured at Dunkirk, had escaped. Through cards from the men in the camps, they learned how the two boys had been harbored by a Polish family living near the camp, how they attempted to cross Poland and turned back and how the Gestapo was hunting for them.

Then there was a blank space until a repatriated Canadian pilot told the Newtons and Grants the boys were still at large but the Polish family had been executed for hiding them. Now the families have received cards telling them that after more than two years of freedom, George and John had been recaptured in a dash for the Spanish frontier after getting all the way across Europe.

He Took His Duck To School One Day

Knoxville, Tenn. (CP) — If you have been calling someone a 'dumb duck', consider the case of a webb-footed fowl owned by Charlie Hickman. Last Easter Charlie's mother gave him a two-day-old duck. By the time Charlie started back in the sixth grade this fall the duck had grown quite a bit and "quack, quack, quack," the duck fluffed its wings and went right along with Charlie. Since then the duck hasn't missed a day and the school principal reports the duck "is smart and has a lot of manners."

LAYS ONCE IN A LIFETIME

West Palm Beach, Fla., Jan. 5—(AP) — Ailing and 50 years old, a parrot began choking, coughing and sneezing like a human being, so Mrs. A. P. Sadler was convinced her bird had asthma. But, while Mrs. Sadler sought a remedy, the parrot calmly laid an egg and the asthmatic symptoms vanished. And that egg, explained the owner, was the bird's first and last because she belongs to a species that lays once in a lifetime.

Tea Planting in India

(By Bob Dickie, An Old Tea Planter, in Civil Service Review)

No commodity is so much consumed as tea and so little known about it. The tea seed was originally imported from China and Japan to Assam, India. Tea plantations planted with this seed grew larger and larger as tea planters kept collecting the seed in the fall of the year, putting it into nurseries, and when these had grown about a foot to eighteen inches, the young plants were planted out into newly cleared and opened up virgin soil.

The tea plucked from the China and Japan tea bushes was very good, as only the very best soil, rich in iron minerals was planted in tea. The climate is the best in the world for the tea bush.

The China tea bush gives about 300 maunds per acre (a maund is 82 lbs.) of dried manufactured tea. The Japan variety gives about 400 maunds per acre, and the tea shoots are rather larger than the China variety, but both are hybrids.

* * *

Tea planters in Assam, also in Cachar and Sylhet, continued planting more tea seed in their nurseries, and after twelve months the young tea bushes, as stated before, being planted in the best cleared virgin soil, everyone was making money and carrying on as usual till one day in the early seventies an old tea planter named Bruce discovered the native Manipur indigineous tea plant growing wild in Assam as well as the Singlo indigineous which is practically the same plant as the Manipur. Everyone got very excited and proceeded to collect all the tea seed of the Manipur and Singlo they could get hold of and plant it into nurseries; then as soon as it got a foot high it was planted separately by itself in newly open parts of their plantations. After eighteen months to two years the young bushes were pruned straight across, and soon new shoots came out, and the young bushes were judiciously tipped and plucked and tipped, and they soon spread out and grew.

* * *

To make a long story short the bushes soon grew very much broader and larger than the China and Japanese varieties. We had certainly come into something big, for the mature bushes in a couple of years or more gave the huge crop of from 8 to 19 maunds per acre as compared with the other two varieties. Everyone went after the Manipur and Singlo, and though the shoots were about double the size and length of the China and Japan, the tea made from them was splendid. Oh, how we figured our profits in the future!

Just about this time the borer insect destroyed all the coffee bushes in Ceylon. Becoming personal, I had a letter from an uncle, who was a coffee planter there with his two sons, telling me they were about ruined. As I believed the climate in Ceylon was very much like ours in Assam. I figured I would send my uncle down some tea seed to try out. I accordingly got all the Manipur seed I could spare, packed it in charcoal and sent it down to him at a price just sufficient to cover freight.

Was he grateful? I'll say he was! Then other Ceylon coffee planters started sending for our Manipur, and offering very big prices for the seed. I'm afraid one or two of our rather unscrupulous ones put in a quantity of the China and Japan hybrid seed, but on the whole they got the best we had. Ceylon has a climate in some respects the same as Assim, Cachar and Sylhet and tea began to grow there very well. Later on they exported it, but though nearer to the world's markets, it did us no harm, and I, among other Assam planters, got high prices for our teas, as most of us did not go in for coarse plucking and quantity instead of quality, and I kept picking my two leaves and the bud or tip, and did not pluck the third leaf.

* * *

When the tea leaves are gathered and weighed, they are spread out on long bamboo tables about 2 inches deep, and when the leaves dry they are soft, just like a kid glove. When this takes place we put them in a rolling machine and roll them till they are all twisted up. They are then taken out of the rolling machine and put into a sieve machine to break up the lumps, then taken out and spread on large floor tables between damp large cotton sheets, and covered up till they ferment and are now a bright copper color, when they are again put in the rolling machine and rolled again. And after that they are put in the Kinmond Dryer and carefully watched till all the juice is dried, then they are taken from the dryer and thrown in a huge heap on a large polished cement floor. After they are cooled they are carefully picked over by the old women of the plantation who cannot do tea plucking.

* * *

Green tea is just the leaf after it has been rolled and put in the drying machine, and has not undergone the process of fermentation. Personally I never went in for making green tea. The price was lower and we planters as a rule did not like it, and it was only on a few plantations where they had orders for "green tea" that this was done.

The dry tea is then put in a small mesh sieve which is shaken by machinery, the smallest tips and leaves go through the sieve as Orange Pekoe and Broken Orange Pekoe. Then the rest of the tea is put in a slightly larger sieve and the next quality is retained here, viz: Pekoe, then the balance is put in a still larger mesh sieve, and the next quality Pekoe Souchong is retained. Then as the larger leaves are now coarser they are put in the largest sieve of all, and the Souchong tea from these leaves is kept. What remains over this is called fannings, and is the cheapest kind of tea. One other thing we must not forget, and that is the dust which we used to export nearly entirely to Russia and got a very good price for it. The Russians used to make it into bricks, and strange to say thought a great deal of it.

* * *

The tea season ends about the end of October or November, when the hybrid China and Japan tea bushes begin to flower extensively, and the young shoots become scarcer and scarcer. Soon the flowers fall off and the seeds begin to grow. They grow about the size of a large hazel nut, and gradually ripen till they are ready to be picked. The indigineous bush flowers also, but it is not nearly so prolific as the hybrids.

In my day the tea flower was sometimes plucked in very small quantities, as no one liked the flavor of it, but now-a-days it is used quite extensively in the tea to give it a flavor.

After the tea seed is plucked the bushes stay as they are until the sap goes down and dries up to a great extent, then they are pruned straight across just the shape of a table, so as to give the greatest plucking surface.

After the pruning is over the women fork and dig around the roots of the bushes, and then the men deep hoe between the lines of the tea but not too close to the bushes as they might damage the roots. The tea bush has a very long tap root which goes down nearly two feet or more, consequently all tea has to be thoroughly drained by ditches every 60 feet or more. If this is not done and the tap root gets down into water or swamp soil the root becames black, and if not drained the bushes would discolor, and in time the plant would die. After the hoing and digging is over the rains start first with showers, then getting wetter and wetter, and soon the bushes begin to throw out new shoots. When they are six inches high tipping starts, and when the rains become general soon we pluck our plantation over once a week.

* * *

During all this time Celyon was forging ahead, and one exciting morning we heard that Sir Thomas Lipton had bought Mazawatte Estate in Ceylon. We all thought he would be sure to purchase tea estates in Assam. Quite a few planters had their plantations for sale. I was asked by a syndicate in Calcutta to put a price on mine, which I did and gave them an option on it for 6 weeks at a big figure. Just before the option was up they asked for an extension, which I refused, and they exercised their option in time, and I got a big price. Everyone was saying:: "Lipton will purchase in Assam. Just wait and see." But he was satisfied with his Ceylon purchase and never bought a plantation in Assam, though he was the biggest purchaser on the Calcutta market.

In my day we occasionally in the fall picked small quantities of the tea flower. We dried them and tried drinking the brew, but we did not care for it as it made us feel squeamish. Today, however, it is used extensively in tea, and I often taste, it, and it seems all right.

The greatest rainfall in the world is north of Assam in the Cherraponnji district which has an annual rainfall of 500 to 600 inches of rain a year, and as we got a lot of the aftermath of this, rain was always plentiful in the rainy season. We used to do the round of hoeing in our plantation every ten days, and if we did not the grass jungle would grow so fast it would soon reach the height of the tea bushes.

The finest and most flavory as well as the most expensive tea in the world comes from Darjeeling in northern India. It certainly has a grand flavor. The Darjeeling climate and soil must account for this. It is not plentiful as the soil is limited owing to the rocky and mountainous country. They grow also very good tea in Java and the production there is gradually forging ahead.

* * *

Tea for many a long year had a bad name, people who knew nothing about it said: "Oh, it is full of tannin and makes your stomach sick." The reason for this was, many years ago the housewife after giving her husband his porridge and milk would make a strong brew of tea for him, and after he drank this he would go off to work, and the wife would return to bed, getting up again at 8 a.m. when the children would have their breakfasts and go off to school. She would put some more fresh tea in the morning's brew and fill it up with boiling water, and drink it and probably the children too. Lunch time would come, and the pernicious practice was repeated, and hubbie would get some more. It again would be repeated at 6 p.m. and drunk again, but this time would be about the finish as the teapot was now very full of tea leaves and tannin. Today people understand and when tea is made and drunk, the teapot is emptied and fresh tea put in at every meal. If this is done there is, no tannin in tea, but one can imagine the amount of tannin drunk the old way. Tea is refreshing tonic and if properly brewed does not cause indigestion.

Tells of Great Benefits From Using Syntona Medicine

Can Eat Food of Any Kind and Enjoy Life Since Syntona Medicine Relieved Indigestion, Gas, Sour Stomach, Tired-Out Feeling and Constipation

Endorsements of Syntona by well known and reputable men and women give convincing proof of the good results that sufferers of stomach, kidney, liver and bowel disorders have obtained by using this famous mixture of herbs and roots. For example, Mr. Peter Husted, 16 Broadway, Woodstock, Ontario, says:

"Syntona has given me such effective relief from gas bloat, indigestion and souring of my food after meals that it is just like having a brand new stomach.

"I used to suffer so much with my stomach that most everything I ate gave me miserable feeling, with gas and sour acid risings afterwards. I lost my appetite, got so that I couldn't sleep at night, and became generally rundown and felt tired all the time. I was badly constipated and troubled with aches and pains in my joints.

"But now I can eat food of any kind again without fear of indigestion, and it's all due to taking a few bottles of Syntona. It solved my troubles with constipation. I rest much better at night, have more strength and energy to get around during the day and enjoy life again. I don't have any aches and pains and I feel better than I have for the past two years or more. I am glad to recommend such a good medicine and I hope this will be the means of others finding the same good results that I've had."

Syntona is sold and recommended in Belleville at DOLAN THE DRUGGIST. They will gladly tell you all about this grand medicine that has helped so many local men and women.

RUMOR ALLIED SPECIAL TROOPS IN YUGOSLAVIA

No Confirmation At London, Algiers Cairo of Report

Stockholm Report Says Landings Take Place at Several Important Points

ROUNDABOUT STORIES

London, Jan. 7 — (CP)—Roundabout reports reached Stockholm today that Allied specialist troops had landed at several strategic points on the coast of Yugoslavia.

Meanwhile dispatches from Allied headquarters in Algiers called "completely erroneous" a report that "crack Allied divisions" had landed in Yugoslavia. This account was carried by Reuters news agency, quoting the Stockholm-Tidningen, which in turn was said to have credited its information to reports from Zagreb, capital of puppet Croatia. A qualified but unofficial source in London said the report "probably was planted by the Germans as a feeler."

The story that Allied specialists had reached Yugoslavia also was roundabout, reaching Stockholm from Zagreb by way of Budapest, and likewise must be considered with reservations.

These reports gave no indication of the size of the forces, or whether they were British or United States, but British and American officers and liaison missions have been reported active with Yugoslav Partisans for several weeks. Some of these apparently are supply officers.

The Reuters dispatch from Stockholm said the British and American troops were engaged in "heavy fighting" with Germans and Ustachis (Croat puppet troops).

Zurich dispatches to London yesterday said Zagreb residents were "suffering from invasion nerves" and mentioned a report circulating in the Croat capital that strong units of the British 1st and American 7th Armies—neither of which has been engaged in active fighting as a whole since the invasion of Italy—were concentrating on the Italian East Coast at Bari for a Balkan invasion.

One highly-placed British observer said there undoubtedly was considerable passage of Allied officers across the Adriatic as part of the close liaison with Marshal Josip Broz (Tito) but discounted the idea that there had been any troop landings in force.

The British 1st Army was commanded by Lt.-Gen. Sir K. A. Anderson in Tunisia and the United States 7th Army was commanded by Lt.-Gen. George S. Patton in Sicily.

Previously, British and American officers have been reported leading Yugoslav guerillas on the Balkan front.

Tito's Forces Withdraw

Headquarters of Marshal Josip Drug Broz (Tito) announced today that Yugoslav Partisan forces attacking Banja Luka, Croatian base of the 2nd German Tank Army, had withdrawn after six days of furious street fighting in which heavy losses were inflicted on the Nazis.

"After successful conclusion of their allotted tasks units of the 5th Corps have withdrawn from Banja Luka," a broadcast communique said in announcing the end of the bitter battle.

Twenty miles to the north, meanwhile, other Partisan leaders launched what Tito described as a "successful" attack on the Sava River town of Osanska Gradiska, its suburb, Stara Gradiska on the north bank of the river, and Nova Gradiska, a town on the Zagreb-Belgrade railway a few miles further north.

Slovenian Partisans continued their guerilla operations in the Drave Valley in northeastern Slovenia, where they severed the Zagreb-Fiume railway at several points and derailed a train which toppled into the Drave River.

Novo Mesto, rail-river junction town in central Slovenia was reported still under siege by Partisans who have frustrated all attempts by the German garrison to break through their lines.

15 NEW STREET CARS FOR TORONTO

Toronto, Jan. 7 — (CP) — Fifteen new streamlined street cars will arrive in Toronto from Montreal today, it was announced last night by Toronto Transportation Commission officials, who said they would replace 15 old-type wooden cars, 10 of which were sent to Ottawa and five to Port William at the request of the Federal Transit Controller.

Marines Encounter Stiff Opposition Near Borgen Bay

Allied Headquarters, New Guinea, Jan. 7. (AP)— Japanese defenders of New Britain Island have lost another 600 dead in their stiffening resistance to the United States Marines who landed at Cape Gloucester 12 days ago.

Allied headquarters reported today that Marines pressing eastward toward Borgen Bay from the Cape Gloucester Beachhead have encountered fierce opposition and only slight advances have been made.

Aerial warfare against the Japanese centred at Madang, New Guinea, 180 miles west of Cape Gloucester, where Allied airmen delivered a 243-ton bombing; at Rabaul on the northeastern tip of New Britain, where a fighter sweep knocked ten Japanese planes out of the sky, and at Kavieng, New Ireland, where two destroyers were hit and probably sunk.

The blast against Madang, important shipping and supply base on the north coast of New Guinea, came at a time when leap-frogging Allied forces were surging up the coast.

American troops which landed at Saidor, New Guinea, Jan. 2 have moved ten miles northward to contact the enemy and now are less than 50 airline miles from Madang.

Japanese forces cut off in the coastal jungles by the Saidor landing are being steadily driven into a shrinking pocket by Australian veterans of the Huon Peninsula who now are within 67 airline miles of their American Allies at Saidor.

Loaded Sailing Ships Of Axis Sunk, Rhodes Attacked

Cairo, Jan. 7 —(AP)— R.A.F. heavy bombers attacked the port of Rhodes, Nazi-held island in the eastern Mediterranean during Jan. 5-6, an Allied Middle East communique said today, and R.A.F. and American long-range fighters have sunk a number of loaded sailing ships, "a type of shipping on which the enemy is now forced largely to depend" in supplying the occupied Aegean islands.

The communique said that continuing bad weather made difficult the detection and destruction of enemy shipping in the Aegean, but two vessels were sunk during the several days' operations reported on and three others were set afire or left in a sinking condition.

Two Allied planes were missing from all operations.

Many Killed as Japs Ram, Machine-Gun Life Boats and Rafts

New Delhi, Jan. 7. (CP)—Survivors of an Allied merchantman torpedoed by a Japanese submarine said today that many of the crewmen were killed when the submersible began methodically ramming and machine-gunning lifeboats and rafts.

The 16 British and Indian survivors were afloat three days before reaching shore.

Nazis' Lack of Reserves Basic Factor for Their Total Defeat

By JAMES M. LONG
(AP Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 7—(AP)—Slowness of the German high command in hurling adequate reinforcements into the Polish border sector to plug the Russian breach in the Nazi eastwall underscores Germany's great weakness of 1944—a potential basic factor for her total defeat.

That weakness is a lack of sufficient reserves for her colossal problem of defence.

The whole Allied strategy as sealed at Teheran apparently is aimed at wresting victory through the exploitation of this factor by bringing maximum pressure simultaneously to bear on the greatest possible number of fronts.

As the hour nears for the great invasion from the west—anticipation of which is forcing the Germans to stand to arms in strength from Norway to Southern France—the success of that strategy already is being reflected in the east, where the rampant Red Army is smashing head-on through defences the Germans apparently fear to bolster at the cost of a cross-Europe shift of their thinned reserve force.

With 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 men under arms Germany is estimated by London military sources to have from 300 to 325 divisions in the field. Russian Premier Stalin has said that 257 divisions—207 of them German and the remainder satellite troops—are now facing the Red Army.

As the tide of battle shows, the Russians alone probably equal Germany's total number of men under arms, and clearly outnumber the Germans and their faltering satellites in divisions on the eastern front.

Two great trunklines across Poland — the Warsaw-Rovno-Berdichev and the Krakow-Lwow-Odessa railways — should have enabled the Germans to pour strong reinforcements direct into the battle zone had the reserve strength been available, or had the Germans been willing to send more men to the east.

PLASTER TARGETS IN WEST GERMANY FOR SIXTH NIGHT

Daylight Pounding Of Continent Begins Soon After Return Of Mosquitos

MINE ENEMY WATERS

London, Jan. 7 —(CP)— R.A.F. Mosquitos raided western Germany last night for the sixth night in succession and today American two-engined bombers, escorted by British, Dominion and American fighters, struck at military objectives in northern France, keeping the round-the-clock offensive rolling.

The mediums returned from their cross-channel sweeps in early afternoon without a single loss. The medium bombers were a part of the parade of Allied fighters and fighter-bombers observed streaking across toward the French coast shortly after the Mosquitos returned from their night raids.

The bombers skipped away without loss, an Air Ministry communique said.

The daylight pounding of the continent began soon after the return of the Mosquitos when the usual parade of fighters and fighter-bombers was observed starting across the Strait of Dover, soon followed by high-flying groups of medium bombers protected by fighters.

R.C.A.F. bombers during the night laid mines in enemy waters, all returning safely, Canadian headquarters said.

In addition to bombing objectives in Germany, the identity of which was not disclosed, the Mosquitos also stabbed at northern France and other R.A.F. planes laid mines.

Pass Over for Two Hours

Apparently a considerable number of the hard-hitting Mosquitos participated, for observers on the British southeast coast reported last night they had heard outward bound planes passing overhead for almost two hours.

The Mosquito raids were accompanied by air alerts in Geneva and other Swiss cities, the German-controlled Paris radio said.

Yesterday, the Air Ministry said, R.A.F. light and medium bombers teamed up with fighter-bombers to attack military objectives in northern France. The light and medium bombers were escorted by Allied fighters.

R.A.F., R.C.A.F. and Allied fighters also carried out supporting sweeps, the Ministry said.

From the daylight operations six Allied aircraft were reported missing. Three enemy planes were shot down.

SURVIVES RAMMING

North Sydney, N.S., Jan. 7—(CP)—The entire crew of a United Nations ship survived her sinking after she was rammed by another Allied vessel off Newfoundland New Year's night, it was disclosed here yesterday with the arrival of the lost ship's captain, eight officers and 43 crew members.

German Army May Be Forced to Leave Russia Says Stockholm Report

Stockholm, Jan. 7 —(AP)— A Berlin dispatch to the newspaper Svenska Morbonbladet today quoted a German military spokesman as saying there was a possibility of the German army being forced to withdraw entirely from Russia in the face of what he declared appeared to be a giant Soviet offensive along the whole front rom Leningrad to the Black Sea.

It was pointed out here, however, that the Nazis sometimes overemphasize their difficulties in order to claim an accomplishment against overwhelming odds in the event of a successful counterstroke.

It was noted also that the Germans are giving no immediate indication of withdrawing either from the Baltic front or from the Dnieper bend.

SIR LYMAN DUFF, CHIEF JUSTICE OF CANADA, RETIRES

On Eve of Retirement Was Guest of Earl of Athlone and Princess Alice

IN OFFICE 10 YEARS

Ottawa, Jan. 7 (CP)—Sir Lyman Duff, one of Canada's greatest jurists, automatically ceased to be Chief Justice of Canada today as he reached the age of 79.

His work at the Supreme Court of Canada was ended a few days ago when he put the finishing touches to some reasons for judgment in cases already heard. He spent today quietly at his home with his books.

Last night, on the eve of his retirement, Sir Lyman was the guest of the Earl of Athlone and Princess Alice at Government House.

During his more than 10 years in the highest judicial office in Canada, Sir Lyman has acted as Deputy to the Governor-General and served as administrator of the government during periods when the Governor-General was absent from Ottawa or during vacancies in that office.

Prime Minister Mackenzie King, Justice Minister St. Laurent, the other judges of the Supreme Court and legal figures attended the dinner.

An Inveterate Reader

A scholar whose interests range over wide fields unrelated to the law as well as a master of his own profession, the Chief Justice is an omnivorous reader and his friends expect he will devote still more time to reading during his retirement.

No appointment has yet been made of a new chief. Sir Lyman represented Alberta and British Columbia on the seven-man court and it is assumed that sooner or later a new judge will be appointed from the far west.

Senior among the present judges is Mr. Justice Thibaudeau Rinfret and, unless an outsider, is called in, to replace the Chief Justice, something which has rarely happened in the past, Mr. Justice Rinfret is expected to be the new chief.

Rumor, however, has frequently linked the name of Defence Minister Ralston with the Chief Justiceship. Col. Ralston in the intervals between his service in the cabinet held a distinguished place in the legal profession, first in Nova Scotia and later in Quebec and is regarded as an outstanding lawyer.

26 U.S. Aviation Cadets Killed As Train Hits Bus in Arizona

Kingman, Ariz., Jan. 7 (AP)—Twenty-six aviation cadets were killed last night when a Santa Fe railroad freight train collided with a bus carrying 36 airmen stationed at the Kingman army gunnery school here.

Two of the 10 victims were not expected to survive, air base Public Relations Office reported.

Preliminary information indicated the bus, which was returning the cadets from a night training mission on a gunnery range near the base, did not stop at the crossing.

60,000 Persons Reported Homeless At Port of Stettin

Stockholm, Jan. 7 —(AP)— The Morgon Tidningen reported today that 60,000 persons were left homeless at Stettin, Germany's largest Baltic port, as the result of Wednesday night's raid by the R.A.F. and R.C.A.F.

ROCKET PLANE DEVELOPED BY BRITAIN AND U.S.

Fighter Plane Uses 'Jet Propulsion' and Eliminates Propeller

MANY TESTS MADE

By KARL R. BAUMAN
Associated Press Staff Writer

Washington, Jan. 7 — (AP) — New vistas of rocket plane travel were opened today with the disclosure that a fighter plane using "jet propulsion" has been developed and pronounced a success.

The new plane was announced jointly last night by the R.A.F. and the United States Army Air Forces. It already has completed several hundred test flights without mishap, and quantity production will begin soon.

It uses engines designed and developed by Group Capt. Frank Whittle of the R.A.F., who as far back as 1939 was reported to be working with blower-type rotary compressors, the rotar bearing and the compressor being liquid cooled. The kind of fuel his engines use was not disclosed.

Next Logical Step

Today's planes of orthodox design have about reached their speed limits, and jet propulsion has been regarded by engineers as the logical next step.

Jet propulsion — commonly called rocket propulsion — eliminates the propeller. Instead of a propeller "biting" into the air to pull the plane forward, a series of power explosions push it forward.

Because of wartime secrecy, few details of the new British-American fighter can be expected until it has gone into actual combat, and its secrets are known to the enemy, but the formal announcement that the plane operates "at high altitudes and extreme speed," can be taken to mean that the United Nations have, in fact, a secret weapon. The only other detail announced was that it is a twin-engined plane.

Successful application of the jet propulsion principle to a fighter plane probably means that it can be applied to other planes, including bombers and passenger ships.

Rushed for Shelter

London, Jan 7 — (CP) — When one of the new British jet-propelled planes first flew over the outer London area in an experimental flight many people rushed to shelter, thinking that a heavy bomb was screaming down.

The mystery plane's arrival was heralded by a distant screech which grew in volume until it sounded like a giant whistling kettle. Then the rumble of its powerful engines was heard as the plane shot overhead.

Japanese Prison Camps Only Fair

By WILLIAM E. LOWELL
(AP Staff Writer)

Washington, Jan. 7—(AP)—International Red Cross authorities, reporting on the visits of its representatives to Japanese prisoner camps, today described conditions in them as "satisfactory."

The reports were made public today by Senator Elbert Thomas (Dem., Utah), chairman of a special United States Senate Committee on war prisoner treatment, to whom they were sent by War Secretary Henry Stimson.

"Undoubtedly," said the secretary, "the camps reported on are 'show' camps. Nevertheless, there is some comfort to be derived from the fact that at least a few of our men are faring no worse."

Conditions at the Hoten Manchukuo camp were reported in considerable detail.

ANGLO-AMERICAN 5TH ARMY PRESSES ITS OFFENSIVE

Troops Astride Road Leading From Casilina To Rome and Near To Cassino

BITTER FIGHTING

By RICHARD G. MASSOCK
Associated Press War Correspondent

Algiers, Jan. 7 — (AP) — With grenades, machine-guns and small arms American troops fought over the drenched stones of San Vittore and assailed three bitterly-contested strongpoints in the fortified village today as the Anglo-American 5th Army pressed its offensive all along the 10-mile front straddling the Via Casilina to Rome.

Forging ahead short distances through the snow-covered mountains, the Americans stormed the strong defences built by the Germans to cover the key town of Cassino, six miles ahead of San Vittore. They captured the 3,500-foot peak of Monte Maio about a mile southwest of Viticuso and five miles northwest of Venafro.

The seizure of Monte Maio under German artillery and mortar fire cut a German supply road from Cevaro to Viticuso.

The Americans who entered San Vittore from the northeast and southwest had taken more than half the town and now were driving on three clusters of grey tumbledown stone buildings where the Germans had barricaded themselves

Up Road Two Miles

San Vittore is about two miles up the road from the village of San Pietro captured by the Americans Dec. 18 after a fierce battle.

While the Americans fought from one pillbox-converted house to another, British troops on their southern half of the 10-mile front pushed an attack from Rocca D'Evendro, capturing 79 prisoners for a two-day total of 126.

Cold weather with snow falling in the mountains and dense clouds obscuring the mountain tops impeded the movement of the 8th Army on the Adriatic coastal front. Indian troops nevertheless made a short advance west of San Tommaso.

The weather grounded most Allied aircraft, but dive-bombers and fighters attacked German gun positions and troop concentrations in the Cervaro and Quino areas just behind the enemy on the 5th Army front, and shot up the town of Fondi, northeast of Magnaino as well as motor convoys and trains east of Rome.

Intercepting 20 German planes over central Italy, Spitfires destroyed two for the only score of the day against enemy aircraft. No Allied planes were lost yesterday.

Germans Have Had Great Respect For "International Army" in Italy

With the 5th Army in Italy, Jan. 7 — (AP) — High in the snow-covered peaks of the Apennines the Germans have learned to respect and fear one of the most unusual fighting units assembled in this war.

It is a specially trained force of Canadians and Americans welded into the North American Continent's first "International Army" which was brought to Italy to aid in the Allied drive against Nazi defences along the road to Rome.

Recently the enemy has learned to know the members of this unit well for their endurance, daring and courage in storming mountains which some thought were impossible to capture.

So far as these troops are concerned, international boundaries have been obliterated. It makes no difference whether a man is from Ottawa or Washington, Toronto or Toledo, Montreal or Mobile — they work, play and fight together as one team.

That was the idea behind the organization of this special unit.

"It is one for all and all for one in this outfit," said Maj. Tom Cassidy of St. Louis, Mo., a former University of Kentucky football star.

"As long as a man is a good officer or soldier we don't care whether he is a Canadian or American," he added. "We have American troops under Canadian officers and Canadian troops under American officers."

A patrol from a unit led by Capt. Stewart L. Dymond, a Canadian living in Helena, Mont., encountered a group of Germans on a rocky mountain ledge. The Germans had the advantage because they were on the upper slope. Somehow a lone soldier became separated from his comrades and was only a few yards from the enemy who called to him in English, Polish, German and Italian ordering him to surrender.

Shouting defiance the youth hurled a hand grenade and killed six of the seven enemy troops. But the seventh German opened fire with a machine pistol and wounded the American in the back as he crouched in a rocky niche.

Sgt. Lindsay Scharfe of Renfrew, Ont., saw his comrade's prediction.

"I'm going after him," Scharfe said.

And although he was in the line of fire, Scharfe crawled out and dragged his American friend to safety, enabling the first-aid men to get him quickly to the doctors who said the wounded man had a good chance to live.

Four Rail Hubs Within Striking Distance of Reds

Vinnitsa, Zhmerinka, Rowna, Shepetovka Main Junctions for Enemy in Ukraine

HINT NAZI WITHDRAWAL

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Jan. 7—(AP)—Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's forces, gaining new momentum after smashing 10 miles into Poland, sped forward today in a great fan-shaped offensive toward lifelines vital to enemy operations in the Ukraine and Dnieper bend.

The Nazis appeared unable to halt the Russian machine.

Over a front of 175 miles from the lower Pripet marshes near Rakinto, 10 miles inside the Polish border, to the flat steppe near Zhashkov, 40 miles south of Belaya Tserkov, the first Ukrainian Army was ripping the Germans to pieces and capturing huge stores of booty.

To the north, in the Nevel sector, Gen. Ivan Bagramian's growing Baltic offensive swept deep into strong cores of resistance where the German spectre of encirclement was the same as in the Ukraine.

Snowfalls Aid Reds

Snowfalls and blizzards were an aid to advance patrols cutting behind Nazi lines and threatening the communications of the German forces before Leningrad, just as Vatutin's fast tanks and cavalry were a peril to the Germans' main lines leading to the Dnieper and the Black Sea.

Vatutin's advance brought increased pressure on the Germans in Krovograd and Krivoi Rog in the Dnieper bend, but there were few specific reports from those sectors.

(Stockholm newspapers quoted a German military spokesman as hinting at the possibility of German withdrawal from all Russia, possibly because of the threat of encirclement both in the north and south now that the German northern and southern armies have been split.)

Four Communication Centres

Four communication centres lay within striking distance of Vatutin's Red forces:

Rovno is about 35 miles inside the Polish border and 60 miles west of Novograd Volynski. Both the Warsaw-Kiev highway and the Warsaw railway pass through here.

Shepetovka, 35 miles southwest of Novograd Volynski, one of the Ukraine's most important railway junctions.

Vinnitsa, 70 miles south of Zhitomir and 60 miles from the Dniester, former boundary of Rumania.

Zhmerinka, 20 miles south of Vinnitsa on the Odessa-Warsaw line which the Germans must hold if they hope to remain any place east of Odessa.

Japanese Hold 1896 Navy Men

London, (CP)—A. V. Alexander, First Lord of the Admiralty, told the House of Commons the number of naval officers and ratings known to be Japanese prisoners of war is 189 and 1,707 respectively.

"The foreign officer, after consultation with the Admiralty and acting on behalf of the United Kingdom and the Dominion governments has made strong representations to the protecting power protesting against the failure of the Japanese government to furnish complete lists of prisoners of war and of those who had died in captivity", Mr. Alexander said

240 Fighting Vehicles Turned Out Daily For Armed Forces

Ottawa, Jan. 7—(CP)—The Ford Motor Co. plant at Windsor, Ont., is turning out 240 fighting vehicles a day for the armed forces of the United Nations, it was disclosed here today by a company official.

W. H. Clark, Ford personnel manager, appeared before the National War Labor Board to present the company's opposition to a vacation-with-pay plan, subsequently ordered by the board to be instituted.

He said the plan to give hourly-rated employees with a year or more of senority an annual one-week holiday would result in loss of 400,000 man-hours, equivalent to closing the plant for five working days.

This, he said, would result in loss of 1,200 fighting vehicles for the fighting forces.

Belleville Hospital In Approved List

The Belleville General Hospital is included in the recently released list of hospitals published by the American College of Surgeons, which shows full and provisional approval by the College for the year 1943, as revealed through the annual survey, which was concluded in December.

The list of approved hospitals in the United States and Canada was officially released at the annual meeting of the Board of Regents of the American College of Surgeons, which was held recently. The lisitng indicates hospitals of 25 beds and over which have complied satisfactorily with the minimum requirements that assure the best care of the sick and injured.

The American College of Surgeons, representing some 14,000 leading physicians in the United States, Canada, and other countries, carries on extensive work each year in improving hospital service. 3,253 approved hospitals in Canada and the United States is an increase of 264 over the total approved a year ago.

In making the announcement, Dr. Irvin Abell of Louisville, chairman of the Board of Regents, said that during the past two war years have seen the hospitals and doctors score a major triumph over disease and death that would, formerly, have meant epidemics and a rising mortality rate. Instead the death rate in 1942 reached an all-time low of 9.7 in Canada, and the indications are that in 1943 the rate was even lower.

Sixty-three Ontario hospitals appear on the approved and provisionally approved list, 32 are owned by the community, 12 by the city, 16 by churches, two Dominion hospitals and one private hospital, and represent a total capacity of 18,438 beds.

Smash and Grab Robbers Foiled In Theft Attempt

Smash and grab robbers were foiled in attempt to steal jewelry from the store window at McCurdy's jewelry store, 324 Front Street, late Thursday night, when the north show window was shattered, apparently after being struck by a stone.

The report of the shattering of the window was heard by nearby apartment dwellers and police immediately notified. Constables Rathwell and Carruthers hastened to the scene but no signs of the robbers were in evidence. Subsequent investigations revealed the north show window had been struck at jewelry display level, with what is believed to have been a large rock, as a small portion of rock formation was found at the store entrance among the shattered glass and debris.

The show window was shattered from top to bottom and a large four-foot section of the glass fell out.

"It appeared as though the would-be robbers were attempting to make a small hole in the window, sufficient to reach into and grab some jewelry and beat a hasty retreat. However when the window completely cracked and the large section fell out doubtless making a loud noise, the culprits became frightened and ran away", police reported at headquarters as a suggestion to solving the matter. There are large rocks and stones in an alleyway immediately north of the jewelry store.

Mr. McCurdy was notified of the attempt and later checked the jewelry display in his store window reporting that nothing had been taken.

Prompt Return Of Labor Survey Asked by Office

Prompt filling in and return of special forms regarding the survey of employment in industry being taken by the Department of Labor, is urged by Mr. H. H. Reed, of the local National Selective Service, through whose office the survey is being made in the Belleville district. The forms are now all in the hands of district employers with some having been received back at the office.

Instituted in order to secure comprehensive data on the distribution of employment as of the first week in the new year, the survey is being conducted along similar lines to that made one year ago. Employers will be required to report on the number of their employees, separated as to male and female and grouped in age classes.

Also, employers will be asked for an estimate on the number of employees they will require as at June 30th next. In manufacturing and in construction, employers are asked to separate their totals to show the numbers engaged in war work and the numbers engaged in civilian production or in civilian services.

Although the forms are as simple as they can possibly be made with a view of the detailed information required by the Department of Labor, inaccuracies are being noted in sheets already returned to the district office. In view of this fact, Mr. Reed intimates that every co-operation will be given district employers that the forms may be correctly filled out. In all there are 821 employers who will be required to fill the forms in the Belleville district, it was stated.

According to Mr. A. MacNamara, Director of National Selective Service, the information to be received through the forms is very essential in connection with manpower plans. The data secured one year ago was of substantial assistance in helping through labor shortages in 1943, while in view of present employment conditions, the reports this year are expected to be even more necessary than one year ago.

Employers in agriculture, private homes employing domestic servants and governments in respect to their regular employees will not be required to report, it was stated.

BOMB WAR SEEN AS BIG PROBLEM FOR GERMANS

Swedish Correspondent Says Executions for Flagging Morale Terrify Germans

Stockholm, Jan. 7—(AP)—Signs of flagging morale in Germany have brought a wave of death sentences, making it impossible for any group to organize a revolution, Christer Jaederlund, Berlin correspondent of Tidningen, said in a dispatch today.

"A collapse of the home front could be precipitated by doubt as to whether to go on fighting, but today doubters are punished by death," he wrote.

Numerous executions in recent months, Jaederlund said, have frightened the Germans, quieted defeatist talk and made the people suspicious of one another.

To overthrow the Nazis, the correspondent added, "A real revolution must be organized, but the German people have been stripped of all possibilities to organize a revolt by the all-powerful Himmler organization."

Jaederlund said there is no danger of a food shortage and wrote that German officials say the Allies' total bomb war against the Reich now is the biggest home front as well as military problem.

He indicated in his story, phrased carefully because he still is working in Berlin, that there is a question how much additional bombing the Germans can stand, especially during the winter months. He said that thus far Berliners have stood up under the attacks.

He told how Hamburg had been able to resume production within a few weeks after it had been practically knocked out in August. Workers were ordered to return under threat of being deprived of any place to live in the Reich.

Flying Boat Crew Rescued After 3½ Days in Dinghies

With the R.C.A.F., Overseas, Jan. 7.—(CP)— The R.C.A.F. revealed today the rescue of the entire 12-man crew of an R.C.A.F. Sunderland flying boat of the coastal command after they had spent 3 1-2 days in rubber dinghies, tossed around on a rough sea with barely enough rations to keep them alive.

The men had taken to the dinghies after their aircraft crashed into the Bay of Biscay during an anti-submarine patrol.

The R.C.A.F. said major factor contributing to their rescue was twelve "Mae Wests" which the crew tied together and trailed in a long line astern of their two dinghies to increase their chances of being sighted from the air. A United States Liberator spotted them and called an R.A.F. Sunderland to the rescue

Before landing on the rough ocean, the rescue plane jettisoned its depth charges and dropped an emergency kit. Sharks, stirred by the depth-charge explosions, kept circling the dinghies and even followed Flt. Lt. J. A. De Le Paulle, of Washington, D.C., skipper of the wrecked flying boat, when he swam out to get the ration kit.

Another American in the crew was the second pilot, while five Canadian and five Englishmen completed the line-up.

The Canadian survivors, all uninjured, were Flt. Sgt. D. J. Wells, Raymond, Alta., third pilot; FO. Alexander Bolton, Ardill, Sask., first navigator; WO2 A. W. T. Joyce of Hamilton, second navig or; R. D. Hiscox of Hamilton, wireless operator-air gunner.

Two huge storage tanks, one containing aviation gasoline and the other oil for ice breakers, received direct hits and were still burning when he left Stettin earlier today, this traveller related. He said that fires broke out in five anchored merchant ships.

The newspaper Morgon Tidningen had reported earlier that 60,000 persons were left homeless.

ITALIAN SOLDIERS FIGHTING WITH THE ALLIES IN THEIR HOMELAND

Italian soldiers are pictured above in their new role as co-belligerents. This is one of the Italian units now standing beside the Allies in the fight to clear the Germans from Italian soil. The Italians are handling their guns into position before going into action.

Another photograph of Italian soldiers who are now fighting on the side of the Allies against the Axis. A battery commander is shown with some of his brother officers.

VETERAN SAGUENAY RESTS AS A TRAINING SHIP

Battered veteran of the convoy lanes, H.M.C.S. Saguenay is now serving as a training ship. She survived a German torpedo that wrecked her bows, a collision which detonated her depth charges and blew off her stern and rode out a week-long hurricane, the worst the Atlantic had seen in decades. The shattered remains of her stern only a foot or two out of the water, Saguenay was towed home after a collision with a freighter on a dark, foggy night off the coast of Newfoundland. Already patched many times, she has been converted to a training ship.

INDIAN FLYER

Leading Aircraftman Rajinder Singh Sandhu, Pakho Pur, India, has his parachute locked securely and is all set for a training hop in his Harvard plane at an air school near Weyburn, Sask. A good Sikh, Leading Aircraftman Sandhu never shaves or gets his hair cut, but usually washes it daily before doing it up in the traditional turban of his religious group.

RCNS Saguenay Serves As Training Ship After Long Career in Service

Ottawa, Jan. 7—(CP)—Battered veteran of some of the most exciting incidents of naval warfare, the old destroyer Saguenay rides at anchor in an East Coast Canadian port and serves as a training ship for new recruits to the Royal Canadian Navy.

Once often in the news, the Saguenay dropped from sight after her last bit of tough luck about a year ago and naval service headquarters revealed today her present status and details of her wartime career.

The Saguenay, although one of Canada's oldest fighting ships, is not old in years but only in service and hard knocks. Her steaming days are over but as youngsters in the navy tread her decks and learn the ways of the sea they occasionally encounter old-timers who know her story and say, "She always was a lady and always will be"—high praise from a sailor for any ship.

Here are some of the highlights of the Saguenay's career:

1930—Sailed for Canada with Commander (now Vice-Admiral) Percy Nelles in command and accompanied by her sister ship, The Skeena.

1932—In West Indies cruise with Royal Navy ships.

1936—Sailed to Boulogne with the Vimy pilgrimage.

1937—Sailed to Britain for the coronation of King George VI.

1939—With Skeena, met the King's ship when he and Queen Elizabeth visited Canada and later escorted Skeena when that destroyer carried Their Majesties to Prince Edward Island.

1939—Sailed with the first wartime convoy to cross the Atlantic and later joined the Caribbean Sea patrol.

1939—With British cruiser Orion blocked Yucatan Channel and prevented the German ship Emmy Frederick from getting away from a Mexican port. The German ship was scuttled.

1939—Shifted to North Atlantic patrol.

1940—Picked up 31 survivors of a torpedoed Norwegian merchant ship.

1940 (November)—Hit by a torpedo which wrecked bows and started a fire, reached Britain badly limping after feats of seamanship which won the O.B.E. for her commander, Capt. G. R. Miles of Rothesay, N.B.

1941 (May)—Back on duty and helped hunt down German battleship Bismarck, serving as screen for British battleships which brought Bismarck to bay and led to its sinking.

1941 (June)—Served in escort for battleship Prince of Wales when it carried Prime Minister Winston Churchill home from the Atlantic conference with President Roosevelt.

1942 (December)—After repairs and seven months more of convoy duty, had stern sliced off in collision with a merchant ship. Collision set off depth charges on Saguenay's deck and explosion sank the merchant ship but Saguenay survived and reached port for the second time with a gaping hole.

Communities Honor Private Don Bleecker

Marsh Hill — On Christmas Eve Dec. 24th. 1943, the two communities Marsh Hill and Sidney, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. B. Bleecker to spend a social time with their son Don ere he left for his training as a soldier.

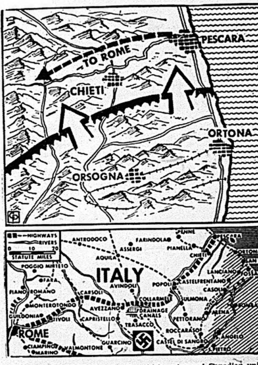
Mr. W. Rogers was chairman of the evening's program. An address written in honor of Don's decision to serve his King and Country was read thanking him for his willingness to help at any social event of the community by playing on his guitar. On behalf of his many friends he was presented with a beautiful service wristwatch. An address from the Baptist Young People's Union was also read and a Waterman's fountain pen and pencil set was presented to Don by the members in appreciation of his services at the meetings and in remembrance of his friends in the B.Y.P.U Mr. C. Marsette, Mr. B. Mitts, Mr. F. Campbell, Mr. W. Rogers and Col. Vanderwater were called upon for speeches which they made most capably. Mr. Bleecker thanked the community and the Young People for their thoughtful gifts and kind words Don favored the gathering with two guitar selections which closed the program. Mrs. Bleecker served a lunch after which everyone departed wishing Don much success and a safe return home when the war is over.

Don is now stationed at the east coast.

HOUSE CLEARING IN ORTONA

Corporal "Smoky" Atkinson, of Goodfair, Alta., and Private W. L. Squires, of Peace River, Alta., are shown moving down a street in Ortona, Italy, during the Eighth Army house-to-house clearing operations in that city after eight days of bitter street fighting.

AXIS STRONGHOLD TOTTERS



This close-up of the terrain in which advanced Canadian units of the Eighth Army have been battling one of Italy's worst winter storms, as well as the stubborn enemy, gives some idea of the physical handicaps that have been faced in the slow drive to Pescara. The story of Ortona's "last stand" battle already has joined the war's classics and the fight against Pescara, Axis Adriatic stronghold, has been waged midst a furious off-sea storm. Pescara stands on the road to Rome.

Doctors Discover Surface Treatment For Bad Burns

Washington, Jan. 7 —(AP)—Two United States navy doctors took a tip from Mother Nature and developed a new surface treatment for burns which they said today is better than any of the "many methods in vogue during the past two years." It involves application of a medicated solution of human blood plasma directly to the surface of the burn.

Cmdr. Melvin D. Abbott and Lieut. John R. Gepfert reported the treatment in the naval medical bulletin.

The doctors said they took some donated human plasma (to provide the serum needed) and added to it a five per cent solution of sulfanilamide, a potent killer of bacteria. A thickening substance was added to make the solution easy to apply to the surface of burns.

They applied a thick layer of the material to 12 second-degree burns and said the average time of healing was five days, and "the results were very definitely better than those obtained by the use of any one of the many methods in vogue during the past two years."

Says Mandated Isles In Pacific Should Be Retained by U.S.

Los Angeles, Jan. 7 —(AP)—Senator Albert B. Chandler (Dem. Ky.) says the United States should retain all mandated Pacific islands after the war.

"We are taking those islands now at the cost of many American lives," he told the Democratic Luncheon Club yesterday, "and it would be absolute cruelty to give them up after the war only to be forced to retake them with further loss of lives at another date."

The War Today—

Paper Advances Idea Poland Expand Westward Into Germany

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
Associated Press War Analyst

The newspaper "Prefree Poland," published in Moscow, calls for postwar expansion of Poland westward at the expense of Germany, and warns the Poles that Russia won't give up the Polish territory which the Soviet occupied in 1939 when Hitler began his effort to conquer the world.

The Moscow dispatch which reports this development doesn't identify "Prefree Poland," but the publication may be associated with a Polish organization having the approval of the Soviet government. In any event, we are safe in assuming that the paper wouldn't be permitted to print such an article if it was disapproved by the Red authorities.

Daring Idea

"Prefree Poland" has been daring. The idea which it advances is sensational and, from some viewpoints, undoubtedly provocative. Still, it strikes me that publication of this bold suggestion may help ease the tense Russo-Polish situation and so brighten the councils of the big three —Russia, Britain and the United States.

So far as my advices go, there are many people high in Allied circles who definitely would like to see Germany split up into its component states after the war. My guess is that Russia, for one, would be content with such a program. It isnt a far reach from this to "Prefree Poland's" advocacy that some portion of the Reich go to Poland.

After all, who weeps at the thought of Germany paying for some of her crimes?

What's the Alternative

Unless Moscow unexpectedly changes its position, Poland must look to the Reich for territorial compensation. The Soviet government has time and again, right up to the present, made it emphatically clear that in its view the Russo-Polish frontier is the 1939 line, and that Poland won't get that eastern territory back.

What's the alternative to acceptance of Moscow's claim? There's no use mincing words: All the signs read that any effort to compel Russia to surrender the disputed area would precipitate another war.

"Subs" Go Home to Mother

(By Lieut. W. E. Stanton Hope, R.N.V.R., in London, Eng., Evening News.)

Not many civilians have set eyes on H.M.S. Miraculous. Fewer still have trodden her decks and been initiated into the secrets of her many and varied compartments.

If you saw this naval wonder without her Apache war-paint, stripped of all camouflage and armament, you might believe her to be a fair-sized modern liner; but she is a floating factory, repair works, arsenal, victualing store, fueling station, hostel and West End club all combined.

For the Miraculous — her real name is taboo—is the mother ship of our submarines that operates in northern seas. She sends them out on patrol refreshed and welcomes them home to receive devoted care and bounty.

During a recent spell of rough weather I reached the remote haven where she lay at anchor and, specially privileged, went aboard to spend two or three days among ceaseless activities vital to the maintenance of a submarine flotilla. Some submarines were ranged alongside and I recognized vessels whose outstanding exploits have received Admiralty mention.

A fabulous Gargantua in barbaric warpaint, the parent ship loomed above a brood displaying bizarre patterns of mauve, blue, green and black. White Ensigns fluttered from gilt-crowned staffs and several commissioning pennants added splashes of red and white. A peacock-blue torpedo swung down on a derrick chain into a gaping hatchway. Coiled ropes, bulging kit-bags, crates of fresh eggs and sacks of sprouts and potatoes were piled on lean decks in picturesque confusion.

The crew were as busy as ants, painting, repairing and stowing ammunition and stores. A Cockney wag among them picked up a four-inch shell and an egg and made pretense to imitate a music-hall juggler.

"Here! You be careful of that egg, Nobby!" growled an unappreciative P.O. Then, asked by the irate petty officer what work he was supposed to be doing, the cockney jerked a thumb toward the suspended torpedo and answered "I'm going to help pack that sardine in the tin."

Hundreds of officers and men live and work aboard the Miraculous, including a considerable proportion of technical experts. Entire submarines' crews and a complete spare crew in reserve are also accommodated. Nor must I forget the ubiquitous Wrens—thirty of them—apparently selected for brains and beauty—to whom confidential books and telephone switchboards hold no mysteries. They voyage to the Miraculous every day from a bleak shore, where a stone house provides their secluded home.

The Miraculous at her anchorage is connected by telephone with naval shore bases. In common with all big warships, she has an elaborate system of microphones and loudspeakers to convey orders and announcements to the workshops and mess-decks.

Accompanied by an engineer officer, I made a tour of the wondership where miracles of ingenuity are performed daily to refit submarines for sea.

Our tour consisted of a series of factory visits, all between decks in the same ship with only bulkheads between them. The woodworking shop was equipped with planing machines, bandsaws and mortising machines; the paint store had a mechanical mixer. Replacements and repairs were being made by a scientific staff in the tool and instrument room, and in the plate shop a huge electrically driven shearing machine was cutting one-inch steel like cardboard.

Torpedoes are temperamental beasts, and their delicate nerve systems need careful overhauling at times. We went to the immense "fish" hold, officially called the torpedo parting room, where some technical experts were stripping, repairing and assembling torpedoes. Others were compressing air as motive power for the marvellous little engines.

Torpedo tubes are kept flooded when a submarine is at sea and in former days many "fish" were returned to depot covered in red rust; hence the old navyman's name of "mouldies" for them. Each has twin propellers which revolve in different directions to prevent the torpedo rolling on its course after being fired from the tube.

With the R.N.V.R. padre, I visited the sick bay and operating theatre and the little shipboard church which can accommodate a congregation of forty. A few days earlier he had baptized a baby of one of the ratings, using the ship's bell for a font.

Promises 24-Hour 'Bombing Service' From Every Side

Fort Worth, Tex., Jan. 7—(AP)—Berlin has been three-fourths destroyed "and we haven't called off the dogs yet," said United States Army Air Forces Chief Gen. Henry H. Arnold, in an interview here last night.

The Germans "know they've got to stop us or they've lost the war," he said. "They've tried the orthodox methods and they're springing something new all the time. So far we've been lucky enough to outguess them".

He added:—

"In conjunction with the R.A.F., we expect to give Germany 24-hour 'bombing service' from 360 degrees. If our bombers keep going into Germany, it won't take long. There won't be much fight left when the

ACE U. S. FLIER REPORTED MISSING

The 31-year-old former "Flying Tiger" joined Marine Maj. Joe Foss and Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, of First Great War fame, as co-holder of the 26-plane record of aerial "kills" for U. S. fliers. He did it in a sweep over New Britain four days ago.

RUSSIANS CELEBRATE CHRISTMAS

Moscow, Jan. 7 — (AP) — Candle-lit Christmas trees sparkled in Russian homes today and church worshippers turned out in greater numbers than any time since 1917 as Russians celebrated their orthodox Christmas 15 days after its observance in the western world.

Except for the special church services, however, the Soviets put in a war-time working day as usual, with no provision being made for a civil holiday, and the munitions factories turned out their usual quotas.

"Decisive Actions" in 1944

American lend-lease aid to the United Nations, now standing over eighteen billions, is given credit by President Roosevelt for increasing the military strength of the Allies so that they are able and will be able to build up powerful offensives. He foresees a momentous year in 1944 of "decisive actions."

The fact that lend-lease aid has latterly been lessening in its flow is a good indication that the striking strength of the United Nations is soon to be reached in the test that will flatten the Axis.

Mr. Roosevelt brought out the interesting facts that the lend-lease aid to Russia was 63 per cent greater in the first ten months of 1943 over all of 1942, and fifty-six per cent of the export value of the aid being in aircraft, ordnance and other munitions. In October nearly 77,000 planes were sent to Russia, more than any other lend-lease country, more than 3,500 tanks and 195,000 motor vehicles.

How this has been turned into victories in Russia is indicated in the Russian advances in White Russia and the Ukraine.

Russia, according to the President's statement, got $3,550,000,000 and the the United Kingdom $5,980,000,000 up to October.

Crossing the Border

When the Germans crossed the border into Russia two years ago last June Hitler's oracles and newspapers did not think that it could be possible within two and a half years that the Huns would be reeling back across the Polish border with mighty Russian forces following and the Russian armies along the long front in a surge of movement menacing the German lines.

The two border crossings of 1941 and 1944 were different. Russia was not ready in 1941 for the treacherous blow from Germany and she had to use her strategy to gain time with what success she has shown. Hitler was at his most powerful state as he crossed into Russia and he believed Russia would soon collapse. But Premier Stalin of Russia knew that he had reserves of power, men, women and Russian spirit and strategy, and that he had a great country in which to outmanoeuvre and defeat the Nazi aggression.

Hitler's Huns crossed the border in the days of his greatest strength. When Stalin's forces in Vatutin's army cross in January 1944, the Russians have the offensive. The Russians are triumphant with a long series of victories and the Hun army is being forced back nearer and nearer to home. Russia has the power to go on now after dealing blows that have caused the Germans very heavy losses. Hitler's men are in retreat after what looked to Hitler a couple of years ago like a permanent residence in Russia.

The times have changed. Defeats have knocked at Germany for more than a year, defeats from which there has been no recovery for the Germans. The forward march of the Germans in 1941 was temporary, that of the Russians is to advance firmly the United Nations' power to hem in Hitler and then crush him.

Germany which spread out like a floodgate upon most of the surrounding countries of Europe is now drying up again. After nearly fifty-three months of war Hitler has nothing secure. His gains, made at the expense of surrounding nations, will this year collapse like a house of cards when the Allies hammer blows relentlessly on Hitler's militarism. The tide is mounting, waves of Allied airmen shatter the Hitler citadel, the Russian forces are clambering over the eastern walls of the German "fortress" built on crime, atrocities and injustice, while Allied armies strike up through Italy and Germany dreads invasion by Anglo-American armies and airmen.

The United Nations are at or near the gates of Hunland. Now all roads and ways converge, land roads, air ways and sea lanes, ready to bear the traffic of the legions of the United Nations. No Attila, Tamerlaine or Genghis Khan ever saw such potent military power and such united spirit threatening them—and they fell—as that which points the dagger at Hitler and Berlin.

The Russian advances and other steps point that way. All roads now lead to Berlin. Hitler cannot run out on the world. All for which the Allies have struggled, fought and labored will come to pass, the great Allied leaders believe, this year.

To Thaw That Frozen Pipe

(Ottawa Journal)

There are several ways of thawing frozen pipes, and each of them has its points.

Some like a blow-torch for the job. This projects a blistering flame which can play hob with the core of ice in a pipe. Of course there is a reasonable chance that the house will be burned down, but this is a risk which doesn't deter the blow-torch fan for a minute. And, if the house burns, it can be assumed that the pipes are thawed.

Another school of thought goes in for burning newspapers under the pipe. This too is not without dangers. One man tried it the other day, and as a result a big house was badly damaged in the ensuing blaze, ten persons were turned out of the homes at 20 below, and a fireman was injured. As the fire was put out before the building was ruined it cannot be assumed in this case that the ice-block in the pipe was melted, but it was a noble attempt.

Still others, perhaps less adventurous, just call the Waterworks people and calmly divest themselves of personal responsibility. Waterworks never yet has burned down a house while thawing a pipe, but for its prosiac service there is a small fee.

Fire Chief Cal Burnett does not approve of the blow-torch and lighted-paper methods—in fact he disapproves highly of them because so often they start fires he has to put out. He recommends wrapping cloths about the frozen part of the pipe, if the block can be located, and pouring boiling water over the rags. The cloth retains the heat long enough to work on the pipe and if the strategic spot has been located the blockade presently will be lifted.

But neither has this method any spice of danger. Hot water can't set fire to a house, even on the coldest day.

Bend Down to Cough

(By Samuel F. Harby, in "Hygiea")

Whenever you feel a cough or sneeze coming on, turn your head away from other people, and cough down at the floor. The thousands of small drops of saliva which escape from your mouth as you cough are thus thrown down at the floor, where they have little chance of getting on your associates, and especially into their mouths, to cause respiratory infections.

You have been taught to place your hand over your mouth when you cough or sneeze, but even if you were able to cover your mouth completely with your hand, so that no droplets or spray could get by it, you would still fail to protect your associates from your germs, because your hand become soiled when you cough on it, and almost immediately afterward you touch other people or the things which they will touch. Thus, indirectly, germs are transferred from your mouth to someone else's mouth—or what happens more frequently—to someone else's hand, food, eating utensil or other object which will eventually reach his mouth.

Besides, you cannot cover up a cough or sneeze completely.

Spreading saliva, and thereby spreading germs, is responsible for the transmission of some of the most deadly diseases known to mankind: Common colds, tuberculosis, influenza, pneumonia, diphtheria, whooping cough, infantile paralysis, smallpox, scarlet fever, mumps, measles, meningitis—and others.

JUST FOLKS

BETRAYED HERITAGE

My grandpa had a way with things,
Lived on familiar terms with springs,
Knew cogs and gears and bolts and screws
And all the tools which humans use;
And did my grandma need a shelf
My grandpa put it up himself.
As good a job, he made it, too.
As any carpenter could do.

Now this I cite of history
To prove there's useful blood in me.
By all the biologic rules
I should an adept be with tools.
By birth and by environment.
Mechanics should have been my bent,
But all my grandpa learned with ease
To me are deep, dark mysteries.

'I do not know why wheels go round
Or faucets leak or steam pipes pound.
When things go wrong about I stand
And lend advice, but never a hand.
'Neath bursted pipes I place a pan
And tell the folks to "get a man!"
No use at all! I'm much afraid
My handy grandpa I've betrayed.

THAT BODY OF YOURS

JAMES W. BARTON, M.D.

Pain and Symptoms After Removal of Appendix

The story is told of a man with his hand badly injured by a machine who while the surgeon was repairing it, asked if he would be able to play the piano after hand was healed. The surgeon assured him he would certainly be able to play the piano without any difficulty. "That's great" said the patient "because I never could play it before".

It would seem that many individuals who undergo operation for ulcer of stomach or intestine, removal of gall bladder or appendix, believe that operation will actually remove symptoms of any kind anywhere in the body. While there is always a chance that a patient may recover from attacks of appendicitis, gall stone colic, and hemorrhage from a stomach ulcer, nevertheless in the great majority of cases operation is justified to save life or make life more comfortable.

On the other hand, Drs. George J. Willaner and James F. O'Neill, Philadelphia, in American Journal of Medical Sciences state their findings in following up the records of 375 cases operated upon for pain in the right lower part of abdomen (appendix region). From these findings they advise "healthy scepticism" in condemning the appendix and advising its removal.

Of the 375 cases, 264 or about 70 per cent were completely cured of any symptoms that had been present before operation and a total of 348 or about 93 per cent were either completely or partially relieved of pain. The remaining 27 patients, about 7 per cent, had exactly the same pain after operation.

What about the 27 patients who were not relieved of pain or other symptom by removal of appendix?

"Two thirds of these individuals are women with a definite history of irregular menstration suggesting some gland disturbance. Some are constipated or complain of lack of appetite, belching, bloating, and indigestion". Others showed symptoms caused by lack of vitamins, particularly vitamin B complex. This lack of vitamins is known to affect the movements of stomach and intestine which could cause symptoms resembling appendicitis.

The thought then is that while operation should be performed immediately where acute appendix symptoms are present, the physician should make a complete examination and tests in what is called chronic appendicitis before advising operation.

The lonely folk, the aged long-neglected
A kindness often may from care
beguile.

So seeds of kindness let us daily scatter,
A bounteous harvest we shall surely get Assured that in the glad and bright hereafter
No pain will linger nor a deep regret.

Son's Song-Hit Earns $50,000

(Walter Winchell in The New York Mirror)

The current song hit, "Paper Doll," was written in 1922 by Johnny Black. He first played it for a publisher as his pet canary chirped along, perched on Johnny's shoulder .. E. B. Marks was so impressed he bought the ditty. "Any tune is simple," he said, "that a bird can whistle should be a sensation." .. But for some reason or other Mr. Marks never really plugged it and it perished .. Johnny Black died soon after .. The Mills Bros. heard a small-time cafe singer offer it this year . . . But the Marks firm had run out of copies and none could be found . . . Until Tommy Lyman located an old copy in his trunk. .. The Mills freres then made a Decca recording of it, and "Paper Doll" was reborn. .. Over a million platters have been peddled to date plus 700,000 or more song copies .. Mr. Marks then had to search for the author's survivors to pay the royalties. .. He finally located Johnny's father living on an old "Tobacco Road" farm. .. The 82-year-old father of Johnny Black, who died young and penniless, will realize $50,000 in royalties from "Paper Doll" which his boy wrote 21 years ago.

Washington Spotlight

By C. R. BLACKBURN
(Canadian Press Staff Writer.)

Washington, Jan. 7 (CP)—Senators and Representatives come back to Capitol Hill Monday for the second session of the 78th Congress—a session that promises to be charged with historical portent and bright with forensic fireworks.

This is a presidential election year and already the two Houses of Congress have heard strange interchanges as members use them as sounding boards for political ambitions.

Members re-assemble as the country enters upon what leaders agree may be the crucial year of the war.

But under the constitution Americans must elect a new President and a large section of Congress this year and that means that the game of politics must be played even amid such tragedy and horror as this unprecedented war has brought to the whole world.

Busy session: President Roosevelt will send or take a message to Congress asking for what the administration wants in the way of legislation but both Houses have enough measures before them to provide plenty of work.

An outstanding problem yet to be settled is the setting up of machinery to provide an opportunity for some 10,000,000 Americans in uniform, many of them scattered throughout the world, to vote in next November's elections.

Civil aviation: Pennsylvania-Central Air Lines' application to the Civil Aeronautics Board for permission to extend its Washington-Buffalo service through Rochester to Ottawa is at the foot of a long list of extension applications the company has made, also an application for permission to build three great floating seadromes at intervals of 800 miles across the Atlantic. But the proposal to connect the two capitals by air may get earliest consideration.

Why This Hostility to Roosevelt?

(An Editorial in the Midland Free Press)

Canadians find it difficult to unstand the strong prejudice against President Franklin D. Roosevelt on the part of great numbers of Americans.

To us he has been one of the war heroes. From the outset of the war in 1939 he displayed a keen appreciation of the real issues at stake. He succeeded in securing the repeal of the absurd American neutrality law which made no distinction between aggressors and their victims. When France fell in 1940 he did not hesitate to rush arms and other supplies to beleaguered Britain, thus enabling her to stand alone in her greatest hour. Then came his brilliant lend-lease inspiration which made possible the continuance of the struggle, and which, since the entry of the Americans into the war, has been one of the most potent factors in achieving victory. He has not hesitated to throw all American resources into the fight wherever they were needed, without resource to quibbles as to how and when they were to be repaid. He has been the personification of the Good Neighbor. We shall ever be in his debt.

The one thing which has perhaps more than anything else, endeared him to Canadians is the fact that he has carried on despite the most serious physical handicap ever suffered by a man in his position. He is so crippled as the result of an attack of infantile paralysis that he cannot move about except in a wheel chair or with the aid of strong men as supports. And yet he travelled by plane to Newfoundland for the Atlantic conference with Premier Churchill, flew to Casablanca to meet him again, and now has gone again by air half round the world to counsel with Churchill and Chiang Kai Shek and plan world strategy with Joseph Stalin. These feats of endurance, let alone their wartime risk and natural danger, would do credit to any man in full physique, but when accomplished by a man who has no use of his legs they are marvellous and heroic. He will go down in history as one of the great men of all time.

Prejudice in the United States against him is political, of course. He is the head of the Democratic party and largely directs the internal affairs and policies of the government. It is because of his strong sympathies with the struggles of the common people and his somewhat radical methods of controlling big business that he has run into opposition from the ruling classes. And then it is quite natural that Republicans should not like him any more than Conservatives in Canada like Premier King. It is not easy to please everyone.

Are There Any Ships Want Polishing?

(By Victoria Chappell in "Shipyard Worker", Camden, N.J.)

Several times a month trim little ships slip out of a port somewhere on Britain's east coast bent on helping Hitler to ruin. They arrive at the dock scarred and dirty; they leave looking like a picture. This is only partly due to the painters who, as every housewife knows, are likely to leave a rare mess.

And this is where His Majesty's Charwomen come in. It is they who make that ship worthy of being inspected by the Admiral.

There are two charwomen in one particular team, headed by Mrs. Walker. When they step on to the deck with their pails, their mops, their tins of polish and their armfuls of sandpaper, the last officer hurriedly vacates the ship. He knows better than to hold up H.M. Charwomen at their duties. They're Yorkshirewomen, likely to speak to the point and bluntly.

Mrs. Walker begins by inspecting the ship. She looks at the floors, covered with splashes of paint, and shakes her head. Messy lot, these painters. Just the same in World War 1. She knows. She had the same job then. She decides how the work shall be allotted. They're given two days and a bit for every job. "Thirteen hours we work the first day, eleven and a half for the second, four the third." Yet invariably the women end with time in hand.

They're proud of their work, are H.M. Charwomen. They'll tell you how they sent a destroyer to sea, floors below decks gleaming, voice trumpets sparkling. "Eh, the Port Command commended us for that job," says Mrs. Walker. This particular destroyer came home with half her stern shot away. They watched her limp in. Months later they watched her gallantly steam out with tangible evidence of their elbow grease in every part of her.

Sometimes they have merchantmen to spring-clean, or invasion barges or minesweepers. After Dunkirk they had hospital ships. "Ah, that was a job," sighs Mrs. Owbridge. "I thought this might be one of them ships which brought my brother home'—he's in the Duke of Wellington's Light Infantry, so I gave it an extra do."

In between ships, they are office cleaners. "But ships is our real job. We like to think of them going off all polished up by us to give that Hitler a knock."

BLACK FRIDAY

Black Friday does not refer to a particular date, as often supposed.

The term is applied to several Fridays on which financial panics have occurred.

Apparently the term was first applied to the Friday in December, 1745, when the news was received in London that Charles Edward Stuart, the Young Pretender, had reached Derby, only ten days' march from the British capital.

A panic immediately ensued.

"Black Friday" was probably suggested by "Black Monday," an old name for the Monday following Easter.

In a London chronicle written about 1435 we read: "In the same yere (1360) the xiiii day off April and the morning after Ester, Kyng Edward with his Oost lay before the Cittee of Parys: the which was a ffoule Derke day . . . so bytter colde, that syttìng on horse bak men dyed. Wherefore, vnto this day yt ys called blak monday."

According to another account, Black Monday received its name from the fact that the Black Prince's army sustained heavy losses from a storm on Easter Monday in 1357.

Be that as it may, analogy with "Black Monday" was undoubtedly responsible for "Black Friday" as used in 1745.

This term was revived in England for Friday, May 11, 1866, when a commercial panic in London followed the failure of Overend, Gourney and Company.

In the United States the term "Black Friday" generally refers to September 24, 1869, when a panic resulted from the efforts of Jay Gould and James Fisk to corner the gold market by buying all the gold in the banks of New York. On the day referred to, the financial district of the city was a veritable bedlam and men went insane from the excitement. Business firms feared that they would have to close their shops because of the fluctuations in prices. The panic ceased when it was announced that the government was placing part of its gold reserve on the market.

"Black Friday" was later also applied to September 19, 1873, the worst day of the panic following the failure of Jay Cook & Company.

The Experts Say

(By The Canadian Press)

Ottawa, Jan. 7—(CP)—REMAKE WRINKLES: A yard saved in clothing the fighters on the home front is a yard nearer victory, says the Prices Board Consumer Branch in connection with its clothing conservation program. Object of the program is to put every "cast-off" into circulation—making over mother's shrunk sweater into a small boy's cardigan or a husband's worn suit into a smart one for his wife. The Consumer Branch gives these general tips:

1. Buy as little as possible. When combining materials have enough variety for interest, enough similarity to preserve unity.

2. Children like color. Don't be afraid to restore or to change color by the use of dyes. Good directions are given on all the packages.

3. Frequently better surface and color are obtained by turning the material, in which case none of the old work may be saved. Before washing try a scrap of the material, and always abide by the washing rules for the specified fabric.

4. If there is any doubt about getting one garment out of another try laying the pattern on top of the garment before doing any ripping. Avoid unnecessary ripping, and try to preserve as much of the original work as is compatible with good designing. Never cut anything until the entire layout is planned.

5. If it is necessary to use joinings that can't be concealed, make them an integral part of the design, not just seams at random.

FISH AND CHIPS: A recipe for delicious and unusual creamed fish and potato chips comes from the Fisheries Department:

Combine one cup of medium thick white sauce with two cups of canned or left-over, cooked fish (boiled, steamed or baked.) Place alternate layers of the creamed fish and potato chips in a greased casserole. Season to taste. Top the casserole with buttered, fine bread crumbs and heat well in a moderate oven until the top is brown. White fish, salmon, trout, haddock, halibut, etc., may be used.

LUNCH BOXES: For those who pack lunch-boxes—and their number is legion — Nutrition Services suggest that part or even all the daily quota of vitamin-filled vegetables may be frequently introduced into the sandwich filling. Finely chopped parsley in generous quantity, chopped celery or celery leaves, grated carrot or turnip add food value and combine well with meat, cheese, eggs or fish fillings.

SPICY OAT-RAISIN PUDDING: Introduce new recipes in the New Year. Here is one for a hot dessert that is different and good and thoroughly in tune with the times. It comes from Laura C. Pepper, Chief of the Agriculture Department Consumer Section and is called Spicy Oat-Raisin Pudding:

Mix and sift one cup sifted all-purpose flour, ½ cup sugar, ¾ teaspoon salt, one ⅛ teaspoons baking soda and one teaspoon cinnamon. Add one cup quick-cooking rolled oats and ¾ cup raisins. Melt three tablespoons of mild-flavored fat and add to one ⅛ cups sour milk or buttermilk. Add one ½ teaspoons vanilla and mix into the dry ingredients. Pour into a well-greased pudding mould, cover closely and steam for one hour and 15 minutes. Serve with any preferred sauce. Serves six to eight.

Indifferent Care of Scalp Has Bad Effect on Hair

Rub lather into scalp vigorously.

By HELEN FOLLETT

SINCE THE finger wave became an institution, formed lovely undulations upon feminine heads, scalp care seems to have gone by the board. As tonics make the wave go faint and limp, they have ceased to function. The good old hair brush that tugged at the hair roots, stimulated scalp circulation, removed surface dust and revived the growth has dropped into the limbo of forgotten things.

That won't do, my friends. We've got to understand that the place where the hair lives and gets its growth is the scalp, and it must be kept in order.

Care of the Scalp

Don't wait until your glorious mop starts falling out. Hair may be thick and luxuriant today, a scanty growth tomorrow. Hunt up the hair brush and use it. Every night give your hirsute halo 100 strokes. Then do rolls or ringlets around your finger and put on your wave net. In the morning you can arrange your hairdo in a jiffy.

On the night before the shampoo, plan to give your tresses a rousing treatment. Brush the hair, strand by strand, holding each one away from the head, using a rolling motion. Then, parting the hair at various places, trickle hot mineral oil along the partings. You can use a medicine dropper for the purpose. Then friction the scalp for 10 minutes by the clock.

Diet Deficiency

Many hair specialists believe that falling hair is often due to a diet deficiency. Finicky eaters had better beware. By eating a variety of foods, one gets the various vitamins and mineral salts. Regular daily doses of cod liver oil are recommended by some beauticians who specialize in hair culture.

Every two weeks have a shampoo. A good shampoo is a scalp treatment in itself. It's nice to sport the chic coiffure, but it is wise to consider hair health, do everything possible to cultivate it.

Fashion Flashes

SO PRETTY and so comfy, too, is a suit of black woolen, its three-quarters length jacket made with wide pointed collar and deep cuffs of snowy ermine. Cuffs are detachable.

NEXT BEST THING to a trip south is a fashion show of southern wear. A lovely outfit is of shantung in Wedgewood blue with white polka dots. The halter-neck dress, made with beautiful tucking at the midriff goes out to town with a long-sleeved bolero, making it right for patio or beach.

NEW TOUCHES mark the current showing of short-skirted black dinner frocks. Black crepe is used for a pretty frock with a yoke of nude silk chiffon simulating an off-the-shoulder neckline. Self-ruching outlines this yoke.

THAT BOON COMPANION, the topper, so good with a dress or suit, is cited for Spring. A new model, done on slim but easy lines, is of black and white checked woolen and is made with side vents. A black velvet collar, black velvet outlining the semi-circular pockets and a slight flare at the knee-length hem, are other details.

LOOK OUT for the cap-sleeved shirtwaist dress come summer. A typical model is of red shantung with a double drawstring waistline with blue wool ties. Oval plastic buttons and slanting patch pockets are other details of this cool, pretty number.

THIS YEAR the fabric hat is making an early appearance. A new hat is a tiny, forward posed sailor of pink satin trimmed with simulated black pompon aigrettes.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

When Marriage Drifts Into Doldrums—See If It Won't Drift Out.

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"I'm 33 years old, married nine years and we have a five-year-old youngster. I love my husband dearly, but am unable to laugh or enjoy myself with him any longer. He has continually hurt and humiliated me now for about a year. He goes out frequently with his friends and occasionally there are women.

"Lately he has been drinking; he's not a heavy drinker but a poor one. I'm a professional woman; gave up my work six months ago to devote my time to my home. But I guess I was too late, for my husband still "includes me out" of all his activities.

"He has always been a good provider; is kind and considerate. Devoted to our daughter. He says he has no feeling toward me except that I'm "nice to have around" and I make him comfortable. It seemed to me though he were speaking of our living-room couch. It's so humiliating.

"The absentee treatment didn't work. Do you think it would be best to part—legally? He might find some who would make him happy. And I might forget and be happier. Our child never hears any arguments; the few we have are behind closed doors. Neither one of us displays a temper. So I don't think she will be harmed until she's older and then I don't think she'll be proud of either of us. My mother has always said "half a loaf is better than none". What do you think?

B. L. H.

What is your husband's side of this unhappy condition which seems to have settled in your home? Did he object to your professional work, and the fact that you earned money, perhaps more than he did?

Or is it just a case of the boredom that so often settles down on marriage in those trying middle years? When you tell me your husband is a good provider, kind and considerate, and devoted to your youngster, it makes me hesitate to suggest that you go back to your professional work. He may snap out of those marital doldrums that almost every marriage falls into at some time or other.

At present, a divorce seems to me inadvisable as a needless surgical operation. First and last, your little daughter is to be considered. Don't give the child a home broken by divorce if you can help it. I'm glad you don't argue before her.

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Gift For an Army Nurse.

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My sister is a second lieutenant in the Army Nurse Corps. As a Christmas present I was given some money to spend as I wish, and I'd like to spend part of it to get my sister some really nice letter-paper. It's to be a surprise for her, so I don't want to ask her about it. However, a short time ago she did say that she'd like some paper with her name and designation on it. How would her name be used. . . with "Miss" before it? And her rank and service? Thank you for your help.

Rita.

What a generous and thoughtful sister you are! I suggest you choose white letter-paper, of rather light-weight, double-sheeted (or perhaps half folded sheets, and half single sheets.)

Have her name, without "Miss" and without abbreviations, on the first line, and her rank and service below, in type smaller than that used in the name. Like this:

MARY ALLEN FIELD
Second Lieutenant, Canadian Army
Nurse Corps

The engraving might be in beige or tan or maroon, any shade used in her uniform, or in her favorite color.

Answering an Announcement

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1.—A friend of mine has just sent me a formal announcement of her daughter's engagement. Should this kind of announcement be acknowledged?

2.—If so how?

V. C.

1.—Yes. News of such importance in the lives of our friends is, naturally, important to us. And we should write them of our happiness in receiving the news, give them our felicitations and chat a bit about the news.

2.—You should write two notes. One to the engaged girl, giving her your "best wishes for happiness always". And since it is her mother who is especially your friend, naturally you would write her too. What you write in each case depends on the closeness of your friendship. It will be easy for you to write a chatty note to your friend. To her daughter, your note might read somewhat like this:

Dear Joan:

I was thrilled to have the happy news of your engagement! And I'm sending you a heartfull of love and my very best and warmest wishes for your happiness always. Of course I'm eager to know about your Philip, but please give him my heartiest congratulations. . . and tell him how lucky I think he is to have won such a wonderful girl. My blessings to you and your fiance, and may all good fortune come to you both.

Lovingly.

Courtesy Tip

Even if you're in such a "frightful hurry" that you accidentally bump into somebody, take a half-second to say "I beg your pardon". Not "Pardon", or "Pardon me", or worst of all, "Pardon ME".

Some Cooking Hints

The same kinds of foods produced in different parts of the country vary widely from each other in vitamin content. The way these foods are prepared in the kitchen may cause much loss of vitamins. Even if persons select the proper foods for inclusion in their meals, unless these foods are prepared in the right way a great deal of the necessary food parts are lost.

Eva Donelson, of the University of Minnesota, has offered some suggestions which appear quite important concerning the preparation of foods. One of the first suggestions is not to use soda in cooking green vegetables. The reason for this is that soda destroys vitamin B-1 and vitamin C and it is important that every person get a sufficient quantity of these vitamins. Vitamin C is most easily destroyed. It has been estimated that not enough citrus fruits, such as oranges and grapefruit, and not enough tomatoes were grown last year to supply the needs of the population of this country for vitamin C, and these are the foods richest in this vitamin. One of the good sources of vitamin C is green vegetables and if, in cooking these vegetables, the vitamin is destroyed by adding soda, a deficiency of the vitamin is apt to result.

Another helpful suggestion is that in boiling vegetables the temperature of the water should be brought to the boiling point as rapidly as possible after the vegetables have been added to the water. This is done also to help save the vitamin C . In vegetables there are certain substances called enzymes which act on the vitamin C. However, high temperatures destroy these enzymes. Hence, if in cooking the vegetables the temperature is brought up to the boiling point rapidly the enzymes are destroyed and the vitamin C is saved.

Another helpful suggestion is to use as little water as possible in boiling foods. You see, many of the minerals and vitamins dissolve in the water.

In a study carried out it was shown that if one cup of peas was boiled in one cup of water 59 per cent. of the original vitamin C was preserved in the peas. However, if three cups of peas were used for each cup of water the peas retained 75 per cent of their vitamin C. Since much of the vitamins and minerals dissolve in the cooking water, this water should be saved and made into gravies, sauces and soups. In this way, all the benefit of the vitamins and minerals will be obtained.

Another important thing is to prepare chopped fruit and vegetable salads shortly before they are served. Chopping of these fruits and vegetables allows the enzyme present in them to act on the vitamin C. By shortening the period of this action much of the vitamin C will be saved.

These hints in cooking would appear to be well worth while in preserving the value of many foods.

Leafs Gain Second-Place Tie With Bruins by Defeating Chicago Black Hawks by 6-1

Paul Bibeault Performs Well in the Toronto Twine

WINGS BEAT RANGERS

(By The Canadian Press)

Paul Bibeault may have been just what the doctor ordered as a mid-winter tonic for Toronto Maple Leafs.

In Bibeault's case, the doctor also ordered an army discharge, enabling the former Montreal Canadiens' netminder to join Leafs as a replacement for aging Benny Grant.

And Bibeault came through last night, playing a star role as Leafs took a 6-1 decision from the crumbling Chicago Black Hawks to gain a second-place tie with the idle Boston Bruins in the National Hockey League race.

Chicago skidded to a fourth-place stalemate with Detroit Red Wings, who blanked New York Rangers 5-0 before 12,811 fans.

George Grigor, elevated from Toronto Mercantile ranks for a one-night, lease-lend stand along with Whitey Farrant, saved Chicago from a shutout midway through the second period after Leafs had stowed the game away with four goals. Tommy O'Neill scored two goals for Leafs, his first of the season, while singles went to Elwin Morris, Gus Bodnar, Lorne Carr and Don Webster.

Carl Liscombe potted two goals for Detroit in New-York as Rangers suffered their 18th defeat in 23 starts, but Joe Carveth led in points with a goal and two assists. Syd Howe and Pat Egan, obtained this week from Boston Bruins for Flash Hollett, were the others to beat Ken McAuley in the Ranger nets.

1,500 Thoroughbreds Ready For 50-Day Meet at Hialeah

(By The Canadian Press)

No less than 1,500 thoroughbreds in the Miami, Fla., area are available for the 50-day meeting which opens today at Hialeah. The meet follows the highly-successful 20-day session at Tropical Park where a number of betting records toppled although attendance was not up to pre-war standards. Feature of today's eight-race card is the inaugural handicap, $5,000 added, which has attracted 17 sparkling entries.

Defenceman Bill (Flash) Hollett, traded by Boston Bruins of the N. H. L. for defenceman Pat Egan, went to his home in Clarkson, Ont., instead of reporting to Detroit Red Wings and Manager Art Ross of Boston yesterday gave permission to Jack Adams to play Egan against New York Rangers.

Thirty-three entries have already been received for the 17th annual Ontario Curling bonspiel to be held in Toronto Feb. 14-19, with rinks nominated from clubs in scattered sections of Ontario and the United States.

Registrations for the Regina City Parks Hockey League have dropped this season to 1,000 players from the pre-war peak of 1,400 youthful puckchasers, it was reported last night from the Prairie City. The higher-age divisions have been hit by the war.

Wally Kilrea, 34-year-old member of a famous Ottawa Hockey family and leading scorer of the American Hockey League with Hershey bears, yesterday was accepted for the United States Army at Harrisburg, Pa., after passing his final medical test.

The suspension on Robert Dill, former Buffalo Bison, for striking the referee in an A. H. L. game at Pittsburgh last Saturday was lifted yesterday by League President Maurice Podoloff, following the sale of the player to the New York Rangers.

After passing his U. S. Army test, Bobby Ruffin, 23-year-old Long Island Lightweight, was ordered yesterday to report at Fort Dix, N. J., Jan. 26, before which date he will fight Tippy Carkin in a bout scheduled for Jan. 14 at Madison Square Garden.

William J. Bingham, former graduate-manager of Athletics at Harvard and now in the U. S. Army, was named chairman of the National Collegiate Football rules committee yesterday at New York to deal with proposed grid changes.

Canadian Sport Snapshots

By CHARLIE EDWARDS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Toronto, Jan. 7 — (CP)—Picking champions in mid-season is risky business in any sport but it does seem likely that the Canadian Senior men's basketball title will not change hands this year. In other words, we figure the golden gonfalon will remain right where it now hangs — in the mess hall of Patricia Bay's R.C.A.F. Gremlins on Vancouver Island. The other night Gremlins handed a strong Vancouver team a 58-37 trimming in Vancouver's own backyard and Norm Baker showed his shooting eye has not left him by counting 21 points for the Airmen. Baker is the one-man gang who totalled 72 points as Gremlins beat Windsor Patricks three straight games in the 1943 National final, including 36 of his team's 58 points in the first game. Dominion titles are right up Baker's alley. He won in 1942 with Victoria Dominoes. Unless the R.C.A.F. stops basketball like it did hockey he is likely to win again. And here's more bad news for rival hoop teams: with Baker at Pay Bay is Ralph (Porky) Andrews, another former Dominoes player. Porky had a spell with University of Oregon a couple of years ago and set New York by the ears in the U. S. National Intercollegiate tournament.

Quip of the Week:

Dan Parker of the New York Daily Mirror: "Lester Patrick, who was 60 years old on the last day of 1943, will be 70 on his next birthday if his Rangers don't snap out of it."

N.H.L. Enterprises:

Andy (Toronto Star) Lytle, who pioneered opposition to the N. H. L. player "gag" rule, has investigated further and discovered the league has a rule imposing a $100 fine on any official or player conspiring to throw a game and making the offender subject to expulsion. Another clause provides a fine of between $200 and $1,000 be imposed on any club official "who gives to the press for publication any statement reflecting on the conduct or performance of any official"

Incidentally:

Flt. Lt. Fred Garvey, awarded the D.S.O., is a former sports writer for the Vancouver Daily Province. His father, the late Art Garvey, was sports editor of the Province ... many hockey observers consider Flash Hollett one of the most versatile players in the NHL yet Boston Bruins apparently made an even trade with Detroit Red Wings—Hollett for Pat Egan, no ball of fire this year. The reason is Hollett and manager Art Ross are not exactly buddies at Boston.

What's Doing in Sport

Detroit, (AP)—The championship of the two-day International Curling bonspiel was won last night by a Toronto rink skipped by Mr. Justice D. P. J. Kelly who defeated Ray P. Best of Peterborough, Ont., in the final, 9-8. Twenty-four rinks competed.

St. Petersburg, Fla., (AP)—Truett (Rip) Sewell "Blooper-Ball" hurler has returned his 1944 contract unsigned to the Pittsburgh Pirates, declaring he would not settle for less than $20,000. Last season, during which he won 21 games, he received $12,000.

Ottawa, (CP)—Bobby Copp, former defenceman with the Toronto N.H.L. Leafs, has been signed to play with the Ottawa Commandos and will play his first game Friday when the Quebec Senior League reopens with Ottawa taking on University of Montreal here.

Moorestown, N.J., (AP) — John P. Grier, 27-year-old stallion which gave Man O' War his toughest race in 1920, died at the breeding farm of F. W. Armstrong, former advertising man. In 22 years, the horse was reputed to have sired $2,000,000 worth of winners.

New York, (AP)—Promoter Mike Jacobs said he expected a $40,000 gate at Madison Square Garden tonight for the lightweight fight between Beau Jack and Lulu Constantino, the former ruling as a 1 to 3 favorite over Constantino.

Ottawa, (CP)—Len McKinley, president of Ottawa Senior City Hockey League, said last night after seeing Montagnards wallop Hull Volants 4-3 in overtime that at the League's next meeting he would recommend that the circuit drop from Allan Cup competition for the 1943-44 season.

PETERBOROUGH RINK IN FINAL

Toronto Jan. 7 (CP)—A Peterborough rink skipped by Mrs. H. Dulmage will meet a Toronto Granite Club four under Skip Mrs. W. Pepall in the final of the Robertson trophy bonspiel here today. The game will decided the singles championship of the Ontario ladies bonispiel. Mrs. Dulmage entered the final by decisively defeating Mrs. C. Brereton's Toronto Granites 14-2 in a semi-final yesterday.

Johnny Conick Heads Scorers In Senior O.H.A.

Toronto, Jan. 7. (CP)—Johnny Conick still leads the Ontario Hockey Association Senior "A" scoring parade, official records showed today. The Hamilton star has 14 goals, 16 assists, for 30 points, two more than team-mate Doug Runions and Gus Giesebrecht of Kingston Army, tied for second with 28. Blink Bellinger of St. Catharines is an undisputed fourth with 27 counters, followed by two Kingston forwards, Red Hamill and Jim Peters, who have 25 and 23 points respectively. Red Reynolds of St. Catharines and Dillon Brady of Hamilton round out the first eight, each credited with 22-point totals.

In the Junior "A" group, Kenny Smith of the powerful Oshawa Generals regained scoring leadership during the week by boosting his point total to 33, one better than Galt's Flashy Johnny Ubriaco and Bobby Schnurr and Joe Sadler of St. Michael's, in a three-way tie for second place. Bill Ezinicki of Oshawa holds fifth spot with 31 points, followed by Bob Love of Oshawa and Bob Thorpe of St. Catharines in that order with 28 and 27 points.

CAPITALS WIN FROM BISONS

Indianapolis Now in Third Place in the American Loop

By The Canadian Press

Indianapolis Capitals, in third place in the American Hockey League, defeated Buffalo Bisons 2-1 last night in the loop's lone scheduled encounter.

With a total of 27 points — 12 behind leading Hershey Bears — Caps now have won nine games and tied nine in 28 starts. Bisons have won seven and tied eight for a total of 22 points.

Not a single penalty was handed out in the game, but Caps lost two men. Defenceman Moose Sherritt developed a charley-horse early in the second period and was off the ice for keeps. Then Red Kane smashed into the boards and suffered a severe hip injury which put him out.

Morey Rimstad gave Buffalo a 1-0 lead in the second period, and it wasn't until 1:57 in the final round that Johnny Sorrell finally evened the count. On the 13-minute mark Bernie Ruelle made it 2-1 and clinched the game for Indianapolis.

LAST NIGHT'S STARS

By The Canadian Press

Rookie Tom O'Neill, Toronto, who led the Leafs to their 6-1 triumph over Chicago Black Hawks last night by scoring two goals — the first of his National Hockey League career.

Paul Bibeault, Toronto, netminder who allowed only one counter past him.

Big Earl Seibert, Hawk defenceman, who made a brilliant offensive and defensive show at Toronto.

Goalie Jimmy Franks, Detroit, who scored his first shutout of the season, when Red Wings thumped New York Rangers 5-0.

Joe Carveth, Detroit, who collected one goal and two assists.

Carl Liscombe, Detroit, who netted two goals.

Sports Roundup

(By HUGH FULLERTON, Jr.)

New York, Jan. 7. (AP)— No doubt there are plenty of good commonsense reasons for re-drawing the baseball map, but we still wonder why major leaguers are so interested in this essentially minor league project. . . Its the big league officials who keep pointing out that it is silly to have little leagues over-lapping each other and towns where natural rivalries might develop operating in different circuits. . . And generally they add that if leagues were more compact and travel expanses were reduced, minor clubs could operate under local ownership and would not have to keep running to their big brothers for help. . . They might be anticipating another anti-chain move by Judge Landis, of course, but our guess is that last season's declining attendances made the operators think about divesting themselves of these expensive appendages.

Shorts and Shells.

When Beau Jack returned from Georgia for tonight's tiff with Lulu Contantino, he was accompanied by a 17-year-old lightweight named Frank Hartman, who will be dubbed Jack Rabbit. . . . Quote, Unquote.

After the Chicago U. Basketball team ended its two-year, 45-game losing streak Coach Kyle Anderson explained: "We have no trouble over losing men in the draft, but the club has been laboring under a mental strain, nevertheless. Most of the fellows are worrying about their dads going into service".

CASUAL COMMENT by K.J.C.

Old Jim Bidwell, a pioneer of California, married a squaw. After forty years she died, and Jim went East, married a school teacher in his home town and brought her back.

The Bidwells hadn't been home long when kind and loving ladies of the place came to call.

One of the Callers (with many smirks and side-glances)—Of course—Of course, Mrs. Bidwell, you understand, or maybe you don't know, that your husband's first wife was an Indian — that he married a squaw.

Mrs. Bidwell (sweetly) — Yes, I have been told so, and judging from the white women I have seen here, I don't blame him.

(Cagers move in.)

Ed Shortt, guiding light of the Belleville War Industries Girls' Softball League (there's a real moniker) that operates at the "Y" each and every Monday night with a dual bill, handed us the lassies' schedule, that is published elsewhere in today's issue. It's a 24-game affair that opens next Monday and terminates on March 27th. All four clubs comprising the loop play each night in doubleheaders. Girls' softball proves popular entertainment in the summer months, so why shouldn't girls' basketball prove just as entertaining on cold bleak winter evenings? A goodly number of the softball players are proving apt hoopsters, so says Ed.

Incidentally Tom Burnett, who coached the Belleville juveniles in 1943, will head the local "Y" boys in an attempt to bring a juvenile O.A.B.A. championship to Belleville in 1944. After all Coach Burnett boasted of a fine quintette last season and has most of his charges still intact for the coming cage campaign.

(Hockey round-up.)

The Belleville juniors are slated to journey to Trenton tonight, which will wind up the meetings of the two teams until play-off time rolls around. Belleville took the first decision between these two clubs 8-3 on Tuesday night, but Coach Stan Jackson has a capable sextette of puckters, who check strongly and may make matters tough for the Holway-Doran aggregation before tonight's game is over. With the Hume Arena ice surface covered with water last night the local kids could get in an anticipated practice and now the management of the locals may have to depend on the same lineup tonight that carried them to victory Tuesday.

Incidentally that was quite an array of talent Coach Mike Dziura had out to the initial R.C.A.F. junior Flyers' practice at the local ice igloo Wednesday night. No less than six lads with Junior "A" experience behind them were seen in action, along with a galaxy of junior puckters that represented nearly all the provinces in the Dominion. It looks very much as though the Flyers are the team to beat in the local Junior O.H.A. group.

(Remember when—)

Four members of Canada's Olympic hockey team were dropped by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association and Olympic selection committee eight years ago today. It was claimed at the time that goalkeeper Sylvester (Daddy) Dubar, defenceman Vince Ferguson and forwards Chummy Lawlor and Ernie Mosher, of the Halifax Wolverines, had asked remuneration for representing Canada at the 1936 Olympic hockey games at Garmisch-Partenkirchen.

(Rickey says—Cubs.)

Despite a fifth-place finish last season, the Chicago Cubs are "the team to watch" in the 1944 National League pennant race, Branch Rickey, president of the Dodgers, predicted last week. "They have a number of outstanding men." Rickey pointed out, "and that young pitcher, Henry Wyse, is really great." He added, however, that "if there is no further disturbance of manpower, you would have to put the St. Louis Cardinals on top again."

(This and that.)

For his Christmas card, Red Jones, new American League umpire from the Southern Association, sent out a picture of an arbiter standing at home plate holding a seeing-eye dog. . . It bore the inscription: "Our decision—Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year" . . . Even the Army shots Lefty Gomez had to take before going overseas to entertain the troops were a gag to him . . . "Which arm do you want?" asked Lefty of the doctor . . . "The left," was the answer . . . LESSON NO. 270

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Get yourself a slab of granite. Not for use as a tombstone for your partner. Engrave on it The Kibitzer's convention. It is a table of bids for showing aces and kings.

When a player (1) has discovered at least 12 tricks in their pair, (2) knows what will be their trump suit, and (3) holds in his own hand two aces and a king, or better; he bids four no-trump.

That four no-trump bid is a signal for ordering partner to reply in code and announce his holding in aces and kings, if any. The list of code answers forms the table shown below, known as

THE KIBITZER'S CONVENTION

5 clubs shows no Aces
5 diamonds shows 1 A, no K
5 hearts shows 1 A, 1 K
5 spades shows 1 A, 2 K
5 no-trumps hows 1 A, 3 K

6 clubs shows 2 A, no K
6 diamonds shows 2 A, 1 K
6 hearts shows 2 A, 2 K
6 spades shows 2 A, 3 K.

Save this table for future referance. It will bring joy to your bridge game. It warns you when not to bid slam; tells you when a slam is safe; advises you when a grand slam may be there.

To memorize their code meanings, here is the key. The lowest bid (five clubs) shows no aces. All other five bids shows one ace. All six bids show two aces. Each higher denomination shows one more king.

Take another eyeful of these partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠A K J 7 5
♥A K J 7 5
♦5
♣J 5
NORTH
♠Q 6 4 2
♥Q 6 4 2
♦A J
♣A 4 2

After an exchange of bids, south bids four no-trump. North must answer. With two aces, his bid is six. With no kings, he bids clubs. His response is six clubs. South sees in north two aces and no kings.

Like cellophane.

AT THE McCARTHY

"You're a Lucky Fellow Mr. Smith"

One of the season's happiest comedy-dramas, "You're a Lucky Fellow Mr. Smith," opens this weekend at the McCarthy Theatre. Paced by a most pleasing selection of popular songs, the gay Universal production speeds lightheartedly along its romantic course which is brightly entertaining at every turn. Allan Jones and Evelyn Ankers are co-starred at the top of a noteworthy cast which features Billie Burke, David Bruce, Patsy O'Connor, Luis Alberni, Stanley Clements and the King's Men.

The diverting new picture, taken from a breezy original story by Oscar Brodney, has Miss Ankers in the role of a prospective heiress who must marry before a certain date in order to inherit a fortune. Her plans are complete but a young sister, portrayed by Miss O'Connor, provides the obstacles which throw the scheme completely out of gear. Instead of marrying the man she has chosen, the potential heiress is compelled to wed an absolute stranger. Jones is seen in the latter part and the zestful consequences lead merrily to the film's supremely satisfactory climax.

A quarantined Pullman car where the principals are marooned for a night is the locale for much of the story's brisk and surprising action. Outstanding among the comical situations is the one in which pert Miss O'Connor pretends to be stricken with measles.

The screen play by Lawrence Riley, Ben Barzman and Louis Lantz sparkles with clever dialogue and the musical score supervised by Charles Previn, captures eight Charles Previn, features eight attractive tunes. Jones sings such numbers as "You're Eyes Have Told Me So," and Cole Porter's "What Is This Thing Called Love," as solo selections.

Second feature on the weekend program stars Ginger Rogers and James Stewart in "Vivacious Lady."

AT THE CAPITOL

"The West Side Kid" now appearing at the Capitol Theatre, is one of the most interesting pictures seen here for a long time, and grips the attention right from the first reel.

Old Sam Winston, millionaire, is so disgusted with the way his wife and family are behaving, he is so heart-broken at their lack of affection for him, in spite of the way he has lavished money and love on them, that he hires a young gangster, Johnny April to 'bump' him off'—painlessly, if possible—in that way hoping to escape his misery.

Johnny, the more he sees of the 'upper strata' of society, the more he dislikes them, and during his short association, lets them have his ideas of life right from the shoulder, and to say that his badly phrased but very expressive language causes consternation in the family is putting it very mildly. Each word explodes like a bombshell, and to make matters still more complicated, Johnny falls in love with old Sam's daughter, Gloria.

Eventually, Johnnie takes matters more or less in his own hands, and his methods, while entirely unorthodox, prove most effective.

"Born To Sing"
(Musical Comedy.)

Introducing a group of child musical and dancing prodigies, "Born to Sing" is entertaining audiences at the Capitol Theatre, where the youthful players, headed by Virginia Weidler, Ray McDonald and Leo Gorcey, present a mixture of music, mirth and dramatic heart interest.

The story revolves about a show, presented by youngsters recruited from a children's orchestra and other sources. Miss Weidler plays the daughter of a composer. His music has been filched by a Broadway producer, and is about to be presented. Her young friends decide that the only way to prove his case is to present the show first. In trouble with the police through trying to vindicate the composer, they hide in a deserted rathskeller, transform it into a theatre, and present the show to a "kidnapped" audience.

AT THE BELLE

"Watch on the Rhine"

"Watch on the Rhine" which has been playing to capacity audiences at the Belle Theatre, is now closing.

The new Warner Bros. film stars Bette Davis one of the screen's most versatile actresses, and Paul Lukas, who is in the role he enacted in the Broadway hit of the same name and for which he won the award of the New York Drama League for the outstanding portrayal of the season. "Watch on the Rhine" based upon Lillian Hellman's famous play was prepared for the screen by Dashiell Hammett.

Ozzie Nelson and his band presenting a smart musical revue and a funny colorfun cartoon "Finn 'n Catty" precede the feature.

"This Is the Army" in Color

The screen production of Irving Berlin's "This is the Army", filmed in Technicolor by Warner Bros., for Army Emergency Relief, will have its initial opening at the Belle Theatre this week end.

Directed by Michael Curtiz, the picture presents Irving Berlin and the original company of 350 soldiers who performed the musical for three months on Broadway and toured in the show last Winter, making two million dollars for Army Emergency Relief.

Several Hollywood personalities have been added to appear in the picture. Among them are George Murphy, Joan Leslie, Lieutenant Ronald Regan, Kate Smith, George Tobias, Alan Hale, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel, Frances Langford and Gertrude Niesen, Sergeant Joe Louis also appears in the film.

The Canadian Paramount News and a funny Bugs Bunny colorfun cartoon "Falling Hare" will also be exhibited. On Saturday matinee the 9th Chapter of "Batman" the year's best serial will be presented. Continuous shows will be presented on Saturday.

48th Highlanders Have Not Had Boots Off in a Month

Toronto, Jan. 7 — (CP) — Bert S. Wemp, Evening Telegram war correspondent with the Canadian troops in Italy, reported in a dispatch to his paper that members of the 48th Highlanders of Toronto haven't had their boots off for a month.

"Some idea of the battles we have been in may be gained from the fact that we haven't had our clothes or boots off for a month — four weeks to be exact," Wemp quoted Capt. William L. Beatty as saying. "The boys have fought, slept and eaten facing the enemy. They have just had a gas cape, which is also waterproof, for protection from the rain, and in some places water in the slit trenches has been four feet deep. Then it froze following a terrific rain and snow storm.

"Sergeant Fred Sexton, of St. Catharines, worked like a fiend for four days, and then an extra hazardous trip had to be made. He wouldn't listen to anybody else but himself leading the party, and did. He got through safely, too, bringing out ten wounded, and saved a lot of lives."

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma and pop were waiting for Mr. and Mrs. Spruance to come and play bridge, ma saying, Oh dear, I hope he wont get started on his old twice told tales of his travelling experiences. It's always the same old list, France, Spain, Germany and London England. If he does for land sakes we'll never get down to serious bridge. So whatever you do dont say anything to encourage him and get him started, she said.

Which just then the bell rang and it was Mr. and Mrs. Spruance, and ma quick got the bridge table out and Mr. Spruance said, The French are great bridge players. I wonder if Paris will ever be the same again, with the little round tables right out on the bullavards, and you can sit there as long as you want over a little glass of wine and watch the passing show, what a life. I hate to think of how it must be now, he said.

That's just what I was wondering about Bellootchistan, pop said, and Mr. Spruance said, Where? I didn't know you had done any travelling, he said.

Oh yes, I was quite a rolling stone before Mrs. Potts picked me up and taught me the pleasures of moss gathering, pop said. You could stand anywhere on any main street of Bellootchistan and reach out your hand and pick 7 different varieties of tropical fruit. It's depressing to think that all that fruit has probably been shot down forever, he said and Mr. Spruance said, People that dont know Spain dont realize what a modern city Barcellona is, or rather was before all the bombing.

Many a time Ive paddled a drosky on the Bug river, pop said. You must of read about the Bug in the news lately. The queer part is, there's hardly an insect to be seen all along the Bug, in spite of the name, he said, and Mr. Spruance said, That's very interesting, well how about getting started on the bridge?

Which they did without Mr. Spruance even mentioning Germany or London England.

Mrs. Roosevelt Had Trying Childhood

(By Mary Hornaday in "Look" Magazine.)

Eleanor Roosevelt has lived 11 widely publicized years in the White House. Yet few Americans understand her perhaps because they do not know of her orphaned childhood, of her self conscious girlhood, of her father who had a weakness for alcohol and of her marriage dominated for years by a mother-in-law.

Mrs. Roosevelt has always been very candid about her girlhood. Her first memories are of her mother ashamed of her little girl because she was not beautiful. The child writhed with embarrassment while her mother apologized to friends. "She is such a funny child, so old-fashioned. Even marriage to her distant cousin — popular Franklin—did not bring fullness of life to Eleanor. Her mother-in-law was always in the offing.

This long chain of frustrations developed three character traits: (1) her desire to defy tradition; (2) her sympathy of those who are humanly or economically frail; (3) her tendency to underestimate herself.

Today she has passed far beyond the grip of these earlier unhappy days. The White House has given her a real chance to soar. She has thrown tradition out of the window. She refuses secret service escort. She runs the White House elevators herself at times. She conducts press conferences and takes a constant interest in national affairs. Yet there are traditions that Eleanor Roosevelt clings to religiously. Christenings are still elaborate affairs in the family. And every Christmas eve Dickens' "Christmas Carol" is faithfully read.

Does criticism worry Mrs. Roosevelt? Yes and no. She never worries over personal attack — the kind that want her to stop fighting for a cause or to stay home more or something of that sort. But criticism really gets under her skin when it interferes with her desire to help somebody. She was greatly disturbed because the marines gave her the cold shoulder. They heard she was for keeping them out there six months after the war's end. Their attitude hurt, because it lessened her chances to cheer them.

Mrs. Roosevelt calls the president "Franklin." They do not see much of each other these days. When Mrs. Roosevelt is home she and the president usually see each other in the evening at dinner and sometimes sit for a while in his oval study, she knitting and he looking over papers or his stamp collection.

Mrs. Roosevelt has gained poise in the White House. When she first came to Washington she often laughed nervously and her voice rose when she became excited. She was the despair of radio people. Now her voice has improved as a result of training and inner assurance. She is still not a great public speaker but her faults are outweighed by her sincerity. History will record her as a remarkable woman.

Nurse Shortage Felt by V.O.N.

Ottawa, Jan. 7. (CP) — Miss Maude H. Hall, acting chief superintendent of the Victorian Order of Nurses, said today that the Order does not "feel free" to urge communities to organize branches because "we can't be too sure of being able to supply the staff".

The shortage of nurses arises from increased wartime claims for nurses on the home front and difficulties in obtaining sufficient nurses with public health training, Miss Hall said in an interview at National Headquarters here.

Ten new branches have been opened in the war years despite personnel problems, at Windsor, N.S., Campbellton, N.B., Gananoque, Ont., Peterborough, Ont., Porcupine, Ont., St. Thomas, Ont., Welland, Ont., Niagara Falls, Ont., Trail, B.C., and West Vancouver.

NORTH TO DANGER by TOM GILL

CHAPTER 14

Just before the first dance, Colin heard Blair's voice outside, and saw Selkirk start toward the door. Instantly alert, Colin waited for Tennant to enter the room, but Blair was alone. Her eyes were bright; her mood reflected the gaiety of Christmas and of the dance.

Colin helped her out of her parka asking, "Where's Nate?"

"He'll be late."

Colin led her out on the floor and together they gave themselves to the music. Neither spoke for many bars.

"Chatterbox!" she smiled. "What are you brooding about?"

"I was thinking about Nate," he answered and, while they danced, he told her of his clash that afternoon with Olsen. "I don't know what may happen tonight," he ended.

"But what will happen?"

"Perhaps nothing. It depends on what Olsen told Nate and how much Nate believes. Whatever happens, promise not to take any part in it—let it just be between Nate and me."

Blair did not answer, but her face had lost its earlier gaiety. At last she said, "Yesterday, when I mentioned your name, it was as if Nate wanted to tell me something; then he said something that puzzled me—he said he pitied Selkirk with all his heart. What could that mean?"

"I'm not sure," Colin answered slowly, "but I think I see how the wind's blowing."

They were crossing the floor at the beginning of the next dance when Selkirk and Irina found them.

"This lady says she would much rather dance with you," Selkirk told Colin.

"Oh, I didn't!" Irina protested. "I didn't say that. I said I hoped the good-looking gentleman with the good-looking girl would ask me to dance before the night was over."

Colin led her into the dance.

"Angry?" she broke the silence. He looked down at her in surprise. "Why should I be?"

"Well, I haven't seen you."

"I've been out on the trap line."

"Is that the only reason?"

"No."

Irina smiled. "I like you for saying that—even though it hurts a little. You and I should have the courage to be truthful. You want to avoid me until I become Mrs. Selkirk."

"When will that be?"

"Never!"

Colin stopped in his tracks. "Why not?"

"Come dance." She pressed his arm. "People are watching."

Mechanically he went on dancing.

"Now," he heard her say, "now you think I've fallen in love with you—but I haven't. I'm very fond of you, Colin, but that's not why I can't marry Rodney Selkirk."

"Why can't you?"

"Because I am one of those who are neither very strong nor very weak, not very bad and not very good. If I were a little harder inside I might marry Rod and not care if I broke his heart. You don't know what I mean, but some day you will and then you'll say I was right."

Colin looked across the room at Selkirk, dancing with Blair. "Does he know?"

"Not yet."

Twice in silence they circled the room, then he asked, "What are you going to do?"

"I haven't thought. There are some people whose future is decided without their doing much about it. I'm one of them." She stopped. He felt the sudden tightening of her arm, saw her eyes fixed beyond his shoulder and even before he turned he heard her whispered warning, "Tennant!"

The door had crashed open and framed against the snow Nate Tennant stood, the hood of his parka thrown back, his hair and eyebrows white with frost.

Only his eyes moved while he stood there, and the utter cold of the Arctic night crept in through the open door. The beat of the music ceased, the big room was suddenly silent. Then Tennant stepped forward. He had seen Colin.

For a second Tennant stood watching him with narrow, savage eyes; and now he jerked his hand toward the blue-white snow beyond the door. "Come outside, Rae!"

Colin made no move. "We can talk here," he answered.

"I didn't come for talk." As if the very sound of Colin's voice swept him to new fury, Tennant raised a clenched hand. "Come out and take it, you mealy-mouthed—"

"Nate!" Blair had stepped between them, but Tennant's eyes were fixed on Colin as Nate sneered. "Still hiding behind women, are you?"

Colin lifted Blair and set her aside. "I'm not hiding behind anyone. Why should I?"

Hands at his sides, Colin took a step forward, then quietly closed the door. Dancers and spectators had drawn back and now they stood tense and breathless, their eyes on the two antagonists.

Then Tennant spoke. "So you had to go behind my back to gang up on Olsen for what he did to Alec."

"Alec had nothing to do with this," Colin answered. "Olsen's a poisoner."

"That's your story. Olsen says you planted those poisoned foxes on him."

"Why didn't he tell us that this morning?"

"He didn't have a chance. You and Selkirk's trappers were ready to jump him."

Puzzled, Colin looked at Nate. Was he really being taken in by lies?

From the kitchen came an unexpected diversion as Ma Corrigale bustled in. "So it's a fight, is it?" Hands on her hips she confronted Tennant. "Nate, I've known you ever since you were a wet-nosed baby, but if you came here tonight to stir up trouble, I'm through with you!"

Through bloodshot eyes Nate looked at Colin, then suddenly laughed. "How the women do fly to your rescue, Rae!" He turned to Irina and laughed again. "Well, why don't you stand up for him too—or do you only come to life when you're in his cabin?"

The vicious words had scarcely ceased when Blair, with her open hand, struck Tennant across the face. And contempt edged her voice: "You make me ashamed I ever knew you."

Her voice, more than the blow itself, crimsoned Tennant's cheeks and for one irresolute moment he stared about him. Then he lowered his head and took a step toward Colin.

No one moved! no one seemed to breathe. Tennant's eyes were glassy with hate and every tendon of his neck had knotted. Colin waited for the first lashing blow—but it never came.

Instead, Tennant was speaking. "You're wondering why I don't take you apart, aren't you, Rae?" The deep, rumbling voice filled the room. "You know I can do it, don't you? Well, I'm fool enough to give you the same chance you gave Olsen. Get out of here in twenty-four hours and don't let me see you in Learmonth again. Next time we meet, I'm going to get you, if I have to kill you."

Nate turned to go, but standing before him Selkirk barred the way. Dwarfed by Tennant's towering frame, the graying man seemed more than ever fragile as he stood in the doorway.

Slowly Selkirk spoke: "I could feel sorry for you, Nate, except that it's hard to feel sorry for a coward. Tonight you've struck at a woman — you've tried to ruin a person who never harmed you—and that's pretty low, even for you. Here in Learmonth you're done."

As if from pronouncing judgment, the coldly dispassionate voice ceased. In that breathless room each one waited—no man had ever spoken to Tennant in that fashion. But the trapper made no move. Something—either the quality of Selkirk's voice or Rod's utter lack of fear—held Nate as no display of physical force could hold him.

Suddenly Nate's hand rose; a whispered gasp rustled through the room and Colin stepped to Selkirk's side.

But Tennant's hand was pointing at Rae. And once again his eyes were blazing. "You're the one I'm dealing with." Nate pulled his parka tight. "Don't let me see you again—ever!"

He went out into the night.

Almost at once the room was filled with an excited buzz of voices, and at a word from Ma Corrigale, the little orchestra began playing. But the shadow remained; the spirit of the dance was broken.

Across the room, Selkirk went into the little sun porch where Ma Corrigale nursed her plants through the winter and a moment later Colin followed. In the semi-darkness, he found Selkirk standing close to the frosted window, hands clasped behind him, head bowed.

"Rod," he began, "what Nate said tonight wasn't—"

But Selkirk stopped him. "What Nate said tonight, Colin, doesn't matter." He laid both hands on Rae's shoulders. "Nate didn't hurt me tonight. I suppose there's only one really tragic hurt in the world—to love and not be loved."

Colin felt the grasp on his shoulders tighten. "What I want to say is—watch out for Tennant. I couldn't bear anything happening to you."

Together they walked back into the room where Ma Corrigale was serving cakes and coffee. Blair stood by the stove, her thoughts far distant from the dance. Colin walked over to her.

"Let's get out of this," he said. "I'll take you home."

Five minutes later, with Blair seated behind his dog team, he was heading for the school. The dogs whined when their feet touched the glassy ice and uneasily the lead dog sniffed the air. Looking up, Colin saw that the sky had filled with clouds.

White and lonely the darkened Hall loomed up beneath the newly fallen snow, as Colin drove directly to Blair's cabin. A solitary light was burning there, a few logs crackled in the stove. Without a word Blair sat down before the fire. Her face was still pale, and he could see the apprehension in her eyes.

"I'll only stay a minute," he said. "I just want you to know what Nate meant about Irina in my cabin."

"It doesn't matter, Colin."

"It does to me."

"Not tonight, Colin. Please—not tonight." Wearily she drew off her parka. "Why talk of what has happened? It's what is going to happen. Nate meant every word he said to you tonight. You can't—"

With an outburst of sudden anger Colin cut her off. "Blair, let's get one thing clear. I've taken everything from Nate I'm going to take. When I came back, you asked me to make my peace with him. I did. I've walked so softly he's beginning to think I'm afraid of him. Well, that's all over. Nate and I are headed for a showdown, and the sooner it comes the better. It wasn't just the trouble with Olsen that started Nate off tonight—he can't stand the idea of any other man existing in the same world with you. And now, whether you want to hear it or not, I'll tell you what Nate meant about Irina.

"The day I got Irina that pup—the last day we went out together we capsized. I took her to my cabin and bundled her up in blankets. We kissed and that was all. Dove came to the cabin, whether he saw us kiss or not, I don't know."

"Do you love her, Colin?"

"She's engaged to Rod. Isn't that enough?"

"It's not an answer. If you love her, you shouldn't let Rod stand in your way, for if she loves you she'll never make him happy."

Colin whirled toward her. "Listen, Blair. I'm not in love with Irina. She's Rodney's. And I don't expect to be in love with you—you are Nate's. And I only wish—"

But Blair wasn't listening.

"Father's hat and coat" — she pointed to the opposite wall—"they are not here." Running across the room, she opened the door of his bedroom. "He's gone."

Colin looked at the clock. Almost midnight. Dr. Benedict and Dove might be over at the Hall—but the place had been in darkness when he passed. They might be up in the little attic room.

Or—he was on his feet at the thought—why would not this night of the dance be a perfect time for Dove to leave on his mysterious journey across the lake?

Colin flung open he door. "If I'm not back in ten minutes," he told her, "come over to the Hall."

Hurrying across the clearing, he went directly to the shed where Dove kept his dogs. The chains lay empty and fresh toboggan tracks marked the snow.

But Dr. Benedict? Colin looked about him. No light from any of the buildings. For a second he stood outside the Hall; then, opening the door, felt his way to the second story.

Guiding himself by his finger tips, he reached the attic door. It stood open and he passed inside. No light in there, no sound. He looked toward the secret room; that, too, was black and silent. But the tiniest pencil of light was glowing down below.

Step by step he crept forward, then pressed his ear against the wall. A slight sound came out to him, a sound as of dripping water and sharply he knocked on the door. Instantly the light went out.

Colin spoke in an undertone. "This is Colin Rae, Dr. Benedict. Open the door."

Dead silence. Again Colin spoke, this time louder. "I'll give you half a minute to open that door—then I'm coming through."

Only blackness and utter quiet. Colin took a step back. Heavily his shoulder struck the door, making every board tremble, bringing down from the rafters a shower of powdery dust.

And the echoes of that blow had not died when the words came, "Wait, Please wait."

A light clicked on and slowly the door swung open. Under the solitary light Dr. Benedict's face had aged ten years. The little room was even more crowded than before. The radio set still stood in the opposite corner; dozens of ten-gallon cans lined the farther wall and on them Colin read the words "grain alcohol" — the source of smuggled liquor to the Crees?

One open crate held a huge airplane camera, and all about it drums of film were stacked high. Three trays filled with strong-smelling liquids were on the table, and beside them a photograph enlarger.

But Colin's interest was centred on a large map spread out on a packing case. It had been made by piecing together a number of photo prints, and for a long time he studied it with lowered head. Then he raised his eyes to Benedict, and spoke.

"So you picked the one sure way to break Blair's heart?"

The physician's face went gray. "Colin, I—"

Savagely Rae cut him off. "We haven't time for talk. Blair's coming up here. I don't want her to see you the way you look now. Get down to the hospital and stay there."

Benedict grasped Rae's arm. "Colin, I swear I didn't know Dove was smuggling furs!"

Incredulously, Colin's eyes searched Benedict's, then again he said, "Get down to the hospital."

The old man's hand tightened on Colin's sleeve. "But what can I do?"

"You can do one thing—tell no one, no one at all, that I was here." He pushed Blair's father toward the door.

Alone, Colin fell to studying the map, until he heard Blair running up the stairs.

"Father's down in the hospital," he whispered.

"I know."

"How did you get in?" she asked, but Colin was pointing to the map.

"What do you make of this?" he asked her.

She needed only a second. "It's a mosaic map, made from an airplane. Look—here's a shoreline. You can see the curve of the bank—and it was taken from high up. What's it mean, Colin?"

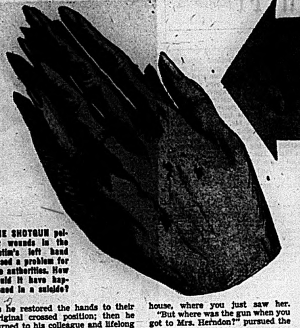
[illegible] of the [illegible] RED HAND

How wide a pattern do spreading shot-gun pellets make at distances, say, of six inches—feet? Police make tests and a 'suicide' becomes murder!

By TERRY McSHANE

"MOTHER didn't have an enemy in the world," sobbed pretty Mrs. Margaret Cotton, above, when police informed her the 'suicide' was murder.



THE SHOTGUN pellet wounds in the victim's left hand posed a problem for the authorities. How could it have happened in a suicide?

SHORTLY after noon on February 19, 1940, Deputy Sheriff Cyrus Maynard and Coroner Roy Banks jolted along the frozen road toward a farm situated four miles outside of the town of Apex, North Carolina.

They were detailed to report on the suicide of Mrs. Mary Herndon, who was known far and wide as "the most beautiful woman in Wake County."

As the officers drove along in silence they were stirred by boyhood memories and recollections of the beauteous Mary, and how many men's hearts were broken when she chose Jim Herndon to be her life's companion. This marriage proved to be a very happy one, and when Herndon died in December, 1939, Mary retired to the seclusion of a farm owned by her daughter and son-in-law, Woodrow and Margaret Cotton.

Arriving at that farmhouse, Maynard and Banks were forced to stifle a sob as they viewed the remains of the one time beauty, now twisted in agony, a gaping shotgun wound on her left side. What a tragic end, they thought, for pretty Mary Herndon.

Margaret Cotton, who had inherited her mother's comeliness sat at the kitchen table sobbing piteously, while her husband, arm across her shoulder, endeavored to comfort her.

"What happened?" Maynard asked the young farmer and his wife, who had been married less than a year.

With a catch in his voice and a visible attempt to control his emotion, Woodrow Cotton answered: "I don't know exactly, but it appears that mother took the shotgun that used to belong to her husband out to the barn and shot herself. Margy and I heard the shot and got to the barn a minute later, but we couldn't do anything for her then. She died as we were carrying her into the house."

The deputy voiced his sympathy. After a quarter of a century of happy married life the loss of her mate could very well have unbalanced Mary's mind.

The coroner called Maynard into the other room. There Banks seemed intensely absorbed in examining the victim's left hand. Without looking up he said:

"Two slugs perforated the left hand. When we got here the hands were crossed on her breast, with the right uppermost—that's why I didn't notice it at first...In order to shoot herself in the left side with a shotgun she would have had to use the left hand to reach the trigger; but as that was struck by the discharge it's certain she didn't use it.

"Of course she might have discharged the gun by pushing the trigger with a stick in her right hand, but even then the left hand would have to hold or direct the weapon."

The coroner paused for a moment as he restored the hands to their original crossed position; then he turned to his colleague and lifelong friend—

"Cy, those two hand wounds got me to speculating about the major wound. The pattern measures sixteen inches across. Now, how big was the largest contact wound you ever saw made by a shotgun? Three inches—right? And when it penetrated clothing you've always found a margin of charred material around the wound. This one has none...it is definitely not a contact wound!"

Maynard's jaw tightened. It was perfectly obvious that Mary Herndon had not committed suicide. The widow had been murdered!

It was agreed that Banks should take the body into Raleigh for further examination; and after he left, Maynard returned to the young couple in the kitchen.

"By the way, Mr. Cotton," he began carelessly, "where is the shotgun. I'll have to take a look at it, you know."

"In the barn, right where it dropped. Nobody touched it as far as I know."

"Suppose you show me just where it happened," suggested the officer.

As they walked the farmer told his story:

"It was just before noon, after 11:30, when I heard the shot. I wasn't far away, in fact I was digging a drainage ditch in the pig sty which is just down the road a piece from the barn. Margy heard it, too, and she came out of the house screaming. Oscar and Will Howard, our closest neighbors must have seen us because they came running up and helped us get mother to the house, where you just saw her.

"But where was the gun when you got to Mrs. Herndon?" pursued the deputy.

"It was on the floor, half under her body. Well, as I was saying, we ran to the barn and saw smoke coming out of the feed room. We took one look through the open door and there she was laying on the floor, white as a sheet and bleeding terribly. That's the room," he pointed to a small boxed-off space as they reached the barn.

The ruddy evidence of violence and its instrument gleamed evilly from the seed-scattered floor, and the acrid odor of gunpowder still tainted the air. Maynard looped a piece of twine through the trigger guard and another around the narrow portion of the stock; so suspended he placed it in his car.

The Howards were standing in front of the barnyard discussing the tragedy with other neighbors. They told of seeing Cotton and his wife run to the barn; but they stated they heard no gun explosion, only the scream of Mrs. Cotton.

They corroborated, too, the story told by Cotton of how they had joined the young couple in the barn and aided them in caring for the injured woman. They, like all the natives of the district, felt keenly the tragedy which had struck in the home of a neighbor.

Maynard told Cotton he could return to the house to take care of his wife; then the officer walked slowly and thoughtfully back into the barn.

AFTER HER HUSBAND'S death, Mrs. Mary Herndon, above, made her home with her daughter and son-in-law. In seeking the motive for her 'suicide,' the police brought to light a tragic and weird story of warped human emotions.

Behind some sacks of feed in the relatively small feed room, an unlocked door led into the barn proper. The barn itself had a side door leading to the yard; and this door was scarcely ten feet away. Maynard tried it. It was unlocked.

Without another word, Maynard walked to his car, climbed in and headed for Raleigh, fifteen miles to the east. There, at police headquarters, he carried the shotgun to the office of Paul Whitley, city criminologist. The crime expert agreed to examine the weapon and promised a report by the following forenoon.

The deputy then made his way to the office of Captain Robert Saunders, one of the keenest gun experts in the south. The two officers were engaged in earnest conversation for some minutes, then Capt. Saunders suggested:

"You say the shot was fired by a single-barreled, single-action shotgun loaded with six shots. I've got a Stevens in the gun room, let's go down to the pistol range and make a few ballistics experiments, maybe we'll hit upon something. It's a chance, anyway."

They packed a dozen grain sacks solid with corn husks and soil and fired into them at ranges varying from contact to ten feet. At eight feet it was found the slugs made a pattern of sixteen inches, which corresponded with the blast that took the life of Mary Herndon. Whitley carefully photographed each sack and just as carefully recorded the details.

Maynard decided to return to the farm and confront Cotton with his now scientifically corroborated conviction that his mother-in-law had not committed suicide but had been slain.

It was late evening when the couple welcomed him into their cozy kitchen where the huge cook stove generated a welcomed warmth. Under the soft yellow light of a kerosene lamp Maynard informed them that the physical evidence he had gathered precluded any possibility that Mrs. Herndon had died by her own hand.

White-lipped, Mrs. Cotton stared wildly at the officer in amazed disbelief—

"But who would kill her?" she moaned. "Mother was kind to everyone. She didn't have an enemy in the world! I can't believe what you say!"

Her husband, who sat in a grim, tight-jawed silence, waited until she had concluded; then he arose and declared: "That settles it. This morning at about eleven a car stopped out on the road about parallel with the barn; three men got out of it and started walking to the house. But suddenly they seemed to change their minds; they returned to the car and then drove away fast."

"Did you recognize them? What kind of a car were they driving?" asked the officer quickly.

"No, I didn't recognize any of them, but I did notice the car was a 1939 Ford sedan."

"Do you suspect that these men had come to see your mother-in-law?"

"I don't know what to suspect," the farmer shrugged his shoulders futilely. His wife sat in a drawn, staring silence.

The officer took his leave of the warm confines of the Cotton kitchen, but even the bitter wind that swept the farmyard could not change a suddenly inspired determination to learn if any of the neighbors had seen the suspicious Ford car mentioned by Cotton.

Far into the night Maynard drove from farm to farm interviewing the native folk. It wasn't until one in the morning, however, that he could find a farmer who had seen the mysterious car.

"About noon a 1939 Ford stopped near my mail box so I watched pretty close to see what the driver was up to. Three boys got out, passed a bottle around and whooped it up a bit. I saw colored college stickers on the windshield so I figured they were boys from State College cutting classes. As far as I could see, though, there was no harm in those youngsters. They were just having a gay old time."

Satisfied that he had run down a false lead the officer drove home to Apex for a few hours' rest. They were few, though, because Cotton's statement—that he had been digging a ditch when he heard the shot—somehow made an impression on the deputy that didn't permit him to rest.

MARGARET'S HUSBAND, Woodrow Cotton, above, could throw no light on the mystery. He heard the shot, he said, and raced to the barn.

Shortly after dawn Maynard was back at the farm examining the pig sty.

There, as he had anticipated, he found no drainage ditch and no sign of digging. Without mincing words he now confronted the young farmer with the discrepancy in his statement.

"I didn't say that I was actually digging the ditch," Cotton protested. "I was clearing away the brush so I could dig the ditch. If you take a look in the far corner of the pen you'll see the pile of brush I cut yesterday morning."

Maynard took a look. Yes, there it was, a huge pile of freshly cut brush just as the farmer had indicated.

Exasperated now, the deputy drove into Raleigh to get the results of the fingerprint examination of the shotgun.

Paul Whitely shook his head mournfully when he greeted the county officer. There wasn't even a smudge anywhere on the gun, he stated:

"Whoever used that weapon wiped it very carefully and completely." Whitely then grinned: "But whoever cleaned it may have done the job a mite too carefully and too completely."

Maynard looked sufficiently mystified for the crime expert to continue:

"I put the stock under the microscope and found out that whoever cleaned it rubbed so hard that they rubbed some of the fibres of the cloth into the tiny splinters of wood. So now I can give you this additional information: the gun was cleaned by a dark red, woolen material... Does that help any?"

Maynard thought for a moment, then brightened: "It sure does! And how it helps! Mrs. Cotton was wearing a dark red woolen dress yesterday!"

The deputy began to consider his plan of action. In every direct charge he made to Woodrow Cotton the officer had been completely repulsed. So he finally decided on an oblique method and invited Cotton to Apex; there he could talk to him without the presence of his wife.

"Why did your wife kill her mother?" was the first question he hurled at the farmer. It obviously caught Cotton off balance; but after a short lapse the farmer pleaded: "Don't say that about Margy! How could you think that Margy would kill her own mother!"

"But she wiped the gun with her dress, didn't she?"

The farmer stared at his inquisitor in unadulterated terror.

"Didn't she?" persisted the deputy.

"Yes," Cotton finally got the word out; then he hung his head. "I did my best...I tried to protect her... but I guess I'm no good at lying. Now she'll just have to tell the truth."

A half hour later the trembling, farmwife was ushered into the deputy's office. When Cotton emerged from his cell and saw his wife he ran to her and put his arm quietly and affectionately around her shoulders.

"Tell them the truth Margy," he begged.

The girl stiffened—and staring directly ahead she recited tonelessly; "I—killed—my—mother..."

"Why? Why did you kill your mother, Mrs. Cotton?" asked Maynard softly. The attractive girl's eyes had a fixed stare as she replied:

"Because she always nagged me. When she told me she was going to the feed room for some corn for the chickens I took the shotgun and followed her; but I went around the outside of the feed room and stuck the gun barrel through an opening between two boards. I aimed the gun and pulled the trigger...That's all there is to say..."

"No, not quite," objected Maynard. "Didn't you clean the gun with your dress after that?"

But the girl was beyond words—she collapsed into a frenzy of dry, choking sobs.

Cotton opened his mouth to speak, but he was silenced by a peremptory wave of the hand. Maynard brought the girl a drink of water and when she was sufficiently composed he talked to her soothingly while her husband looked on.

"There's no use in lying, Mrs. Cotton. I examined that feed room carefully yesterday and there are no cracks between the boards. Whoever killed your mother stood in that room. You've got to realize that you might be executed for this crime—you wouldn't want to die with such a terrible lie on your conscience, would you?"

The harassed girl shook her head, then lowered it on her chest.

"Then why are you lying to me?" demanded Maynard.

"Because—because mother always told me to be a good wife and obey my husband. I have always been a good wife, and I am saying what my husband told me to say...I love him more than anything else in the world..."

When Cotton heard this statement he shrugged his shoulders resignedly and said:

"Yes, I did it. I figured if she took it upon herself I could get her out of it. But I love her and it hurts to see her suffer."

Though Margaret Cotton was present after the crime, and her husband had used her dress to wipe the gun, she was fully absolved of any complicity in the murder.

Woodrow Cotton was brought to trial in April, 1940, before Judge Clawson Williams. For eight days the prosecution and defense argued, but no motive was established other than a hint that by the victim's death the defendant hoped to gain her reputed wealth.

On April 18, the jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree which carried a mandatory sentence of death in the North Carolina gas chamber.

The doomed killer subsequently appealed the verdict and the State Supreme Court granted him a new trial; this resulted in the prisoner receiving a 30-year term in the State Prison.

Deputy Sheriff Cyrus Maynard continued to plague Cotton to clear up the motive for his crime, but the best the officer ever got was: "Anybody that has a mother-in-law ought to know why I killed her."

Polish Premier Touches on Issue In Broadcast

London, Jan. 7 — (CP) — Hailing Russia's advance across the Polish border as inspiring Poles "with hopes of prompt liberation," Premier Stanislaw Mikolajczyk declared last night that a fully-organized underground government in his homeland is ready to come into the open at the opportune time.

The secret organization, the Polish premier said in a broadcast address, exists "at all levels of state administration — political, military, social and economic."

In fact, he declared, "the Polish state never ceased to exist" despite the German attack in 1939 and subsequent occupation. He added:—

"All that happened was that its organs had to become secret under the pressure of events, with the exception of those which had to remain in the open for the purpose of carrying on their duties outside the country."

A deputy premier, answerable direct to the cabinet in London, heads the underground, Mikolajczyk said, and his identity and place of residence may be made known soon.

Touching only indirectly on the Polish-Russian disagreement over location of Poland's eastern border, the premier declared that "irrespective of the political situation" the Russian drive "brings nearer the moment of our final reckoning with the Germans."

His address embraced a strong hint that Poland would not yield easily, if at all, to Russia's claims.

"We demand respect for the rights and interests of the Polish Republic, its supreme authorities and its citizens, in any war situation and at any stage of development in the international political situation," he said.

"We are carrying out our duty and claim recognition and respect for our rights — that is all."

Destroys U-Boat In Azores Waters

Fayal, The Azores, —(CP)—FO. Robert D. Thompson of Westmount, Que, considers himself to be an extremely fortunate airman. Some Coastal Command crews go through a whole tour of operations without so much as getting a sighting on a submarine. Thompson, however, had spent less than 50 hours as second pilot of an R.A.F. Flying Fortress when its depth charges destroyed a U-boat.

It was the first submarine kill by an Azores-based aircraft and Thompson said it was a good start, adding modestly that he couldn't take any credit for it.

"We were on convoy escort, just at break of day, when the front lookout saw a fully-surfaced submarine", the young flier said. "Every one went to action stations and we made a half-circuit and attacked with machine-gun fire. We went in to attack a second time, with depth charges, and our top turrent gunner picked off a couple of German gunners on the sub's deck in the process.

'We laid our depth charges alongside the sub from stem to stern as we whizzed by, while our tail-gunner got in more shooting at the Germans on the deck", continued Thompson. "After taking evasive action, the sub sank down in the stern and heeled over to port. We did another half-circuit over the conning tower, and dropped the balance of our depth charges. It was a beautiful straddle. We circled around as the sub sank stern first, its nose finally settling under the surface. Then there was a muffled underwater explosion and a big patch of oil spread on the water".

Survivors were seen in the water. Apparently they had been knocked off the deck during the first attack. A dinghy and rations were dropped.

Thompson, one of many Canadians who enjoyed a change of scenery in the South Atlantic when his squadron moved to the Azores, joined the air force in 1941. He has been overseas since last February.

LONG-LIVED GOOSE

Kingsville, Ont., — (CP)— Jack Miner, who bands ducks and geese and other birds at his sanctuary here to enable study of their migrations route, has received word of a goose, banded in the fall of 1927, being shot Dec. 11 by Julian Crew, of Worton, Kent Co., Maryland. The goose had carried the band 16 years, which meant that it had made 32 trips across the continent, Mr. Miner said.

Christmas in the home town is always something everyone away from it wants to hear about. Christmas in Belleville this year was quiet, in fact, it was the quietest Christmas many have known in years. Most minds were not on the celebration as they should have been, they were off across the seas with those who have been called away from home to make certain there will be a home to come back to. Christmas Eve saw the end of the frenzied shopping that had been going on all during the week and by six o'clock on Friday night, most of the shops had closed their doors behind the last bundle laden customer and the sales staffs and proprietors went to their own homes to prepare their own Christmas trees and arrange for their own affairs.

* * *

The Mayor Harry Rollins, accompanied by several of the Kinsmen, played Santa Claus to the children of the Children's Aid Society in and around Belleville. They brought joy to the hearts of these unfortunate youngsters and to themselves for their part they played.

* * *

As far as general activity in the old town was concerned, there just wasn't any. There were lots of private parties, but there was nothing doing in the way of dances. The theatres remained open, of course, and were open again on Saturday. Christmas day. Many servicemen and girls from the surrounding air ports and stations were invited to private homes for Christmas dinner, and a dance was held in the "Y" for others.

* * *

The fire department went out on a couple of calls with nothing serious in any single instance. There was very little crime committed over the Christmas holiday, and only a minimum of drunks were given free lodging for the night. As usual, hundreds of people left the city to return to their homes elsewhere to spend Christmas with their families. The travelling conditions in the Province was atrocious. On Sunday night it rained.

* * *

Not all the excitement happened over Christmas, however, some of it came earlier in the week when the Crystal Hotel burned. Considerable damage was done, but the firemen kept the fire from spreading and only the first floor and the ground floor were damaged to any great extent.

* * *

A lot of people came home for Christmas from out of town, most of them servicemen and women on leave. There were Pte. Bill Fulton, who is with the 48th Highlanders at Brantford, Pte. Dean Wilson, home from Fort Frontenac, AB. Seaman Jack Huffman, OS. Bob Ruttan, R.C.N.V.R., Lieut. G. C. Scott, Lieut. Art Cole of Camp Borden, AC2 Neal Eastman, stationed at Flinton, Cpl. Jennie Cathcart, C.W.A.C., came in from Kingston to spend Christmas with her parents, AW2. Theda Cole came home for the second time since she enlisted in the R.C.A.F. (WD), LAC. Harry McConnell, left for the East Coast after spending his holidays here, as did Pte. Charlie Frawley. Another service girl who came home for Christmas was LAW H. D. Clement, and that is only a few of those who braved the packed trains to come home, and are willing to face the same ordeal on the return trip.

* * *

And, now, taking New Year's Eve into the picture following Christmas, there is not very much to report. There were several dances in town and several out at the stations, one at No. 5 I.T.S., and one at Trenton. The dance at I.T.S. was held in the gymnasium and a floor show went with the general entertainment. The Trianon ball room contained a capacity crowd, many late comers being turned away from the door. Two parties were held in the Belleville Armouries, one by the officers and one by the sergeants, and both were gay events. Carrying on in traditional style, and staying close to military customs, the officers and their friends kept up the fun until the wee small hours, as did the sergeants and their friends. The Belleville Club was the scene of festivities as about two hundred members and guests got together in the club room to greet the New Year. The three theatres held midnight shows and frolics and were very well attended.

Following nearly eight months as training officers of the Argyll Light Infantry (Tank), Lieut. Doug Kalbfleisch returned to his original military unit at Ottawa on December 23rd. Lieut. Kalbfleisch is a member of the Princess Louise Dragoon Guards at Ottawa. "Doug" made many friends during his period as training officer at the Armouries here, and was highly regarded in his official capacity by both officers and the general personnel of the local reserve units.

A soldier, Pte. A. Salena, of the RCASC, Kingston, was the victim of a new "racket" practised in a local cafe just before the Christmas holiday. He was partaking of a sandwich in a down-town cafe when two girls joined him. When he produced his wallet to pay for his food, one of the girls asked to see some snapshots that were in the wallet. Later the other girl engaged the soldier in conservation. When Pte. Salena later counted his cash he was minus $20. Well, most soldiers haven't got twenty bucks, so what' Pte Salena squawking about, anyway?

Memories of the 'roarin' 20's" and the days of prohibition were brought back at the police station here last Tuesday when a portion of a bottle of lemon extract was found on the person of an inebriate who was apprehended on Front Street. In the old days it was a common sight to find part bottles of lemon extract, rubbing alcohol and even shoe polish in the pockets of drunks in the police station, remarked one police official. The modern "rubbie-dub" artist was cautioned.

That high-ranking state officials still can take time out to reply to a well-meaning practical joke despite the demands of national wartime problems was indicated here this week with the receipt of a letter by "Benny" Yanover, local haberdashery proprietor, from Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior for the United States. Benny had sent Mr. Ickes the ear-muffs after seeing a picture of Mr. Ickes holding his ears in sub-zero weather during a visit to Washington State. The picture had appeared in an issue of Life magazine. Mr. Yanover forwarded the ear-muffs and a letter with the season's compliments was received.

Award of the Air Force Cross has been made to Wing Commander Herbert M. Wilson, son of Col. H. Wilson and Mrs. Wilson, Trent Road, who has recently been posted overseas following a long term of instructional duty in Canada. Born in Belleville, Wing Cmdr. Wilson attended Queen Mary School, Belleville Collegiate and Albert College, and attended St. John's College at Winnipeg, and also the University of Manitoba.

Naval promotions of interest to the Belleville district were that of Ewart M. Bassingthwaighte of Ottawa to the rank of Acting Lieutenant Commander while holding his present appointment. Lieut. Cmdr. Bassingthwaighte formerly lived in Belleville where he was an executive official with the Stewart Warner Alemite Co.

Although the patronage was not exactly what should be expected with only one O.H.A. team in a city the size of Belleville, the 500 or so present at the Hume Arena Tuesday night went home quite satisfied with their 1944 hockey lot and they'll be back the next game and bring a friend. It's not the fact Belleville won over Trenton, but Belleville has a team of battling kids, who twice came from behind before they smothered Trenton 8-3. The fans like a fighting team, and it appears as though the Holway-Doran sextette is just that. True enough they were a mite short on condition, but so was Trenton, and it was all even on the score. However, the Belleville kids want to get in a powerful lot of skating and shooting practice before they meet the Marmora-Stirling combination.

19 American Countries Study Bolivian Revolt

Washington, Jan. 7 —(AP)— Nineteen American countries bent on rooting out Axis political influences in this hemisphere began an exhaustive joint study today of the forces that put a revolutionary government in power in Bolivia on Dec. 20.

A full exchange of information began among Washington and the 18 other capitals regarding the suspected influences which may have contributed to the accession of the new Bolivian president, Major Gualberto Villarroel.

On the basis of this information, and acting through the Inter-American Emergency Advisory Committee for Political Defence, the American countries, which include all sovereign states except Bolivia and Argentina, will then decide whether to accord the government at La Paz friendly recognition or to take measures which in effect would isolate Bolivia from its neighbors, both politically and economically.

Similarly stern procedure unquestionably will be applied to Argentina, where a revolutionary regime was set up last June, if it is found that Argentine influences were instrumental in bringing about the overthrow of the old government in Bolivia.

United States Secretary Cordell Hull explained at a recent news conference that a preliminary other American government 1,en study of Mexican or any other American government is an emergency measure necessitated by the interests of all the Americas in winning the war.

When Type-Setters Doubled For New York Reporters

(William Boers, 60 Years with The Post, Recalls Strenuous Early Days)

Newspaper type was set by hand, reporters wrote their stories in pencil, and no telephones shattered the quiet around the city desk, when William Boers went to work in the composing room of the New York Evening Post in 1883.

In November of this year, Boers would have served 60 years of faithful and continued service. Recently he was stricken with the effects of an ingrown hernia first suffered 30 years ago when he lifted an ad of the Bank of Italy, cast in a solid piece of metal.

This premature retirement has grieved him deeply, Boers said, as he looked back upon men and events in his long career.

"The greatest political campaign I remember the Post supporting was the election between McKinley and Bryan," he said. "Two hundred of us carrying McKinley banners marched in a parade behind Mr. Villard (Oswald Garrison Villard, president of the Post, 1897-1918) and Larry Godkin, the managing editor."

The blizzard of March 12, 1888 also stands out sharply in Boers' memory. "Most of the editorial writers couldn't get in," he chuckled "and the men in the composing room wrote the stories."

• •

For ten years, from 1885-1895, Boers followed up his daytime shift at the Post by reporting on sporting events in Brooklyn for the New York Sun. As the father of 13 children, he needed every cent he could lay his hands on. His son Frank joined his father in the composing room of the Post at the age of 14 and has been there for 42 years.

Boers' last active reporting beat came in 1930 during a collision of two I.R.T. trains at the Eastern Parkway Station in Brooklyn. Although receiving minor hurts himself, he covered the accident, checked names and addresses, and phoned the entire story into the Post before permitting a doctor to treat him.

• •

In the old days, Boers explained, it took a much larger staff in the composing room to get a story into type.

"On a rush job," he said, "each man was given just one line to set. When a big story was expected to break, eight or nine men were always on extra duty."

Boers was born in Rotterdam in 1860. When he was 11, an uncle —a pilot on the Holland Amerika Line—brought him and his mother to New York.

His mother was cautioned that if William was to get along in America he would have to learn a trade. At 16 he became an apprentice printer for Wynkoop and Hallenbeck, one of the biggest printing firms at the time.

His starting salary was $2.00 a week. The end of the first week, the foreman said, "William, you're too good a boy to work for $2. I'm going to give you two and a half."

Sub-Committee Of O.H.A. to Meet

Toronto, Jan. 7 — (CP) — Secretary W. A. Hewitt of the Ontario Hockey Association today announced that the O.H.A. sub-committee would meet Sunday with representatives of all senior clubs to redraft the schedule in view of the withdrawal of the Toronto R.C.A.F. team under an order from Air Force headquarters, effective yesterday.

He said the game scheduled for Monday night between Kingston Army and Toronto Navy would be played as previously scheduled.

The sub-committee also will discuss the use of Albert (Red) Tilson by Toronto Marlboros in a junior A game with Oshawa Generals. Manager Harold Ballard has been asked to explain the use of Tilson, whom Mr. Hewitt said was ineligible for junior competition due to having played several scheduled games for Kingston in the senior series. Tilson, a former Oshawa player, now is stationed in Toronto. Oshawa won the game in which Tilson played.

WOMEN IN WOMEN'S ATTIRE

St. Louis, Jan. 7 (AP) — Judge Egene J. Sartorious, presiding in domestic relations court, halted proceedings yesterday as the women retired to the witness room—although still within earshot, he said: "It is up to members of the Bar to see that their feminine clients appear in court in feminine attire. If they are ladies they should be dressed as ladies. It's getting so there is no way to tell the litigants from the attorneys."

CHICKADEE CAUGHT IN RABBIT TRAP

Shelburne, Ont., Jan. 7 — (CP)— Henry Lloyd, farmer in the Terra Nova district northeast of here, set a rabbit trap and caught a chickadee. On the leg of the frightened, nearly-exhausted bird was a tiny aluminum band bearing the numbers H 141 80-2.

Quebec Eel Catch Finds N. Y. Market

By GUY GAGNON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Quebec, (CP)—They're a wriggly lot and not nice to look at, but to New York's lower east side they are a delicacy, and so in 1943 as for many years, the bulk of Quebec's eel catch found a market there.

The catch totalled 975,000 pounds, about 50 per cent better than 1942, but considerably below the long-time average of 2,000,000 pounds and the record of 3,000,000 in 1934.

"The American market is being educated to eat Quebec eels", said F. M. Gibaut, director of commercial agencies at the Quebec department of trade and commerce. "This year, as well as last, we were unable to supply the demand. Consequently, it was unfortunate that we had such a small catch'.

"Eels, like a great many other fish, run in cycles", he added, and the general opinion is that we are on the "up cycle'."

Though the catch was higher, and prices were from seven to ten cents against last year's six, few fishermen engaged in the industry this year than last, Mr. Gibaut said, "a good many finding steadier and more remunerative work in munition factories, and because they couldn't get wire and other material necessary for maintaining wires or establishing new ones'."

Eels are caught in the vicinity of the Island of Orleans in the St. Lawrence river near Quebec, along the St. Lawrence, south shore mainland and in the Richelieu at St. Johns and Iberville, southeast of Montreal.

The greater part of the catch was shipped to the United States frozen, but about 100,000 pounds was shipped alive.

Missed Naval Battle by 24 Hrs.

Halifax, Jan. 7 (CP)—Britain-bound with a cargo of wounded the hospital ship Lady Nelson just missed a ringside seat at the recent naval battle in the Bay of Biscay by 24 hours, crew members revealed.

The hospital ship had picked up a complement of sick and wounded from Sicily and Italy, and was taking them to Britain at the time. Just 24 hours after she passed through the bay the engagement between a flotilla of German destroyers and a small British force was fought. She barely missed seeing a German air attack on an Allied convoy as well.

RECTAL SORENESS AND PILE TORTURE
QUICKLY RELIEVED.

If you are troubled with itching piles or rectal soreness, do not delay treatment and run the risk of letting this condition become chronic. Any itching or soreness or painful passage of stool is nature's warning and proper treatment should be secured at once. For this purpose get a package of Hem-Roid from J S McKeown or any I.D.A. or other drug store, and use as directed. This formula which is used internally is a small, easy to take tablet, will quickly relieve the itching and soreness and aid in healing the sore tender spots. Hem-Roid is pleasant to use is highly recommended and it seems the height of folly for any one to risk a painful and chronic pile condition when such a fine remedy may be had at such a small cost. If you try Hem-Roid and are not entirely pleased with the results your druggist will gladly return your money.

Denies Arms Co. Party to Any Cartel Agreement

Bridgeport, Conn., Jan. 7 —(AP) —President C. K. Davis of the Remington Arms Company, Inc., one of the firms accused by the Justice Department in a civil suit filed in New York of conspiring to restrain trade through an international cartel system, denied that his company had "at any time been party to any cartel agreement."

In a statement issued last night, Davis said:

"This company as yet has no basis on which it can comment specifically. We have been served with no legal process and are unfamiliar with the particulars of the charges.

"We deny, however, that we have at any time been party to any cartel arrangement. We have an agreement with Imperial Chemical Industries (a British concern named in the action) which is confined to an exchange of technical information and an opportunity to acquire non-exclusive licences in connection with technological improvements relating to the manufacture of ammunition. This agreement does not in any way affect sales or markets . . ."

Boys' Incendiary Club Blamed for Fires

Chelsea, Mass., Jan. 7 — (AP) — Youthful applicants have to start at least two fires to become members of a neighborhood "boys' club" in this city.

The incendiary membership rules were discovered by police and fire department officials after arrest of a 14-year-old boy accused of setting his own house on fire in order to get into the "club."

Fire officials attributed the desire to join the "boys' club" as the underlying cause of at least 12 incendiary blazes which occurred within two square blocks since Dec. 18. The property loss was estimated at $10,000.

Test Lighting Gives London Borough Glimpse of Lights

London, Jan. 7—(CP Cable)—A glimpse of what it will be like "when the lights go on again" was afforded the London borough of Deptford by test lighting the borough's main street yesterday.

The lights went on just before blackout time and people rushed into the street to see the unfamiliar spectacle. Children, some of whom had never seen the lamps lit, exclaimed to one another as they crowded the roadway.

"I had quite forgotten what it looked like," said James Marshall. "Isn't it grand."

The lights of London, like those all over Britain, have been blacked out since a few days before war broke out in 1939.

Activity along the 8th Army front Thursday was confined to fighting patrols.

NEW YORK EXCHANGE

New York, Jan. 7.— (AP)—Buyers turned to rails and specialties in today's stock market and virtually ignored most industrial and utility leaders.

Prices stiffened around noon and fractional advances were well distributed.

New 1943-44 highs were posted for Delaware & Hudson and preferreds of Armour. In the advancing column were Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, Great Northern, Bell Aircraft, Woolworth, U.S. Steel, Goodrich, Oliver Farm, Allied Chemical and Philip Morris. Occasional losers included Chrysler, Westinghouse, General Electric, Eastman Kodak, J. I. Case, Sears Roebuck and Du Pont.

Canadian issues trended upward, with Canadian Pacific, McIntyre and Hiram Walker all showing gains. Dome Mines and Lake Shore were unchanged.

34 C. C. F. Members Meet in Caucus

Toronto, Jan. 7—(CP)—Thirty-four C.C.F. members of the Ontario Legislature opened a two-day pre-session caucus today and E. B. Jolliffe, Ontario leader, said that conclusions reached by the recent Regina conference of the C.C.F. on financial agreements between the federal and provincial governments were discussed. They "will have to be reviewed," he said.

Post-war conditions also were discussed, he said.

Mr. Jolliffe declined comment on the defeat on C.C.F. candidates in the recent civic elections in Toronto.

"There will be something arising out of the civic election next week," he said, declining to amplify the statement.

Poultry Market Remains Quiet

Toronto, Jan. 7 —(CP)— During the holiday season there was a very good movement of poultry through wholesale and retail channels but, during the current week the fresh dressed poultry market has assumed the usual post-holiday quiet, the Dominion Department of Agriculture reports. Receipts of fresh dressed chicken have shown a slight increase and any surplus is being packed for storage. Supplies of fowl are equal only to the slow demand for this kind of poultry.

Two cars of mixed poultry were offered from the Prairie Provinces this week.

Receipts of live chicken show a slight increase and fowl are more plentiful on the live poultry market. A heavy volume of pullets is reported arriving weighing 4 to 5 lbs. for which dealers are paying 26 to 27 cents a lb.

Dealers are quoting producers and country shippers for dressed poultry.

Montreal, Jan. 7 (CP)—A Norwegian press attache release here today quoted reports to Norwegian authorities in London that the Gestapo chief in Norway, Stahdartenfuehrer Fehlis, admitted "possibility of sabotage" in the terrific explosion that rocked Oslo harbor last December after a Nazi ammunition ship blew up.

Reports received in London, the release added, mentioned that about 250 buildings were damaged in the evacuated area of Oslo harbor. The damage was "greatest" in Munkedamsveien, one of the main thoroughfares in downtown Oslo.

Casualtes, the release continued, included at least 22 Norwegians killed and 250 injured.

ARMY TEAMS OUT OF MEMORIAL OR ALLAN CUP GAMES

"Now We Must Carry Puck to Berlin," Says Spokesman at Ottawa

Ottawa, Jan. 7 — (CP) — Army teams and army personnel — like R.C.A.F. men — are out of Allan and Memorial Cup competition this year, it was announced here today in a statement from the Office of Defence Minister Ralston.

"The Canadian Army has always regarded hockey as a great sport— but now we must carry the puck to Berlin," said an official spokesman quoted in the minister's statement.

"We see no reason to change our attitude in this matter now. The first task of the Canadian Army is the defeat of the enemy.

"Participation in hockey or any other sport cannot be allowed to delay the complete and earliest training of every soldier for despatch overseas.

"For this reason, like the Air Force, the Army cannot approve participation by Army teams or personnel in the Allan Cup or Memorial Cup competitions"

The Army statement of policy came two days after an R. C. A. F. statement reiterating a December ruling that airmen were banned from the classic junior and senior cup competition.

Kingston Affected

The army ruling means that senior army teams in Nanaimo, B.C., Calgary, Red Deer, Alta.; Winnipeg, Kingston, Ont., Sydney, N.S., and possibly Saint John, N.B., are forced to drop any play-off ambitions.

Many clubs through the country also would lose their army players if they made the play-offs. Ottawa Commandos for instance, would lose six men.

The latest move in the hockey picture means that the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association is forced to adopt a "shadow' play-off schedule with the remaining civilian and possibly naval teams

The "shadow" play-off system will probably include representative teams from Halifax, Quebec Senior, Ontario Hockey Association, Thunder Bay, Saskatchewan and coast loops.

The army statement, unlike the air force set no specific deadline for army personnel to be withdrawn from play and a headquarters spokesman said he assumed army personnel could continue to participate in their existing district hockey leagues but would not be permitted to continue into inter-district play-offs.

The air force deadline was Jan. 6.

Statement in October

Last October, defence headquarters said in the statement that, while every encouragement would be given to Canadian soldiers to play hockey and participate in other sports, such participation would not be allowed to interfere with normal training and duties of the individual soldier concerned.

"If a player enlisted for active service and is up to the standards for overseas service he will, on completion of his training, be dispatched overseas," the October statement said.

Since that time a number of well-known hockey players in the army have been sent to the United Kingdom.

"Army personnel, being either in training or in readiness to proceed overseas, cannot engage in any activity which might take them away from their stations for periods of time which would be necessary if they became eligible for cup play-downs," said the new statement today.

Appian Way

News despatches relate that the Anglo-American Fifth Army is on the Appian Way, notes The Kitchener Record. Completed by Julius Caesar, it is known as the queen of those radiating roads, all of which lead to Rome.

The Appian Way was begun in 312 B.C. by Appius Caecus who planned it as far as Capua now occupied by the Allies. Later, it was extended to Brindisi on the heel of Italy, a distance of 360 miles. The motive for the road was military. Earlier a Samnite army had trapped and beaten a Roman army in Southern Italy. Rome's reply was to begin the Appian Way in order to improve its communication with skirmishing armies.

The road is amazing in construction. It was laid on a direct route with cuttings through hills and rocks. The hollows were filled and gradients were easy. Throughout its length it is the straightest line between two points. Paving consisted of slabs of lava fitted closely and laid on rubble below which were flat stones eight inches thick, with a foundation below that. That surface was rounded for drainage. There are remains of sidewalks with seats, together with monuments and milestones.

The Appian Way is a surviving symbol of the glory that was Rome. Now it is serving the Allies on their march to take the city.

Canadian Airmen Had Field Day Against Japanese

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Ottawa, Jan. 7 — (CP) — Two Canadian airmen — FO. V. G. B. Buttler of Edmonton and Flt. Lt. H. Legraw of Norland, Ont. — destroyed one Japanese bomber, probably destroyed another and damaged two more on New Year's Eve, while operating with a Far East fighter squadron south of Chittagong in Bengal.

This announcement was made in the R.C.A.F.'s official summary of operations during the last week.

Buttler and Legraw are in an all-Empire squadron attached to Air Marshal Sir John Baldwin's Far East tactical air force. Their successes were part of the full squadron's New Year's Eve score of 13 Japanese aircraft destroyed and nearly as many probably destroyed.

This was "The most outstanding success of any fighter squadron on that front," the R.C.A.F. said.

FO. Buttler "destroyed one bomber, probably destroyed another and damaged a third," said the weekly summary. Legraw "damaged a bomber although enemy fighters were on his tail."

This reference to Far East operations was the first time the air force summary has included references to Canadian activities there.

The rest of the summary dealt with operations over Europe and on overseas coastal patrol.

Two big raids on Berlin and one on Stettin, important supply base for the Russian front, formed the major activities for bomber squadrons based on Britain.

Says Real Estate Boards Will Resist Freezing House Leases

Hamilton, Jan. 7.—(CP)—Charles E. Purnell, president of the Canadian Association of Real Estate Boards, announced today the Association will resist any attempt to freeze house leases throughout Canada for the purposes of allaying local conditions.

It is thought such an attempt might be made if Montreal tenants carry out a threatened march on Ottawa to demand freezing of all residential leases. The Montreal Tenants Association proposed the march last Wednesday in protest of a Prices Board order which froze leases in multiple dwellings but made provision for certain exceptions.

Mr. Purnell said the Association lays blame for much of the present housing dissatisfaction on the "short-sighted policy" of the Rentals Administration.

Mayor Raynault Meets Workers To Settle Strike

Montreal, Jan 7. (CP) — Mayor Adhemar Raynault early this afternoon, went into conference with the civic white collar workers strike leaders to submit to them a proposal which might bring the dispute to a satisfactory conclusion".

Mr. Raynault, who would not reveal what the proposal was, conferred with Union Leaders after having earlier in the day met L. A. Potvin, chairman of the Quebec Municipal Commission controlling the city's finances.

Union leaders, this morning, had reported that after 18 days of strike negotiations were "taking a favorable turn and that a settlement was in sight".

The statement was made after union officials— representatives of the Civic Employees National Syndicate— spent yesterday in Quebec where they were scheduled to hold meetings with provincial government members and Adhemar Raynault, mayor of Montreal.

STILL CONFINED IN DOORS

Washington, Jan. 7 — (AP)— President Roosevelt, still confined to his quarters after an attack of grippe, worked today on his budget recommendations for the fiscal year beginning July 1. He continued work, too, on his annual message to Congress.

Desperate Rumania Tries to Throw Off Nazi Shackles

London, Jan. 7 — (CP) — Rumania with the Russian army only 70 miles from her borders is desperately trying to throw off Axis shackles, according to word reaching qualified neutral diplomats here today.

Young King Michael has been conferring with opponents of the present pro-Nazi government, these reports said.

Stockholm dispatches quoted the newspaper Tidningen as saying Michael now is staying at Arad near the Hungarian border and his departure from Bucharest "caused the widest possible speculation."

But neutral diplomats were inclined to discount a published report from Turkish sources that Michael is preparing to fly to London to seek peace terms.

CANADIANS HIGHLY TRAINED SOLDIERS NOW

Realistic training indeed is that which Canadians are undergoing overseas. Here the men leap from assault boats under a thin smoke screen spread by the Royal Navy, which will have a major role in the invasion, and half-wade, half scramble ashore waist-deep in water. Bren gun bullets whine overhead.

City of Windsor Spitfire Squadron 'Hot' Outfit in Italian Drive

By ALLAN NICKLESON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 7. (CP)— The Royal Canadian Air Force crest bears the Latin inscription "through adversity to the stars". No better words could be found to describe Canada's front-line boys who make up the City of Windsor Spitfire Squadron in Italy.

From a humble beginning where lack of action struck at morale, the squadron formed part of the desert air force that swept through Africa, Sicily and Southern Italy in support of the glorious Eighth Army. Today there's no, "hotter" outfit in the Mediterranean war theatre.

A celebration was in the making as two other Canadian war correspondents and myself, on a tour of the battle areas, plowed through thick mud past canvas living quarters to the officers' mess tent on a plain near Foggia. There was excited talk from within—and with reason.

Less than an hour previously, on the squadron airfield a couple of miles distant, a four-plane patrol taxied to a halt, parachute-laden figures clambered laboriously from the cockpits and shouted in repetition "Bert got two". The cry spread like wildfire around the tents and dispersal bays.

Sqdn. Ldr. Bert Houle, holder of the D.F.C., from Massey, Ont., lighted a cigaret as he emerged from his fighter. He had just destroyed two ME109s within 15 seconds and, quite frankly, he didn't believe it.

Action Very Fast

The action was so fast that Bert, newly-appointed to command the squadron, figured he was shooting at the same plane all the time. But everyone else on the patrol, as well as British military observers on the mound, saw his blazing guns destroy two and raise the squadron score to four destroyed and a probable within three days.

Now the fighters were gathered around a glowing fire in an improvised brazier that once had been a gasoline tin and listening intently to accounts of the fight. A radio blared in one corner and bespectacled, tousle-haired Pilot Officer Pen Power, Squadron Adjutant and son of Canada's Air Minister, acted as bartender. The "bar" was a keg of Italian wine atop a rickety table.

Received D.F.C.

An electrical engineer in a mine before the war, Bert raised his total to seven destroyed, one probably destroyed and five damaged. He received the D.F.C. for shooting down two Stukas in one day at El Alamein just prior to the big Allied drive that drove the Germans out of Africa.

Bert's latest feat came three days after the squadron destroyed two fighters in a dog-fight over the Sangro.

It was only recently the squadron saw much action—and even now it's a problem to engage German pilots because they turn tail at the sight of Spitfires. Formed in England two years ago last November, the unit soon transferred to the Middle East where it first was engaged in aircraft delivery, patrol and coastal defence. That "browned off" the personnel.

Norwegian Destroyer Attacked Scharnhorst at 400-500 Yards

Montreal, Jan. 7. (CP)—A Norwegian press attache release here today quoted Cmdr. Terence Maunsell as saying at a press conference in London yesterday that "the most daring attack of the whole fleet action against the German battleship Scharnhorst" when she was sunk recently, was carried out by the Norwegian destroyer Stord.

Cmdr. Maunsell, fleet torpedo officer on Admiral Sir Bruce Fraser's staff, was quoted as saying that the Stord, which accompanied the British naval forces engaged in the action, fired her torpedoes from 400 to 500 yards distance.

Cmdr. Maunsell said the captain of the British destroyer Scorpion told him "I went in pretty close, but the Stord went just straight ahead at the Scharnhorst and I thought she was going to ram her".

Another British officer said: "It is a sheer miracle that the Stord and Scorpion were not hit by the heavy fire from the Scharnhorst".

When the captain of the Stord (his name is withheld because his family is still in Norway) was asked how many torpedo hits he claimed, he replied: "I do not claim any, but I just do not see how they have missed".

Food Production of England, Wales, Increases, Agriculture Improves

Nearly 600,000 Acres of Good Lands Taken for Airports and Other Military Installations—6,000,000 of New Land Utilized for Farming

Ottawa, Jan. 7 — (CP) — Almost 600,000 acres of good lands in England and Wales has been taken over for airports and other military installations but food production has been increased and agriculture generally may be in better condition after the war than it was before, Lord De La Warr, Chairman of the United Kingdom Agricultural Research Council, told a press conference here today.

With food supplies threatened by shipping losses, the United Kingdom had embarked early in the war on a great program of increased land utilization. About 6,000,000 new acres had been plowed since the war started, and hundreds of thousands of other acres reclaimed — some of them in areas not plowed since the time of the Romans.

Before the war, the United Kingdom produced about 45 per cent of its food needs.

"Now we feed ourselves to the extent of about 70 per cent of our total requirements, including the provision of supplies to our own troops and those of other nations within our borders," said Lord De La Warr. "Perhaps we'll be able to raise this by some five per cent in the present year."

In Canada to consult with technical agriculturists and address meetings in a number of cities, Lord De La Warr said that in 1940 particularly farming was conducted as if the English fields were in the front line.

He said that on his own farm in Sussex he found 500 incendiary bombs after a night of raids on London and that some 70,000 were dropped on the farms of Kent alone.

Japs Resort To Mean Trick In Radio Broadcast

Halifax, Jan. 7 (CP) — How a soldier's voice lived on the airwaves for months after he was reported dead was told here yesterday by a brother, Bert Pancoe of Winnipeg, a telegrapher in the Royal Canadian Navy.

Pte. Michael W. Pascoe was one of the Canadian soldiers who went to Hong Kong just before the garrison fell to the Japanese at Christmas time, 1941.

Last August his family had a letter from his doctor saying he had died from beri beri, and a short while later official confirmation of his death came from Ottawa. But for months afterwards people in different parts of the world heard his voice on the radio—the last time in Australia last month, his brother said.

"Hello, mum," said the voice of the dead soldier, then came a few words of greeting and his name and address.

Comparisons Of Losses In the Navies

(From the Chicago Daily News)

A recent compilation of British naval losses, released by the British Information Service, offers opportunity for comparison with a similar list of American losses, recently issued by the naval department.

Of all classes of naval ships in four years of war, the British have lost 505. In two years of war, we have lost 132. These seem like staggering losses, but our own figures on the Japanese total 881, not including 862 damaged. The German navy, small to begin with, has been virtually eliminated. The Italian Navy has ceased to be a factor, with most of the ships in our hands. Similarly, we have most of the French Navy.

However, the British total includes yachts, sloops, drifters, tugs, tenders, minelayers and other miscellaneous craft, among which the largest losses were 144 trawlers and 39 minesweepers. This leaves only 240 warships, and that total includes 14 armed merchant cruisers and two small aircraft carriers that are converted from merchantmen, and among small craft, 22 corvettes and one frigade. In the major categories of battleships, battle cruisers, aircraft carriers, cruisers, destroyers and submarines the British have lost 201. In the same categories we have lost 69.

In battleships the British have lost the Royal Oak, Prince of Wales and Barham. We have lost the Arizona. Germany has lost the Bismarck and the Admiral Graf Spee and the Tirpitz badly damaged. The Japanese have lost three. Of capital ships the British also lost the battle cruisers Hood and Repulse.

Of aircraft carriers the British have lost five, Courageous, Glorious, Ark Royal, Hermes and Eagle. We have lost four, Lexington, Yorktown, Wasp and Hornet. This does not count converted ships, of which the British have lost Audacity and Avenger, and we have lost the Liscome Bay. Japan has lost six, including Hiryu, Soryu, Kaga, Akagi and Ryukaku.

In cruisers the British have lost 26, while we have lost nine — Astoria, Atlanta, Chicago, Helena, Houston, Juneau, Northampton, Quincy and Vincennes. We list Japanese cruiser losses as 52 sunk, four probably sunk and 96 damaged. Germany lost the Blucher, Koenigsberg and Karlsruhe in Norway.

In destroyers the British have lost 107; we have lost 39, and the Japanese have lost 119 sunk, 24 believed sunk and 126 damaged. In submarines the British have lost 58; we have lost 15, and the Japanese have lost 15 sunk; one probably sunk and six damaged.

18 German Planes Destroyed Without Loss to Americans

London, Jan. 7 (CP)—American fighter planes which escorted heavy bombers in Wednesday's assault on the German U-boat and ship-building centre of Kiel destroyed 18 Nazi aircraft without loss for a new American fighter record over Germany. The previous record was 16.

Fifteen Messerschmitt-109s, two Dormier-207s and a Focke-Wulf 190 were knocked from the skies, and several other German craft were damaged. The trip was described as the deepest fighter penetration yet made into northwest Germany —a distance of some 465 airline miles.

Dr. David Irwin of Navan Killed at Crossing, Struck by C.P.R. Train

Navan, Ont., Jan. 7—(CP)—Dr. David Irwin, physician in this community, 20 miles east of Ottawa, for 23 years, was killed today at a level crossing at nearby Blackburn when his automobile was struck by a Canadian Pacific Railway train.

Born in Ottawa, Dr. Irwin was a graduate of Queen's University, Kingston, Ont., and practised medicine at Cumberland, Ont., for some years. He is survived by his widow, one daughter and five sons.

24 Wounded Canadian Veterans From Bay of Quinte District Arrive in Kingston on Special

Three Men From Belleville Glad to be Home But Some Need More Hospital Attention

THREE FROM PICTON

Kingston Jan. 7 (CP)—Twenty-four wounded Canadian Active Army men returning from different war zones, detrained here early today from a Toronto-bound hospital train. Stretcher cases were taken to Kingston military hospital.

Those able to return to their homes were taken to the district depot at Fort Frontenac to await necessary papers.

The men included:

Lieut. H. A. A. R. Kirkpatrick, Peterborough; Sigmn. J. R. Buchan, Peterborough; Sgt. J. K. Jenkins, Picton; Pte. R. E. Shannon, Picton; Pte. L. J. Vancleaf, Wellington; Pte. H B. Hyatt, Trenton; Sigmn. P. C. Dempsey, Trenton; Gnr. A. V. Woods, Gananoque; Gnr. B. G. Baker, Gananoque; Gnr. G. W. Clark, Havelock; Pte. S. E. W. Foster, Brockville; Gnr. J. L. Lalonde, Calabogie; Gnr. F. R. Woodcock, Madoc; Gnr. K. McLeod Gord, Smiths Falls; Gnr. K. L. Giffin, Smiths Falls; Pte. R. Leadbeater, Kingston; Sgt. J. G. Halliday, Kingston; Tpr. A. Wilson, Belleville; Pte. J. P. Seames, Belleville; Pte. A. St. Denis, Belleville; Pte. M. C. P. Douglas, Fort Stewart; Gnr. L. N. Boire, Pembroke; Pte. J. L. Lewis, Lansdowne; Pte. J. J. Ireland, Peterborough.

A Fine Trip

"It was a fine trip," remarked Pte. Foster, S. D. who was stationed at Kingston for a few months in 1940. "When we reached Canada I thought it looed just like one big Christmas tree. The food was fit for a king and on the ship too it was wonderful."

Pte. Foster is waiting eagerly a reunion with his wife at his Brockville home, where his little daughter, Kathleen, born since his departure overseas, awaits him.

All surroundings seemed different, he said, "I feel like I want to stay right here," he said. Cities in Canada through which the train passed were good to returning troops. Almost everywhere people passed out cookies, chocolates, smokes, he related.

Most men waiting at Fort Frontenac for travel warrants to return to their respective homes on disembarkation leave, spoke of the wonderful spirit of cooperation, which pervaded the army overseas. "It's improving all the time," said Pte. Foster.

Signalman Dempsey expressed feelings with two words: "I'm quite happy." Signalman Dempsey lost an eye during battle drill training at an English school.

Apple Pie on Order

"It was in the first divisional signals," stated the veteran, "this is first time I've seen Canada for four years" He mentioned two sounds which particularly appealed to him when he touched soil in Canada again, the lusty bellow of Canadian locomotive whistles and the sound of Canadian girls' voices. "Apple pie is on the order," he remarked with a smile when asked how he felt about coming back to mom's cooking again after army rations overseas.

"Since April last year, this young signalman has been in hospital. "I had a good time overseas," he said, but added he would miss his pals in the old unit.

All men appeared tired although there seemed to be a bit of excitement and expectation on each face. They explained their tiredness because the train arrived early this morning and they lost sleep.

Hopes to See Baby

"I hope to see my baby boy for the first time this evening," said Gnr. Woods, who suffered an ear injury during gun practice training in England.

Gnr. Clark said he returned home due to a hip injury received during training in England. "I will be glad to get a real Canadian meal as I did not like the food in England," he said.

Sgt. Jenkins said he suffered a severe hand injury serving in the Canadian army in Sicily. He said he was feeling fine and hoped to be returned to civilian life.

Sgt. Jenkins said he was in the 8th Army and had the privilege of meeting General Montgomery.

Russians Keenest Air Mechanics States Returned Canadian Airman

By JACK BRAYLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Jan. 7. (CP)—The Russians are the keenest combatants in this war—and probably the best air mechanics, says Warrant Officer J. C. Maffre of Outremont, Que., one of the band of air force veterans returning from the European and North African battlefronts.

Back from operational tours that took them as far north as Murmansk and Spitsbergen, east to Berlin and south to Egypt: the airmen—some on stretchers and others holding the arms of orderlies—got off a hospital train early this morning as an air force band played a bright serenade.

A large crowd soberly watched the procession as photographic flash bulbs lighted up faces strained from wounds, illness and the long trip home.

With a lifetime experience packed into his 22 years, W.O. Maffre has a great admiration for the Russians. His coastal command squadron was stationed in Murmansk protecting convoys converging on that Arctic port from Britain.

"You see," Maffre said, "they're right in the front line and they now the necessity of war better than the rest of us. Perhaps that's it. Anyhow I never saw anywhere such a keen lot of air mechanics as the Russians attached to our squadron. They sure made things hum in the repair hangar—and the job was done better than anywhere, they took their work so seriously and were so thorough."

After a turn escorting the ships carrying men to the North African invasion, Maffre went back to Murmansk but didn't stay long. His plane was shot down by a Junkers 88 and his pilot killed. Another crew member brought the craft to a safe landing and he and his companions were picked up by a British motor launch.

His next operations were with one know the necessity of war better light squadrons.

"Our outfit is claiming four U-boats as a result of this new device," Maffre said.

Criticizes U. S. Policy Regarding Shipshaw Project

Washington, Jan. 7 — (AP) — Criticism of the United States government's agreement with the Aluminum Company of Canada to finance the construction of the Shipshaw project in Canada came from two sources today in the wake of the recent announcement of the United States War Production Board that aluminum production lines in America were being closed down.

Rep. John Coffee (Dem., Wash.) said the closing of the United States plants verified predictions made by himself and other members of Congress when the House Rules Committee was considering Coffee's resolution calling for an investigation of the Shipshaw deal.

At the same time Interior Secretary Harold Ickes in a letter to Rep. Homer Angell (Rep., Ore.) said he did not believe it desirable to transfer lend-lease demands for aluminum filled by Pacific northwest plants to the Canadian project.

The United States government advanced approximately $67,000,000 to construct the Shipshaw plant and Coffee said the contract provided payment should be made in aluminum. If all aluminum contracted for was not taken, he said, the United States government would pay a penalty of six cents a pound on it.

"Such a contract is a mistake," Coffee said, "but I contend it is better to pay the penalty than to close American plants which produce aluminum at a cost of six cents a lb. less than the Canadian plant."

Spooky Goings On Start Hunt At Eastern Passage

Halifax, Jan. 7—(CP)—Residents of quiet Eastern Passage, across harbor from here, are hunting spooks and "haunts" as the result of a series of mysterious goings-on reported at the home of the Louis Hilchie family there during the past two weeks.

The whole thing started Christmas eve when three loud, and traditionally hollow knocks resounded through the one and a half storey house. Since then many sinister things have happened, the Hilchies reported to police.

A washing machine moved across the floor under its own power, tables tipped while the Hilchies were seated at them, scissors fell off a shelf, a bowl of soup floated through the air and spilled over one of the children, alarm clocks and kettles of boiling water tipped from their appointed places — all apparents without human aid, the Hilchies vow.

Says Foot Seized Twice

To cap it all, Mrs. Hilchie reported, an unseen hand twice seized her foot and wrenched off the heel of her shoe. The second time she fell downstairs and broke her ankle, wrenched her shoulder and hurt her head.

Reporters and photographers visited the house, but saw no unusual happenings. Royal Canadian Mounted Police are investigating, but have turned up nothing supernatural.

The happenings at Eastern Passage recalled a "spook scare" last spring at Bible Hill, near Truro, and the famous "Mary Ellen" tales of 20 years ago.

Strange and spooky events were reported at the Bible Hill home of Mrs. Lucy Langille, but cause of them never was found.

The "Mary Ellen" case saw an elderly couple driven from their home near Antigonish, after a two-month "reign of terror."

Mary Ellen MacDonald was the adopted daughter of an old couple of the same name, and a series of strange happenings and fires finally resulted in her detention in an institution.

BRILLIANT M. P. REVEALED TO BE TITO'S ADVISER

Germans Blame Defeats on Member of British House Who Rose in Ranks From Private to Brigadier

By SYDNEY GRUSON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 7 — (CP) — The foreign office's "brilliant young man" has become the German's "notorious Maj. William Jones" who is, as Anthony Eden described him in the House of Commons, "the honorable and gallant member for Lancaster."

The man who is all these things is 32-year-old, six-foot-five Brig. Fitzroy Hew Royle Maclean disclosed by Eden as leader of the British military mission to Tito's Yugoslav partisans.

Maclean found the foreign office "a bore" when war broke out, so he became a soldier. As a soldier he's had a hair-raising career that reads like Buck Rogers fiction. Yet to the man-in-the-street he was practically a total stranger when Eden, in the parliamentary language that forbids identifying a member by name, revealed him as Tito's adviser.

Other M.P.'s asked each other who was the member for Lancaster and weren't much wiser when they heard the name Maclean. He had won a by-election in 1941 and had not been in his seat often.

But early this year, the lanky young M. P. in army uniform said to an official of the House:—

"Look here, if anyone wants to get hold of me in the next few months — I don't suppose anyone will bother, but if they do — you might say they can reach me thru Barclays Bank in Picadilly."

Maclean hasn't been in London since. But not long afterwards British army officers were reported aiding Tito as members of his headquarters staff and occasionally leading a raiding or bridge-blowing party.

The Germans really began to fume about these British officers last summer and put a price on the head of the "notorious Maj. William Jones" whom they blamed for their October defeats by the Partisans. They said Jones had been dropped by parachute into Yugoslavia.

Enlisted as Private

Officially it was said only that the Jones' nom-de-guerre hid the identity of a British officer with a brilliant record in North Africa, but London friends identified Maclean as the officer. The parachuting into Tito's stronghold fitted into his character.

When he left the Foreign Office he joined a Highland regiment as a private. He qualified as a paratrooper, rose rapidly through the ranks to his commission, then to a captaincy and was made a brigadier before beginning his Yugoslav mission.

In North Africa he led a volunteer British and French force which set off into the desert and wasn't heard of again for several weeks. Suddenly the "mystery column" pounced, 500 miles behind Rommel's rear in a daring raid on the Nazi general's supplies at Bengazi. A few weeks later Maclean was back at British headquarters. The French gave him the Croix-de-Guerre.

An only child whose parents live in Switzerland, Maclean entered the Foreign Office when he was 22, became a third secretary in the Paris embassy and won promotion to second secretary at Moscow, where he remained from 1937 to 1939.

He learned Russian and Serbo-Croat. He was rated highly at the Foreign Office and with his Edwardian mustache, dry humor and perpetual calmness in any situation was "a typical-looking member of the Foreign Office," his friends have said jokingly.

Ford Motor Co. Ordered to Give Holiday With Pay

Ottawa, Jan. 7—(CP)—The National War Labor Board today directed the Ford Motor Co., of Windsor, Ont., to institute one week's vacation, with pay for hourly-rated employees, who have one year or more seniority.

The board's action was taken in allowing an appeal by the United Automobile Workers (C. I. O.) against a decision of the Ontario War Labor Board which "authorized" the company to grant vacations.

Some 14,000 workers are affected by the decision.

Details of the vacation plan will be the subject of negotiations between the company and union, the plan to be finally approved by the board.

The union said rest periods were necessary in maintaining the health and morale of workers. Granting of vacations would be in line with a policy followed by the board in other cases.

Union co-operation had contributed to a reduction in absenteeism, and absence from work could be further cut if vacations were granted.

U. S. BOMBERS GIVE LUDWIGSHAFEN 'DEATH BLOW'

Mosquito Bombers Hit Nazi Targets Without Loss

American Raiders On Chemical Works Turn Ludwigshafen Into 'Sea of Fire'

42 NAZI PLANES DOWNED

By W. W. HERCHER
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 8. (AP)—Mosquito bombers, raiding Germany for the seventh consecutive night, hit targets in the Western Reich Friday night without loss in the wake of a strong American daylight attack which Swedish reports said gave the chemical city of Ludwigshafen a "death blow".

Stockholm's Morgon Tidningen declared the force of hundreds of heavy-bombers which drove deep into southwest Germany yesterday bombed the I. G. Farbem poison gas works at Ludwigshafen and that the city "now looks completely flattened out".

Quoting private reports, the paper said block-blusters and incendiaries were dropped, setting giant fires which turned the town into "a sea of fire".

Stockholm reports also said the twin city of Mannheim was struck.

A joint British-American communique released today failed to identify the targets. Neither did the British designate where their Mosquitos hit Friday night.

One U.S. pilot described the day light formations as "the largest number of American planes I have ever seen on one mission".

42 Fighters Downed.

In yesterday's large-scale operation, 42 German fighters were shot down.

United States fighters, making a round trip flight of some 800 mile, accompanied the heavy bombers to yesterday's targets in southwest Germany. R.A.F., R.C.A.F., and Allied fighters hovered along the return route to give additional protection.

The communique said the bombers pressed home their attack through heavy clouds. Twelve bombers and seven fighters were lost. All Canadian planes returned safely.

Enemy opposition encountered in the operation generally was weak, although some bomber and fighter groups were intercepted by numerous Nazi fighters.

Of the 42 enemy planes down, the bombers accounted for 33 and the fighters nine.

While the big American formation was penetrating into Germany, more than 750 R.A.F. bombers protected by R.C.A.F. fighters were delivering day-long attacks on the French invasion coast.

It was the 16th day of heavy attacks on this sector in the last 18.

Attack Military Targets

An Air Ministry announcement today said R.A.F. and United States medium and fighter-bombers attacked military objectives in northern France yesterday, destroying two enemy aircraft. Three Allied fighter-bombers and a bomber were lost.

The Paris radio, in a broadcast recorded by U. S. government monitors, said one of the targets in raids on Northern France on Wednesday now was "a heap of ashes." The broadcast said more than 2,000 bombs were dropped in a northwestern sertion of the Somme department.

The German high command, confirming Swedisn reports that Ludwigshafen and Mannheim were the American targets, acknowledged that heavy damage had been done the twin industrial cities. It claimed that 231 Allied four-engined bombers were shot down over Reich territory during the first week of the new year.

Meanwhile indications that the Allies were attacking northern France for the 17th time in 19 days came in a Vichy broadcast report of morning raids in that area.

Gets Picnic Invitation Mailed May 21, 1911

$12,861,542 LIVESTOCK SOLD IN ALTA. STOCKYARDS

Calgary, Jan. 8 (CP)—An all time record of $12,861,542.04 worth of livestock was sold through the Alberta stockyards here during 1943. A total of 425,947 head of cattle, calves, hogs and sheep poured into the market compared with the 1942 record of 385,000 head.

Germans Evacuate Polish, Russian Prisoners in Poland

Barcelona, Jan. 8 (AP). — The Germans started evacuating Polish and Russian prisoners from the eastern part of Poland and from East Prussia as soon as the Red army plunged across the Polish border, according to information from inside Germany.

A force of Polish guerillas was said to have suddenly attacked German troops evacuating Poles from a prison camp near Vilna and to have freed 200 of them.

The Russian drive also touched off a new campaign of anti-Nazi propaganda within Germany itself, it was said.

A flood of pamphlets was reported to have appeared on Berlin sidewalks, giving news of the front and showing Hitler and Napoleon looking at two maps.

One map was described as showing the former German positions at Stalingrad and the other the Russian positions on the Polish border, with Napoleon saying, "I saw it coming."

Berlin Believes Americans Will Fight With Reds

Madrid, Jan. 8—(AP—Add to German invasion speculation:

The Berlin correspondent of the newspaper Madrid said yesterday that many Germans believed all of the "second front" talk was a blind and that "2,000,000 or 3,000,000 American soldiers" would suddenly appear on the Russian front.

The correspondent wrote this report had snow-balled since the sinking of the Nazi battleship Scharnhorst by the British home fleet Dec. 26 while making a futile attempt to attack an Allied Russian-bound convoy, which he reported was the largest convoy of troops and war material yet sent to Russia.

(There have been no Allied reports of any troop convoys to Russia).

SUES PUBLICATION

Washington, Jan. 8 (AP).—William F. Rockwell, chairman of the board of the Timken-Detroit Axle Company, yesterday filed suit for $1,000,000 against Eugene Meyer, publisher of the Washington Post. The complaint filed in United States District Court alleges that Post news stories depicted Rockwell as "a despicable person making unscrupulous gains for himself in wartime."

Canadian Platoon Shares House With Germans For Night in Ortona

(By DOUGLAS AMARON)
(C.P. War Corespendent)

With the Canadians in Italy, Jan. 8 (C.P. Cable) — There's a battered house on the western side of the captured Adriatic coastal town of Ortona which a platoon of Canadians will remember for years. "They shared it one night with Germans.

Like so many Italian houses, this one was built on a ledge and the back entrance was one storey higher than the front. For this reason persons on the ground floor were separated from those on top, with a trap door the only interior communication.

"We moved into that part of the town at night," said Sgt. J. G. Smirle of Los Angeles, who at that time was acting platoon commander. "The men we were relieving told us the Jerries had cleared out."

The Canadians took over the top floor of the house, entering at the back, and were settling down to their regular duties when someone spotted a German through a window 15 yards away. They fired at him and their tracer brought answering fire from another enemy in the district.

"We saw the trap door and seriously considered opening it and going down below where we thought it would be safer," said Pte. P. A. Searson of Douglas, Ont., who joined with Sgt. Smirle and Pte. E. Woodward of Cecil Lake, B.C., a stretcher bearer, in telling the story.

"It was a good thing we didn't," Searson added.

During the night the men could hear people moving about below them, talking and laughing. Several vehicles drove up and down what they had been led to believe was a deserted street.

It wasn't long before they realized that they were sharing the house with the enemy.

"All night long we were expecting to be blown up at any minute," said Woodward.

The Germans moved on the next morning and when the Canadians got a chance to investigate their neighbors' quarters they found them marked with a big red cross.

The enemy apparently had been using the ground floor as a regimental aid station.

The Canadians also told how one day when they were clearing one side of the street folk shouted to Cpl. L. P. Wood, Campbell River, B.C., "Hey, come here."

A guttural answer came back from across the street, "no you come here."

Cpl. M. Folk, Mendham, Sask., looked over and saw a German paratrooper looking out of a window.

"Oh, no you don't, you come down here," Folk replied.

The paratrooper came down, bringing with him three more Germans to add to the platoon's bag of prisoners.

Which, said Lieut. D. T. Fairweather, of Port Hammond, B.C., "meant four more lodgers for the boys."

The first prisoners had been taken earlier in the battle. A Nazi waving a white flag came out of the first house they had been assigned to clear.

Russians Pour Through Gaps In Broken German Lines

TWO SUBMARINES SUNK BY BRITISH IN EIGHT HOURS

Royal Naval Craft Disposes of U-Boats By Means of Heavy Depth Charges

TARGETS. LIT UP

London, Jan. 8 (CP)—Destruction of two German U-boats with the space of eight hours by Royal Navy craft while on patrol northwest of the Azores some weeks ago was announced today by the Admiralty.

Both the underseas craft, the announcement said, fell victim to depth charge attack, their final minutes being marked by "breaking up noises" and deep underwater explosions audible to those aboard the British ships.

The first U-boat, a large patrol or supply submarine, was encountered on the surface at night by the sloop, the H.M.S. Kite, but submerged quickly as starshells illuminated the scene.

The Kite attacked but without success. Because of the darkness of the night further attempts were withheld, but the Kite and other sloops which sped to the area maintained contact with the enemy until dawn.

The H.M.S. Woolcock attacked with the first light.

Noises of Cracking Heard

"A few minutes after the sloop had dropped the first pattern of depth charges noises of cracking, rending and breaking were heard coming from a point under water the communique said. "Two explosions followed. The second was near the surface of the sea and was clearly audible to the ship's company in the H.M.S. Starling.

"Soon afterwards considerable quantities of oil and wreckage floated to the surface."

Another contact was made in early afternoon. The Starling and HMS. Wild Goose both attacked.

"Again breaking up noises and a d:e) 'underwater explosion were heard," the Admiralty announced.

"Out of a spreading pool of oil which welled to the surface there appeared food-stuffs and clothing of German origin. Soon the sea was covered with material further evidence on destruction."

DEVISE INGENIOUS WAYS

With the 8th. Army in Italy, Jan. 8 (C.P.-Reuters) — Troops of the British 8th. Army, which includes the Canadian 1st. Division have devised ingenious ways of keeping warm in the biting weather which is anything but what would be expected in "Sunny Italy."

Hasty Dismantling Of Frontier Factories Begun by Rumania

By THOMAS F. HAWKINS
Associated Press Staff Writer

Berne, Jan. 8 — (AP) — Rumania has begun a hasty dismantling of factories in the frontier towns of Cernauti, Chisinau and other places in the northern province of Bucovina and the eastern province of Bessarabia, a Budapest dispatch to the Basler Nachrichten said today.

Increasingly threatened by Soviet advances which are within about 50 miles of the Rumanian frontier, the Rumanian government has ordered the machinery of as many factories as possible to be moved to the interior behind mountains, the dispatch said.

The evacuation measures extended throughout Bessarabia and Bucovina with peasant carts loaded high with goods, blocking the roads in flight into the interior. The peasants were said to be driving long columns of cattle before them.

Civilians have been forbidden the use of the railways apparently to facilitate the use of transport for withdrawal of troops and the carrying out of defence measures in the east.

The Basler Nachrichten said cadets at the Chisinau school who were home for the Christmas holidays were told not to return to school and to await further orders.

Wealthy Rumanians abroad were said to be convinced that the Russian advance means the end of their fortunes, but their fears were as nothing compared to those still in Rumania where there was panic selling of real estate.

Meanwhile Hungarian frontier guards were said by the Basler Nachrichten to have refused entry to 1,600 Ustachis (Croat puppet troops) and about 100 German militarized Elite Guards fleeing from Yugoslav partisans and attempting escape across the frontier from Yugoslavia.

The partisans had cut these troops off from their units.

The Bulgarians presumably count on their old friend Russia to be kind and forgiving in postwar deals, but on the basis of information available here the Rumanians are frankly worried.

The Rumanians particularly fear the approaching Soviets because of likely retribution for Rumania's annexation of Moldavia and other territories on the heels of the Nazi thrust into Russia.

Frank O'Brien, Associated Press staff writer at Istanbul, reported that a highly placed Balkan informant declared last night Rumania directly in front of the Soviet southwest drive, was ready to rally behind Juliu Maniu to make peace with Russia.

(Obrien said the informant's identity could not be revealed but that the Rumanian declared that Maniu, Rumanian anti-Nazi leader, is delaying action only because of lack of a clear guarantee from the Allies, including Russia, that Rumania's future existence is assured.)

They apparently do not know what course to adopt now, with the Germans at hand and the Russians approaching and with little prospect of any Anglo-American sympathy. They are confining official actions to a withdrawal as fast as possible from the easternmost territories.

Count on Indulgence

The Bulgarians, on the other hand, although collaborating with the Germans, obviously count heavily on the indulgence of Marshal Stalin since their country and Russia are not actually at war. They hope, judging from recent propaganda, to play Russia against Britain and emerge from the war retaining Thrace and Macedonia which they got when the Nazis carved up the Balkan peninsula.

Although there are many indications both Rumania and Bulgaria would like to withdraw from the war, the German control of the Black Sea coasts constitutes an important factor in whatever either country might decide to try. This control was emphasized pointedly within the past two weeks by new photographs of German fortifications in Nazi journals.

JUSTICE RINFRET SUCCEEDS DUFF AS CHIEF JUSTICE

Native of Montreal, Was First Appointed to the Supreme Court in 1924

NEW CHIEF IS 64

Ottawa, Jan. 8 —(CP)— Prime Minister Mackenzie King Friday night announced the appointment of Mr. Justice Thibaudeau Rinfret as Chief Justice of Canada, succeeding Sir Lyman P. Duff who retired yesterday in his 80th year.

Making the announcement, Mr. King referred to Mr. Justice Rinfret, a native of Montreal, as the senior member of the Supreme Court of Canada, now that Sir Lyman has retired. The new chief justice was first appointed to the court in 1924.

"The newly-appointed chief justice, like his predecessor, has had wide judicial experience and is highly esteemed by members of the judiciary and the legal profession of Canada," said Mr. King.

Mr. King referred to Sir Lyman's nearly 40 years of service in the high court—he was appointed 37 years ago—and said that in many of the judgments he delivered Sir Lyman "interpreted the spirit rather than merely the letter of the law."

"It is typical of Sir Lyman's devotion to the public welfare that, at the request of the government, he abandoned in two successive years, all thought of retirement and the leisure to which his age and his long and brilliant career would so richly have entitled him, in order that his wide experience might be made available to Canada during the past two difficult and vitally important years.

GERMANS KEPT OFF-BALANCE ON INVASION TIME

Nazis Cannot Figure Out Russia's New Year's Offensive

GUESSING CONTEST

By JAMES F. LONG
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 8 (AP).—The Russian New Year offensive, considered in the light of the Teheran unification of strategy among the Allies, is keeping the Germans off-balance in their guessing as to when the western invasion will begin.

Obviously the opening of the second front will be keyed closely with the tie-up of the maximum number of German forces.

Late April or early May is the period generally speculated upon as the invasion time, but by then the Red army may be at low ebb if the present exhausting offensive — already unbroken for six months—continues. Besides April and May are the mud months on the continent.

The best Allied views available here is that neither mud nor the state of the Red army offensive necessarily is an accurate barometer.

As even some German spokesmen have pointed out a western front does not require co-ordination to an active Russian offensive since even the threat of a possible general attack serves to prevent the Germans from weakening their eastern force to reinforce the west.

That already has proved true in reverse, with Russian attacks taking advantage of the fact the Germans are afraid to weaken their western defences against a potential invasion to meet acute needs on the Russian front.

OUTER DEFENCES CASSINO STORMED BY U. S. TROOPS

San Vittore Captured Which Puts Army Seventy Miles From Italian Capital

TAKE HIGH PEAK

By WES GALLAGHER
(AP War Correspondent)

Algiers, Jan. 8 (AP).—Victorious United States troops massed around captured San Vittore today forming a spearhead which stormed at the outer defences of Cassino, 70 straight line miles from Rome.

The capture of the well-defended little Mountain village of San Vittore alongside the Via Casilina was disclosed yesterday by Associated Press correspondent Don Whitehead. His dispatch from the front said San Vittore had been seized Thursday after a violent 40-hour battle from house to house. The village is six miles from Cassino.

The capture was confirmed today in the headquarters communique, which said the Anglo-American 5th Army had advanced all along a 10-mile front in the jagged hills on both sides of the road.

Even before this official announcement of the taking of San Vittore, the Americans had smashed on in the direction of Cassino and were fighting in the streets of Giusto, a tiny village more than half a mile to the north.

Airfields Pounded.

Across the peninsula, the British 8th Army engaged in strong patrol activity, today's communique said, while Allied bombers pounded the airfield at Perugia in central Italy, blasted an aircraft factory at Maribor in northern Yugoslavia, struck at the railway yards at Fiume in northeastern Italy and lashed at shipping off the Yugoslav coast.

Capture of San Vittore came as other 5th Army forces, attacking on the right flank of the army's 10-mile wide offensive, scaled 3,500-foot Mt. Maio east of Cassino under heavy Nazi artillery and mortar fire and cut the German supply road from Cervaro to San Vittore. British troops at the southern end of the active front pushed steadily northward from Rocca D'Evandro, taking prisoners.

Highest Peak Yet Captured.

Mt. Maio, highest peak yet captured by the Allies in Italy, is less than four miles from Cervaro, which lies in the Cassino plain three miles above San Vittore toward Cassino.

In air operations, strong forces of medium bombers struck at rail communications north of Rome, hitting tracks at Hontedera and repair sheds and the gas works at Lucca.

Four enemy air craft were destroyed for a loss of four Allied planes.

COLONEL GIVES HIS WINGS TO GRADUATE

Douglas, Arizona, Jan. 8. (AP)—One by one, members of a Douglas Air Field cadet class received their wings from Col. Harvey F. Dyer, their commanding officer, at graduation exercises. As the last cadet stepped forward, Col. Dyer found he was shy one emblem. So, smiling warmly, he unfastened the wings from his own blouse, pinned them on the fledgling flier.

Jet-Propelled Aircraft May Be Used In Expected West Invasion of Europe

By STEVEN WILLIAMS
(Associated Press Writer)

New York, Jan. 8 (AP). — Jet-propelled aircraft, with terrific speed and proven efficiency at great altitudes, will be "a highly important tactical weapon" against the Axis and may even be used in the expected invasion of Europe from the west, Maj. Alexander P. De Seversky predicted today.

"Before this war is over, jet propulsion of aircraft may be very much in use by the Allies," the noted aeronautical engineer, designer and air warfare strategist said in an interview in which he explained the principle which sends craft streaking through space without propellers above the atmosphere.

De Seversky declared that for the present the jet propulsion principle, which he estimated might double the speed of ordinary planes, would not be employed to any great extent for long sustained flying.

He said he believed it would be used in the near future principally for home defence aircraft and as interceptors for short range flying, because of its high fuel consumption.

"But," he added, "we may be able to install the rocket engines in existing heavy bombers to obtain 'flash performance'. This would help big planes take off more swiftly with heavier loads or give them added speed in getting away from attackers."

De Seversky said the jet engine works in reverse—it can bring the craft to a quick stop or slowdown as well as give it more speed.

He said the device is "in itself a reactive engine where gases burn and expand rapidly and where the reaction is controlled through a specially designed jet, controlled by the pilot, to get a maximum thrust (speed)."

Eventually, he said, there will be "no limit" to the jet propelled plane's speed.

Advance Units Within 3 Miles Of Kirovograd

Nazi High Command Says Fierce Fighting Raging in Streets Of the City

CLOSER TO VINNITSA

(By HENRY C. CASSIDY)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Moscow, Jan. 8 (AP) — Troops of the 1st. and 2nd. Ukrainian armies poured through great gaps in the German lines in swift advances today and units which had surrounded Kirovograd smashed to within three miles of the city in one place in the Dnieper Bend country, as the Red Army's winter offensive continued on the upsurge.

Advance units of the force which captured Klesow at the northern tip of the great drive, were plunging deeper into Rovno Province (eastern part of Poland) and reached a point within 12 miles of Sarny.

Farther south from encircled Kirovograd, stronghold for the German forces in the Dnieper Bend, some Soviet forces lunged forward to within 18 miles of Dolinovka, western railway junction which feeds Krivoi Rog.

Troops of Gens. Nikolai F. Vatutin and Ivan S. Konev, which have joined south of Kiev, meanwhile were within striking distance of Kanev, 64 miles southeast of the Ukrainian capital.

(The German high command said in its Saturday communique that "fierce fighting" is raging in Kirovograd.

The BBC, in an announcement recorded by CBS, said Kirovograd's outer defences already were under shell fire with "substantial" Nazi forces cut off there.

Front line dispatches said the fate of the German garrison cut off at Kirovograd was already decided.

They said the Germans now were battling desperately to halt the westward drive toward Novoukrainka, junction on the next to last escape railway left open to large German forces in the Smela area between the Kirovograd and the Kiev offensives.

Nazis Face Disaster

In the Kiev offensive, the Soviet southwestward drive in which new Soviet successes were reported west and south of Berdichev and along the Shepetovka railway was tightening a noose about Vinnitsa from three sides.

Vinnitsa, Bug river garrison point for the Odessa-Warsaw railway junction of Zherinka, lies 20 miles northeast of Zhmerinka and less than 50 miles from Dniester river. (The Dniester forms the pre-war Rumanian border.)

Gen. Konev's tanks were reported in front line dispatches to be creating panic along the rear of the Nazi Ukrainian forces, with German communications reported to have been reduced to congested bottlenecks.

The entire German position was described as shaping up as one of the most disastrous in Hitler's Russian campaign.

Gen. Konev's men, the captors of Kharkov, began their offensive January 5, the Soviet communique said, breaking through the German defences on a broad front and sweeping up more than 120 localities.

Gen. Nikolai F. Vatutin's forces sweeping along in a 300-mile arc in the Western Ukraine, also moved ahead 15 miles from Berdichev through Tamushpol and farther south passed through Komsomolskaya, 12 miles south of Berdichev. Still farther south, advance Soviet units passed Lipovets, 47 miles southeast of Berdichev and 25 miles east of Vinnitsa.

The wedge being driven toward the Vinnitsa railroad junction was further broadened by the capture of Oratovo, 22 miles east of Lipovets.

Lt.-Col. G. A. Drew Reports on Trip To Great Britain

Toronto, Jan. 8 (CP).—Lt.-Col. George A. Drew, Ontario's premier, said in a broadcast speech Friday night there is greater obligation than ever before to help win the war "by work, money and united effort". He also said there are "good practical reasons" for believing Germany will surrender this year.

The premier declared that was the outstanding impression he received from Canadians overseas in a one-month visit to Britain, where he made arrangements to rent a new site for Ontario House. Col. Drew said the new building near Trafalgar Square will be open for business in a few weeks.

His address was carried over the Ontario regional network of the CBC and affiliated stations.

He said the British press welcomed the reopening of Ontario House because of the opportunities they felt it would offer to British manufacturers to obtain information about the province.

"I can tell anyone here who may have doubts about our future that no such doubts can be found in Britain," Premier Drew said.

He added he received inquiries from "prominent business men all over the British Isles" after mentioning in a London speech that Ontario would encourage British manufacturers wishing to open branch plants in the province.

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

FOUR REPRESENTATIVES TO ATTEND MEETING

Four Hastings county representatives of the Federation of Agriculture will attend the annual meeting of the provincial organization being held in Toronto next Tuesday and Wednesday, it has been learned. Delegates from this area to attend the convention will be Seldon Homan of Corbyville, 2nd vice president of the county organization, and Frank Tummon, Ronald Longwell and Allan Finkle of Foxboro.

TOWNSHIP ROADS IN SLIPPERY CONDITION

Township concession roads in the district to the north of Belleville, as well as highways in that section are in an exceptionally slippery condition as the result of Wednesday's rain which froze to roadways leaving them in a glassy state, it is reported by farmers. Country sideroads with a high centre cone are the worst in this respect with driving necessitating extreme care if the car is to be kept in road and going in the direction intended. Tweed highway was also slippery, it was stated, with the straight section of road being treacherous, although curves and hills had been sanded.

HELD ON WARRANT FROM VERDUN, QUE.

Belleville police authorities apprehended one Frederick Tracey of Verdun, Que., and held him on a warrant for Canadian Pacific Railway authorities yesterday. It is said that young Tracey is wanted in Quebec for the alleged stealing of goods from the C.P.R. He was accompanied back to Verdun by railway authorities today.

PROWLERS REPORTED ON NORTH PARK ST.

Complaints that a man was prowling about a private home on North Park street were received by city police early Saturday morning when a woman telephoned the police station to say a man was flashing a flashlight through the windows of her home. P.C. Rathwell broadcast the information and complaint over the police radio to Sgt. Arnott and P.C. Thomson, who were on patrol at the time. Hastening to the North Park street address the police could find no trace of any marauders. However, the woman of the house insists flashes were seen through the windows of her home.

SMALL MARKET

The sub-zero weather on Saturday morning drove most of the marketers indoors to purvey their goods, although a few remained outdoors during the morning hours. The variety of produce offered was small, celery sold for 10c per head, cabbage for 10c, sauerkraut 15c qt., pumpkins, very small, for 10c each, while Spanish onions, of which there were but a few in evidence, sold for 5 and 10c each. Turnips also sold individually for from 5c each to four small ones for 10c. Chickens brought 45c per pound dressed and eggs were 35c per dozen for pullets, 38c for medium, 40c for large, and 43c for specials. Saturday's market carried a greater quantity of eggs than it has for many weeks. Apples were 35c and 30c for Wagners and Ontarios.

Primary Elections For Chamber Of Commerce Held

More than the usual amount of interest was manifested in the primary election for directors of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, which was concluded yesterday.

At this primary any member is eligible for nomination. Ballots are forwarded to all the members with the full list of the names. From these each member is asked to vote for five as nominees. The ten who receive the highest number of votes are then placed on another ballot which is also mailed to all the members. From these, the five who receive the greater total of votes will be declared elected.

The primary election was concluded yesterday afternoon and the following well known citizens were laced in nomination. The names are alphabetically arranged:

E. P. Bernstein
T. H. Dredge
O. W. Duff
A. M. Francis
G. A. Freeman
F. G. Galloway
C. L. Jewell
J. A. McIntosh
Leo B. Riggs
J. J. Trudeau

Those elected will hold office for two years.

The final election will be concluded on Friday, January 14.

Messrs. J. B. Boyce, I. G. Hefkey, C. B. Morgan, and Wilfred Laporte were elected last January for a two-year term and therefore were not open for nomination this year.

Messrs. R. J. S. Dewar, George A. DeVuyst and D. R. White acted as the election committee for tabulating the vote in the primary election.

In this nominating election no less than 70 of the members received nominations.

ATTEMPT MADE ON LIVES

London, Jan. 8 — (CP) — The Daily Mirror said tow sticks of dynamite exploded Friday night at the entrance of the Oxfordshire Inn where Sir Oswald Mosley, pre-war British Fascist leader, and his wife have been staying since released from prison in November.

The newspaper attributed the act to resentment of the villagers over the presence of the Mosleys, and said no one was hurt and no damage done.

BAN LIFTED ON CLOCK AT SUMMERSIDE P.E.I.

Summerside, P.E.I., Jan. 8 (CP)—Residents of this town feel there is no longer any danger of enemy subs seeing the time of night from here. A blackout ban on the town clock that has lasted since the start of the war, was lifted this week with the promise the illuminated face would be dimmed "as quickly as street lights" in the event of a blackout.

AFRAID OF LONGSHOTS FROM COCOANUTS

Miami, Fla., Jan. 8. (AP)—One of the final touches in getting ready for the opening of Hialeah race track yesterday was the stripping of cocoanuts from the tall palm trees which grace the paddock promenade. Gardeners figured the odds against a falling cocoanut hitting a spectator are more than 1,000 to 1, but they remembered that longshots sometimes come home at Hialeah.

Ladies Night at Kiwanis Club Sees Jack McVeigh Installed As President for Coming Year

Mr. Lance Rumble of Toronto Gives Interesting Address on Alaskan Highway

GIFTS PRESENTED

The Kiwanis Club of Belleville, holding their annual inaugural meeting, installed the new President, Jack MaVeigh, and the 1944 Board of Directors during a memorable dinner held in the main dining room of the Hotel Quinte on Friday night. Mr. McVeigh accepted the gavel and office of president with calm graciousness as his predecessor, Bruce Lattimer, stepped down from the chair and became the immediate past-president.

Included in the long list of guests of the Kiwanians at this occasion, several Rotarians, as well as their president, Mr. John Deacon, Mr. Orliff Lloyd, president of the Belleville Kinsmen Club, and the Kiwanis Queens, comprised the gathering to witness the installation of 1944 officers of the Club. The welcome to the Ladies was delivered by Kiwanian Ormonde E. Butler, who spoke on the beneficence of the ladies from the beginning of man as man's consort. Each lady present was presented with a gift of cologne water and talcum powder, the gifts being distributed by Kiwanian Bill Pomfort, Chairman of the House Committee. A toast was drunk to the fairer sex as the gentlemen rose to their feet and sang, "Let Me Call You Sweetheart". The welcoming address was replied to by Mrs. Jim Barclay, who thanked the gentlemen for the pleasant evening and for their staunch and constant support of their auxiliary services through the past year. She thanked Mr. Butler for his charming remarks about them, but, saying that she was speaking on behalf of all the ladies present, they did not believe half of what he said, and remarked that they, the ladies, were glad to be privileged to contribute in even a small way to their worthy undertakings.

Program Chairman Introduced

Following Mrs. Barclay's reply to Mr. Butler, Lorne McDougall expressed the thanks of the Club to the ladies, especially to the two who had worked so constantly for them during the year, Mrs. Bruce Lattimer and Mrs. Norm Edwards. He also expressed his personal thanks to the members of the Club for their splendid co-operation with him in arranging for programs, and handed over the job as chairman of programs to Kiwanian Jack Trudeau for 1944. At the end of his address he presented both ladies with corsages of red roses in the case of Mrs. Lattimer, and yellow rose-buds to Mrs. Edwards, as a material demonstration of the Club's appreciation. He pointed out that Mrs. Lattimer had led in the sale of tickets on the Hope Chest, which was raffled during the Kiwanis Karnival last summer, and extended the thanks to Mrs. Edwards for her efforts on behalf of the Club as president of the Kiwanis Queens.

A delightful solo was given by Miss Margaret Houston, who was accompanied by Mrs. John Deacon. She sang "Still as the Night" as her first selection and, for an encore, sang a composition of Mrs. Deacon's own. This musical interlude was delightfully received by the assembly.

President's Final Address

In making his final address to the Club as President, Kiwanian Bruce Lattimer said: "One year ago tonight I was handed this gavel which I will shortly turn over to our new president, Mr. Jack McVeigh. At that time I was most happy to receive it, and now I am rather reluctant to turn it over, although on a few occasions during the past year I would have relinquished it very gladly. A year ago I asked for your whole-hearted support and co-operation, which I received 100 percent, and for which I would like to extend to each one of you my sincerest thanks." He pointed out that the Kiwanis Club had had a good year, that the Club had raised over $4,000 during the year, and passed the credit on to Kiwanian Jack White and his Ways and Means Committee. He reported that the Club's assets for the year were increased by almost $900, and that the Club had been able to retire the remaining loan against Kiwanis Centre of $1,000, which places that building in the clear of any indebtedness. The Club has established a reserve fund of $1,000, and has turned over to the 1944 Board of Directors more money than was on hand when the former Board took over in January, 1943. He paid compliment to Kiwanians Clarence Jewell and Mark Vanner, who have done the auditing of the Club's books for the past year.

Compliment Paid Members.

Past-President Bruce Lattimer then paid compliment to Kiwanians George Wallbridge for his fine method and management of Kiwanis Centre; to Jim Barclay, chairman of War Services Committee, which collected over 25,000 magazines, books and games for the boys overseas; to Jack McIntosh who has boosted the membership of the Club to its highest number with the induction of sixteen new members during the year; to Ray Grant as chairman of the Agriculture Committee for a successful year; to Harold Carruthers as chairman of the Committee on Ki-Y activities, and Orm Butler as chairman of Boys' and Girls' Work Committee, which sponsored one of the Boy Scout Troops in the city; to Norm Edwards and his Child Welfare Committee, which continued to provide accommodation as well as several of the necessities for the V.O.N. Baby Clinic, as well as organising entertainment for the people of the Old Folks Home during the recent holiday season. Further complimentary mention was made by the retiring president to Kiwanians Anthony Cekota, Lawrence Kells, Eddie Logan, Frank Follwell, Bert Reid, Fred Deacon, Jack Trudeau and Charlie Richardson for their excellent support as chairmen of their respective Committees.

Ladies Thanked.

Paying respect to the ladies, Past-President Lattimer said that already so many nice things had been said about them, that he was afraid he could not enlarge on them. He passed on his thanks for the co-operation given him by every Chairman of Committee as well as each member of every one and terminated his retiring speech by saying: "You've been a big help to me and your Board of Directors this year. Don't sit back now, keep up the good work and give President 'Jack' the same support you gave me, and 1944 will be bigger and better than ever".

Kiwanian Bill Cobourg of the Riverdale Kiwanis Club, Toronto, was introduced by Cliff Baragar, as the one who would perform the installing functions to inaugurate the new president and directors. Mr. Cobourg first addressed the retiring president in complimentary fashion and then turned his attention to the duties at hand and instructed the new president in a few timely suggestions as to conducting the Club as its leader during 1944. He pointed out that the office was an important one in the life of any community. He said, that a Kiwanis President was like the one of three men approached and asked what they were doing, one remarked that he just worked there, another that he got five dollars a day for working, and the third, pulling out a plan from his pocket, said: "I am building a cathedral". As he presented President Jack McVeigh with the Kiwanis President's pin he made a few remarks as to its history, that it was 21 years old, and had gone through all the presidents of the Belleville Club, and that it had been the pin of the father of the retiring president during his term of office. At this point he presented the gavel, further emblematical of the new office to which Mr. McVeigh had been elected.

Presented With Pin.

At the end of the installation of the new president, Mr. McVeigh presented Bruce Lattimer with the pin of the Immediate Past-President. Mr. Cobourg took over again and presented the pin of Secretary-Treasurer to Kiwanian Ross Stiver. He then called upon the full membership of the Board of Directors to arise and be introduced to the gathering, and addressed words to the seated members, which contained a great deal of meaning, saying: "This is your new Board of Directors with whom you will work during the new year". Mr. Lattimer was also presented with the button of Past-Secretary for his work in this capacity during former years. The Directors called upon were Kiwanians Gord Barclay, Harold Carruthers, Clarence Jewell, Lorne McDougall, Harold Bateman and Jack White.

New President Heard.

The new President, Jack McVeigh, in his inaugural speech said: "Next Tuesday I will take this gavel in hand for my first full meeting in Kiwanis. It is my earnest hope and prayer, that before I pass it on to my successor the bells of peace shall have rung out and a great and lasting victory shall have been ours". He spoke with emotion as he said that the gavel had brought many Kiwanis meetings to order, and has brought to a close many memorable experiences. He said that the Club had honored him with a great responsibility and that he would do his utmost to warrant their confidence. He pointed out that, although the leadership of the Club must come from the President, he is really but the chairman of the whole Club and that it was through the counsel of the Directors and Past-Presidents, and the active aggressive work of his committee chairmen, that the Club actually functions.

Committee Chairmen Named.

The names of the newly selected committee chairmen for 1944 were read by the new President and included the names of Dick Kuntze, editor of Bulletin; Norm Edwards, Child Welfare, and Boys' and Girls' work; Gordon Barclay, Achievement; Jack McIntosh, Membership; Ted Schwab, Publicity; Frank Follwell, Property; Dorland Houston, Churches; Charlie Richardson, Blood Donors; Bill Hopson, Reception; Jack Trudeau, Program; Herb Reid, Ways and Means; Bill Pomfret, House and Reception; Laurence Kells, Vocational Guidance; Doug Marshall, Business Standards; Bruce Lattimer, Kiwanis Education; Lorne McDougall, Finance; Archie Harris, Auxiliary War Service; Cliff Baragar, Rehabilitation; Aubrey Coe, Sports and Ki-Y; P. H. Wills, Blood Donors Clinic; Harold Bateman, Attendance; Harold Carruthers, Music; Jack White, Agriculture; George Wallbridge, Kiwanis Centre, and Ed Logan, Interclub.

Co-operation between the Kiwanis Club and the Kinsmen and Rotary Clubs was pointed to with pleasure by Mr. McVeigh, and he remarked upon the splendid work they too have been doing on the Home Front, and he said that their own Club, as well as the others, would be called upon for even greater efforts in the months ahead. "Our Kiwanis ladies have again demonstrated in the past year by their outstanding support and effort in our various enterprises their keen interest in the work of the Club", said President McVeigh in conclusion of his first address as president of the Club.

Guest Speaker Introduced

The guest speaker was introduced to the Club members and their guests by "Bob" Pringle, and a most interesting and enlightening insight was given to those present on the accomplishments of engineering contractors on the Alaskan Highway. Mr. Lance Rumble, born on a farm in the vicinity of Toronto, is Truck Supervisor and Sales Manager of the General Motors Corporation of Canada and was closely associated in the construction of the Highway. Many interesting facts were produced from the memory of Mr. Rumble, who had spent considerable time on the scene in charge of transportation of supplies. He said that the Highway had been constructed faster than any other project ever undertaken, and was one of the greatest ever done by man. He told the story from the start of the planned road to the completion in a most vividly descriptive manner, which held his audience spellbound for well onto an hour. Gigantic difficulties overcome, problems almost insurmountable solved, conditions of physical nature and mental hazard, unexpected situations and reverses were set forth by Mr. Rumble as he described the steady progress of this titanic arterial of the north which runs thru' 1,630 miles of terrifyingly beautiful country. His best description of the relative distance was the comparison of the length of the Alaskan Highway to that of the distance between Three Rivers, Que., to Winnipeg.

'Tote Road' Built First

American troops were brought into the north country to construct a pilot road, or "tote road", as he labelled it. These men worked hard and fast to complete the road. Men who did not understand the terrain through which they were forcing civilization, knew it only as being "a long ways from home" and working with the promise of returning home when it was completed, which incited them to further effort. He told of an amusing but heart-breaking incident, where a loaded truck of telephone supplies which had negotiated the long run over the uncompleted roadway and arrived at a "turn-around point" only to be mistaken by a driver making the return journey as one of the trucks meant to be returned and wound up back at its starting point. He stated that there were 9,000 drivers and 3,000 pieces of equipment on the "Road" during its final stages of construction. The second largest bridge on the North American continent spans a northern river and was built in record time, was cited by Mr. Rumble as an example of the enormity of the job.

Amicable Relationship

Relationships between American troops and Canadians, Mr. Rumble stated were most amicable. General Connor, commanding officer of the Construction Troops from the United States, will go to any extent to prevent the hurting of Canadians by the men under his command. Mr. Rumble said that he had been told that Americans were boastful about everything, their largest edifices, the fastest trains and aeroplanes, the best of everything, in fact, that they would boast about everything but themselves. He said that he found this to be true.

"The 'Road,' when completed," said Mr. Rumble, "will not cost Canada one cent. It will be handed over to Canada six months after the war free of any charge. Canada should consider itself lucky to have it. The possibilities of the Highway are hard to tell. There is no doubt that many tourists will travel it, the scenery there is the most beautiful I have ever seen, and I have been told by others that it compares with the Swiss Alps. The "Road" does not start at Edmonton, as is generally believed," said Mr. Rumble. "It starts at Dawson Creek."

Flew 30,000 Miles

Mr. Rumble said that he had been forced to fly over 30,000 miles to do the business he would ordinarily have been able to do in an hour on the telephone. Now, however, he said, there is telephone connection with practically every part of the Highway, a project almost ununderstandable itself when it is realised that it was started and completed within 90 days. On Christmas Eve, Mr. Rumble was thrilled to have his telephone in his Ontario home ring and hear the announcement that Whitehorse was calling him. It was General Connor calling to wish him a Merry Christmas.

Not only did Mr. Rumble thrill his listeners with the accounts of work done, but his delivery of his story was so masterful as to almost be able to take them to the scenes he described. It was probably the finest talk ever given to the members of the Kiwanis Club since its inception as a club, and from the newest member, to the oldest one present, Mr. Rumble was complimented and praised for his coming to Belleville to speak to them. The thanks and appreciation of the Club was expressed by one of the newest members of the club, Taylor Franklin, who remarked upon the address as the finest he personally had ever heard. The meeting closed with "O Canada."

Unprotected Radium Vials Returned by Mail

Hill Field, Utah, Jan. 8 (AP).—Most of the radium powder missing from a vault at Hill Field was returned by mail yesterday, Lt.-Col. Gordon V. Holcomb, intelligence officer for the Ogden Air Service Command, disclosed. The radium, in tiny glass vials, was wrapped in newspapers and heavy brown paper but was not shielded, Holcomb said, thus exposing its handlers to its deadly effect.

Wounded Veterans From the District Glad To Be Home

Faces showing but little the ravages of battle action of the fighting fronts, and expressing their heartfelt joy at seeing again loved and familiar faces, at least three Bay of Quinte district soldiers, who returned to Canada aboard the Lady Nelson detrained at Belleville station, Friday afternoon. Many other returned soldiers for Belleville and for Belleville district were detained for brief period at Kingston Military Hospital.

Detraining at Belleville and speaking briefly with reporters from the Ontario Intelligencer were Sgt. J. K. Jenkins and Pte. R. E. Shannon, both of Picton, members of the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment. The other district lad to get off at Belleville to be greeted by relatives was Gunner F. R. Woodcox of Madoc.

Veterans of Italy.

Veteran of the fighting on the Italian front is Sgt. Jenkins, who with his right arm and hand swathed deeply in bandages told reporters, "You bet I am glad to be home". His right arm was seared deeply with a German phosphorus flare bomb. "Italy is not so tough", he commented when asked of the fighting in which his regiment is now engaged. On his shoulder is the 8th Army shield, significant of the fact that he was one of General Montgomery's men.

Sgt. Jenkins, as well as his buddy, Pte. Shannon went overseas with the first contingent and wear the red arm badge of the 1st Canadian Division.

A victim of bronchial asthma is Gnr. F. R. Woodcox, who in his ten months overseas, did not get out of England. He was sent home because of medical unfitness.

Treated Wonderfully on Ship.

Their treatment aboard the hospital ship, The Lady Nelson, was chiefly the topic of Gnr. Woodcox's praised. "They treated us wonderfully and the food served defied an equal at any of best hotels", he said. Gnr. Woodcox went overseas with a reinforcement unit for a light anti-aircraft battery and was stationed on the south coast of England.

Towns in the south of England bear plainly the destructiveness of German bombing, according to Gunner Woodcox. In London, however, it is different. There, he said it is difficult for the casual observer to realize the city went through the blitz.

Tribute to the defence of the R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. fighter squadrons in patrolling the English skies, and to the almost unbelieveable accuracy of the wonder instrument "Radar" in spotting the approach of enemy planes, was paid by the gunner. "German raiders don't get much chance now", he said. "When they come over and the Allied fighters get on their trail they dump their bombs wherever and whenever they can and scurry for home—and many of them don't get home".

IN MEMORIAM

LE ONARD — In memory of my dear husband, Earl Charles Le Onard, who passed away January 8, 1942.

He is gone but not forgotten,
And as dawns another year
In my lonely hours of thinking
Thoughts of him are always near.
Days of sadness will come o'er me,
Friends may think the wound is healed
But they little know the sorrow
That lies within my heart concealed.

—Sadly missed by his wife Janie.

A Weekly Column Devoted to the Activities of the Members of the Armed Services at Home and Abroad

What do you do in the infantry —"ya march, ya march, ya march."

Yes, with the Christmas and New Year's festivities now but fond memories, training in the Argyll Light Infantry resumed in all its intensity at the Armouries this week with new classes being opened nightly.

* * *

However, reviewing the holiday jam session—the officers held a gala New Year's Eve bill in their Mess with an orchestra and all the trimmings. It was a swelegant affair of military dignity, coupled with lovely ladies and dancing progressed until the sun was peepin' over the horizon. The luncheon was served buffett style from the lecture room and at midnight Lieut.-Col. B. C. Donnan, commanding officer of the Argylls, lead the grand march. It's bouquets to the committee in charge.

* * *

The non-commissioned officers held their New Year's Eve party in the shooting gallery. The ranges were gayly decorated with evergreens and all signs of a rifle range were missing as the room was transposed into a miniature night club effect, with tables and chairs lining the room sides. Everything was arranged by the N.C.O.'s and the decorations were commented upon by Col. Donnan, who was a most welcomed guest by the sergeants and their guests around the midnight hour when Jamie Clarke piped in the New Year and Auld Lang Syne was the song that ushered in young 1944. It was undoubtedly the most successful party ever staged by the sergeants, as President Alec Lacey and his committee realized following the many complimentary and commendable salutations extended.

* * *

There were some aftermaths, as is usually the case following New Year's Eve parties. For instance you've no doubt seen the play—"Three Men on a Horse," well S.S.M. Charlie Holmes has another version of that comedy which he picked up New Year's Day, but there was no horse implicated in this picture. Then again Sergt. Sammy Goodman saved many a life when he came to the rescue as the perfect host over the holiday weekend. "You're hospitality was more than appreciated, Sammy," so say we all.

From pleasure to business we find several promotions on Part Two Orders posted at the Armouries. In the Argyll Light Infantry Ptes. B. Ferguson, J. Shapley and W. Potter have been advanced to lance corporals.

In the Signal Department eleven qualified after successfully passing part one examination. They are: Sergt. D. R. Ketcheson, Cpls. L. C. Garratt, D. A. Shorey and E. W. Yateman; L/Cpls. F. S. Lonsberry and R. H. Shorey and Trps. J. F. Darlington, H. L. Carruthers, J. R. Frost, F. G. Johnson and D. G. Nickolson.

* * *

Major B. C. Sisler, second in command of the Argyll Light Infantry (Tank), left on Monday to attend a five weeks' Field Officers' Training Course at the Brockville Officers' Training Camp which will qualify him for advanced recognition in his present position. Major Sisler is a veteran of the last war and a staunch soldier.

All the clamor of war had died away and peace was on earth again so Diogenes lit his lamp and continued his eternal search for an honest man, on approaching a fellow traveller, he asked:

Diogenes—What were you in the war?

Former Soldier—A private.

. . . and Diogenes blew out his lamp and went home.

When the N.C.O.'s of the Belleville Garrison met for the first time in 1944 (Tuesday night) they honored S.S.M. R. C. Jeffery, who retired as president of the Mess in December. However, the occasion was not to honor S.S.M. Jeffery upon his retirement, but rather a more regretful atmosphere. Through R.S.M. Herb Willerton the N.C.O.'s presented S.S.M. Jeffery with a beautiful man's leather travelling toilet case, suitably inscribed, and presented as a token of friendship and association of good fellowship both as in a military and social sense. Incidentally S.S.M. Jeffery is an employee of the British Entomological Department and has been carrying on parasite research in conjunction with the Dominion Entomological Bureau here for the past two years, having been sent over here by his British employers on a special survey. He leaves for home early next week, thus the presentation to ever remind him of his friends in Belleville and more particularly in the Argyll Light Infantry, the 34th Battery and the C.W.S.F. To "Jeff" the Dial Sight adds . . . "bon voyage."

Sergt. H. L. Webb, of the Argylls, was retired from strength this week, Sergt. Webb having been transferred to Toronto by his employers, the Canadian Bank of Commerce. It was with regret his fellow sergeants learned of Sergt. Webb's transfer. But it's an ill wind, etc., as Mr. Webb received a promotion for which he is to be congratulated.

Good Reason.

Everything about the R.A.F. station was interesting to the visitor, and he asked a never-ending stream of questions.

"Say," he exclaimed, "how is it that you have so many Scotsmen among your pilots?"

The guide, a bit fed up, snatched at the opportunity.

"Well, sir," he said, "since the Scots have learned that every cloud has a silver lining, we can't keep 'em out."

* * *

It's congratulations to Sergt. R. C. Pryke, who was promoted to Squadron Sergeant Major of "A" Squadron this week. "That's the one I wanted," commented the popular Spike."

It was near the end of the first week's training course at Fort Des Moines and the girls were getting better acquainted . . . a sort of letting their short hair down as far as it would go . . . when one WAC asked her neighbor in the adjoining bunk:

First WAC — Did you ever run across a man who, at the slightest touch, would cause you to thrill and tremble all over?

Second WAC — (evidently not of the romantic type) — Yes, the dentist.

Captain S. Sword, commanding officer of the 34th Battery, R.C.A., announced today that artillery training in the local reserve battery would resume next week. "We took an extra week off following the holiday, but intend to open classes with renewed vigor with advanced heavy artillery training immediately," assured Captain Sword, as he intimated an interesting syllabus will welcome the 34th boys upon their return to training.

Any one want a secretarial job in the reserve army? If so a stenographer is badly needed in the orderly room of the 34th Battery. "We don't care if it's a young lady or not. But we do need a stenographer two evenings a week to type orders and regulations. It isn't a tedious job and should be fun for some young person who wants to acquaint themself with reserve army work and there would be no embarrassment for a young lady, as the Canadian Women's Service Force headquarters is right next door to the 34th orderly room at the Armouries," explained Captain Sword.

England and Russia

(Extract from letter to The Times, London, England.)

"Allied convoys bringing British and American supplies to Russia are now using the same route as was used 390 years ago by Richard Chancellor, the first Englishman to land in Russia and to be received at the Russian Court. In August, 1553, Chancellor's ship, the only one of the three which formed part of the expedition headed by Sir Hugh Willoughby to survive the voyage, reached the mouth of the Northern Dvina not far from Archangel. Chancellor's visit laid the foundations of long and fruitful intercourse. Some 100 years ago, Dr. Joseph Hamel, of the Imperial Russian Academy of Sciences, who was the first to study in detail the early history of Anglo-Russian relations, suggested that the presumed spot of Chancellor's landing—the place which the English described as Rose Island, on account of wild roses which grew there in profusion, would be a fitting place for the erection of some kind of memorial. Perhaps it would be even more fitting to revive Hamel's idea now, when so many Englishmen are braving not only the elements but also enemy submarines and bombers, to reach the northern coast of Russia and deliver supplies to their Russian allies.

Hamel also suggested that the 300th anniversary of Anglo-Russian relations might be suitably marked in 1853 to commemorate so remarkable an example of uninterrupted amicable intercourse between nations. Unfortunately the amicable relations between the two nations were temporarily marred by the Crimean War of 1854-56. It is to be hoped that ten years from now, on the occasion of the 400th anniversary of Chancellor's arrival in Russia. Hamel's idea of suitable commemoration of the jubilee will be carried into effect".

Examine Stored Fruit And Vegetables Now

(Experimental Farms News)

It is often labor well spent during the winter months to examine fruit and vegetables which have been in storage since fall. No matter how well inspected or how good the storage, wastage invariably develops. If this wastage is caused by fungal or bacterial rots the total damage can be reduced by removing the affected material, states W. R. Phillips, Division of Horticulture, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa.

Rots not only render the affected produce unmarketable but odours and taints are produced. Quite often sound apples are noticed to be musty in flavor when stored in proximity to rotted apples.

As well as rot wastage apples should be examined for quality and such disorders as scald and internal breakdown. If the latter are present even to a slight degree it is an indication that the apples should be disposed of as quickly as possible.

When examining for quality it should be remembered that possibly at least a week will elapse after removal from storage before the apples will b eaten. The true test of quality should be ascertained after exposure to office or room temperatures for this period of time. If at this time quality is low or lacking the apples still in storage are at the limit or beyond their optimum storage life regardless of how they taste while still at storage temperatures.

With leafy vegetables like cabbage (or celery if still in storage) dead or rotted leaves should be removed. If the heart of the cabbage is affected the whole head should be discarded.

Potatoes may have blight. Affected tubers should be removed from time to time in storage as this disease develops and spreads in the store room, particularly if the temperature is high. Low temperature breakdown (necrosis) may be present particularly in Irish Cobblers and Katahdin. The affected tubers should be removed if this condition exists and the temperature raised to 38 degrees F.

Other root crops as turnips, beets and carrots, although not as liable to wastage should also be examined. It would be wise to give a cook test to beets if these are being held for culinary purposes. There is a tendency for these to harden to a point where extremely long periods of boiling are necessary to soften them.

If the storage operator keep an eye to the behavior of his produce much can be saved, not only in terms of produce but also in valuable storage space by removing what would soon be a useless product. In this way the producer and consumer both stand to benefit, making for better relation and more sound business principles.

Our Real Heroes

(By FRANK LASKIER)
(In The Aluminum Ingot.)

At sea there has always been a friendly rivalry between the deck crew and the engine-room gang. It is always there, like the rivalry between the Navy and the Marines. Sometimes, though, it isn't so friendly, and I have seen stand-up, knock-down fights between seamen and oilers that started through a casual argument as to the respective merits of their jobs.

I have been Seaman Gunner for the past three years. I have been torpedoed twice, wounded, and have seen my full share of action. I have seen and read of heroes in the Air Force, Army and Navy. Brave lads all, of unquestioned dash and gallantry, but I still say this: For unwavering, steadfast courage, the engine-room gangs of the ocean freighter and naval vessels have no equal.

I shall never forget the story of Harry Boyle. Harry was an oiler on the San Demetrio. She was in the Jervis Bay convoy when a German surface raider caught her and set her afire. Shells burst the tank-tops open and in a few minutes she was an inferno of blazing, high-test gasoline. The Captain ordered "Abandon Ship" and fourteen of the crew got away in a lifeboat. The last man to come down the ladder was Harry Boyle. He slipped on the greasy gangway and fell across the gunwale of the boat. When he picked himself up his face was the colour of dirty ashes.

For two days they stayed near their burning ship in that lifeboat. For two days Harry Boyle steered, bailed, and kept watch. He never complained. After two days those fourteen men went back on board the San Demetrio and put the fire out. They sealed up the decks as best they could, and with the aid of a lifeboat compass they set sail for England and safety. Harry was an engineroom man, so he went below and did his job. For two days and two nights he stood watch, his face getting greyer, his movements weaker—and he never complained. On the third day he crawled into his bunk and died. When they went to pick him up they found that most of his ribs were broken. . . He had caved them in when he fell across the gunwale of the lifeboat. And for five days he had done his job with the broken bone-ends grinding into his lungs.

They buried him at sea under the Union Jack. A sailor's death, and a sailor's grave. He died as many thousands of brave men have died in the past three years; of injuries, of exposure, of burns and scalds, or trapped like drowning rats in the torpedo-shattered bowels of a rusty tramp steamer.

When this war is over there will be bands and parades and flashing uniforms. But the engine-room gangs of the dirty little freighters won't be in them. Neither will the seamen or the men and women who make the guns and the explosives and all the sinews of war. But we'll have the satisfaction of knowing that ours was no small part in the ultimate victory. Somewhere, in a quiet corner, we'll sit and have a drink to the memories of the boys who died just—"Doing their jobs".

Dead City That Still Lives

When the soldiers of the United Nations entered the National Museum in Naples they found the wounded director lying on a pile of blankets in a corner of a hall with precious statues which he faithfully had tried to guard. If by chance a physician had been among those first rescuers who tried to help the injured and had found himself without any instruments, the patient could have told him to go to a certain room, one flight up, and to get the instruments which were found in the surgeon's house in the 1,900 years old ruin of Pompeii. Let us assume that the director, feverish as he was, talked a little irrationally but the doctor fetched the instruments, sterilized them with some alcohol found in the museum shop and started to use them. He would have found tweezers and scissors, various forceps and probes, catheters, specula and even syringes. In general, they were not greatly different from the same instruments surgeons now use. They were, of course, covered with thick green patina, but there is no doubt that after a good cleaning, polishing and sharpening a physician would be able to work with them quite well.

It always touches us in a peculiar way if we discover the well known fact that the generations before us were not so different from us. We are used to thinking of the Romans in heroic terms, of the Greeks in visions of noble beauty which we are sure never to reach. Is it not comforting to discover that their catheters had the same bend as ours, that the people were possessed by all the vanities and weaknesses, the desire and habits, we are heir to?

There is no place in the world where one can indulge in such feelings and discoveries as the national museum in Naples, which houses a great many of the small objects found in Pompeii. In spite of all efforts to give some houses in Pompeii the color of life by restoring them, planting their gardens, by leaving the found articles in place, the city has remained bleak, dead —a graveyard. But take time out to look into the cabinets of the museum in Naples and in Pompeii, and you will hear the breathing of those who have slept under ashes for almost 2,000 years.

* * *

Yes, you will even see them more accurately than photography can record. When the torrent of hot water and fine ashes trapped them on their flight from the catastrophe, the muddy material formed a complete mold around their bodies. Time hardened the mold to stone. Only the skeletons remained in the empty forms. Fiorelli, the first modern director of excavations, poured plaster into these hollow forms. Thus he obtained the true likeness of many Romans. Some have their arms up trying to push the downpouring hot mud away. Some seem to have laid down in utter exhaustion, their heads resting on the forearms. The touching case of a dog chained to his house assures us that thousands of dog generations have not changed the dogs either. The shoes of the people had soles made of thin ropes sewn together. This kind of sole is still popular in the Pompeian countryside. They are very practical on rocky streets.

What did those people eat and drink? We have many round loaves of bread from bakeries of Pompeii. Their tops are neatly crossed in star shapes. Good bakeries had their own flour mills, and mixing machines for kneading the dough. From labeled pots we know that baked beans were well known and that the Jews liked fish dishes not unlike the "gefuellte fish" available in our delicatessens.

Yellow, white and blue iris, gladioli, daffodils, crocus and poppies grew in small formal gardens.

* * *

The photos which now come from Naples show that nothing, not even the terrors of a modern war, can stop the ingrained habit of the Italians to express all sorts of things in writing on walls and pavements. They did it in Pompeii, too. Advertising, electoral recommendations, lost and found notices, slander and plain obscenity appear in crude scribbling or on correct posters. Some were done by professional sign painters who did not forget to sign them with their names for advertising. We know the house of one of them. He painted a sign on it reading "Here Lives Aemilius Celer." His sign did not cost him anything, you know.

In the cabinetto secreto of the National Museum one gets the most complete picture of the sexual life in Roman times. The objects, some of great artistic value, are partly evidence of the dominant role which sex played in some religions of the time; partly they are plain smut, of the kind which used to be offered for sale in some cafes in Naples.

* * *

History has many aspects. One is the polished, spectacular and dramatic one which makes the Romans look like Caesars, Catos and Ciceros. It is the Sunday finery of history. But don't forget that the week has seven days. On six of them people like to work in their shirtsleeves, to wear an old coat, to walk around in well worn shoes. This is the picture of Roman life one derives from the small objects in the Naples museum. It seems to be the truer one.

Green Winter

This winter, which has not yet seen sufficient snow to lay a complete blanket over the land however thin, has been pleasing. For one reason it does not require the use of the shovel and it creates no problem of keeping sidewalks cleared of snow. Such spells as the recent fall of snow and rain which left roadways coated with ice has created a condition requiring very careful operation of trucks and cars and has also provided near-at-hand skating privileges and advantages for hundreds of city youngsters to disport themselves on ice on the streets in front of their homes. Icy walks are not desirable and in the past few winters there has been enough of that condition. But there is also the undesirable condition that goes with plenty of snow and that is the variety of ways in which shovellers attack the snow on their walks. Some do and some don't shovel and those who do, do it in many ways, a complete or quite incomplete job.

So far this winter there has been only one problem—the icy walks for a few days.

But the continued lack of snow in any proportions make people begin to wonder. Ordinarily in a winter they take what comes without anticipating it, but this winter the ease of getting about and the absence of snow have made them naturally a little anxious about the coming days. Frost is getting into the soil quite deep because there is no protection from snow, whereas in winters of heavy precipitation, there has often been little frost in the ground. Towards the end of the season snow will be desired for protection of the next season's crops as covering for the roots.

Mr. Harry Moore, publisher of the Trenton Courier-Advocate in the latest edition refers to this anxiety about the rest of the winter in these words:

"Knowing what winter can do, we are keeping our fingers crossed. At this writing (Sunday noon), the air is filled with fine snow, and we may be in for it yet. Remember a green Christmas in this Bay of Quinte area about twenty years ago when the sun shone on Christmas Day, people were going about bare-headed, but within ten days the trains were stalled and a month of hard winter was crammed into a couple of weeks. So we are not saying anything at this time. We know how smug and deceitful winter can be."

There have been winters in the past when there was little snow but it is doubtful if there has been before so little as this year. In some other lean years the snow came in small quantities and then in course of time the walks would be largely clear but now everything is clear with the only vestiges of winter in the leafless trees, the cold air, the ice in creeks and over fields and in the river.

But the winter will be what it will be. That is the only forecast one can safely make. The weather is not of man's choosing but it has a great deal to do with his condition and it surrounds him from the cradle to the end of life.

No Proof Against Bombs

Hitler being a tyrant and fearful of his own safety, believes in his own security and that of his gang and the institution of Nazism. So he built the walls of the chancellery in Berlin on a grandiose scale and in heavy style and thickened the concrete roof until it was nine feet through.

But tyranny cannot build material walls or other walls thick enough to endure the blast when justice demands that he and his works be made into nothing.

The hammerings of fate and destiny are surely raining down on the tyrant's works. His chancellery is gone, its solid roof made into dust and pieces of rubble.

Fate mocks him. The man who thought to straddle the world as dictator, cannot build a wall thick enough or dig a hole in the earth deep enough to hide him or prevent his being called to justice or his works of iniquity being smashed to dust that the lightest wind can blow away.

Age of Chivalry Not Gone

There is a place for the deed of courtesy and chivalry though some may think the modern world is not congenial and conducive to chivalry. So it is a good thing to have revelation of this trait once in a while to help and encourage the spirit of courtesy and chivalry.

Governor Olin D. Johnson of S. Carolina stood disclosed the other day as one who is an exemplar of the gracious word and deed. A woman visitor from the State of Virginia arrived before the S. Carolina State Capitol to find the doors closed for the day. She met a man coming down the steps and asked him if it were possible to see through the building as she had come from a distance and had counted with interest on visiting and looking through the Capitol. The man personally volunteered to direct her about and pointed out historic spots and when the tour was complete and he had with much attention told her of many points of interest, what was her surprise to hear her guide ask if she would like to have the Governor take her home. "That would be marvellous," she replied. Her surprise deepened when she heard his words, "then permit me to show you to my car."

The fair visitor will not forget the courtesy of this gracious man, the Governor of South Carolina, who had been able to give a much more complete and satisfying description of the Capitol than she could have gathered in the course of an ordinary visit.

Such little acts of kindliness, grace and good humor can go far to brighten every occasion of life. Of course not everyone can be as chivalrous in deed and in word as the Governor, yet no one should forego the opportunity to practise little courtesies and acts of chivalry when opportunity offers for such chivalry adorns life.

Why Malta is British

(Ottawa Citizen)

Malta has a maritime history that goes back to the time of the great Phoenician traders. As the island of Melita, of course, it has its place in Bible history, for it is the island converted to Christianity by St. Paul, who was shipwrecked upon it while a prisoner of the Romans.

During the Crusades, the Knights of St. John were granted Malta, and they held it throughout the great siege against the Turks. As the centuries passed, the knightly order fell into disrepute. With the coming of the French Revolution, by which time the preponderance of the French Knights within the order had upset the international equilibrium, conditions became hopelessly disrupted.

Later when Napoleon set out to conquer Europe, he took possession of the island. Native Maltese patriots, however, resisted the French and in the knowledge of the presence of the English fleet under Nelson in the Mediterranean, the Maltese, under Canon Caruana, appealed to the admiral to take possession of the island in the name of His Majesty.

The British Empire has grown in many strange ways. But Malta is British because it wanted to be. And now, as Malta, G.C., the George Cross having been awarded by the King in recognition of the stand of the island against another enemy, it is doubtless still content to remain so.

Paper Collars

(Belfast News-Letter)

One of the greatest problems confronting a Merchant Navy friend of mine is what he describes as an ever-mounting pile of laundry. Each time he returns from a sea journey he is laden with soiled linen. Collars are his principal difficulty, but recently he has overcome it by using neckwear of stiff paper. Incidentally, his last letter home contained the following: "I must apologize for the soiled appearance of this notepaper. I could find no paper on board—and am writing on one of the collars I have used."

Self-command is the main elegance.—Emerson.

Canadian Scene A Century Ago

By J. L. G.

Since men were all brothers in pioneer times it was quite all right to go around borrowing needed articles. When the request was for a sleigh or waggon there were big doings a-foot . . . probably a load of some kind to be brought from town. The bigger the vehicle the greater the amount that could be carried. A man building a house would haul roofing from the nearest sawmill. All the rough edging he could get onto a sleigh cost him only around a dollar, and it was good enough for a roof. He'd bring home some "stub-shots," too, since mill owners were accustomed to throw these in free of charge . . . Up-and-down saws were used in the old sawmills. In sawing, the logs were not cut through to the end, as a piece had to be left for the "dog" to hold on by. When the log was sawn the "dog" was loosened and the uncut part at the end was split with an axe. This uncut section was called the "stub-shot."

It was a case of taking one's turn when one patronized a sawmill or grist mill. So the men came prepared to put in time. They brought horse-shoes with which to play quoits, or a long rope for a tug-o'-war. Often they brought their own "eats", consisting of some flour that they cooked with water. This pale food was called "choke dog" and was filling if not appetizing. It was washed down with cold well water, or a drink of home-made apple cider—sometimes with a cup or two of steaming tea secured at the home of a friend or at the village inn.

Brains were constantly devising new means to aid, or take the place of manual labor. When steam began to come into its own in the industrial world, Canada was ready to substitute steam for water-power in the running of the sawmill. Of this machine it has been well and truly said: "The axe produces the log hut, but not until the sawmill is constructed do villages arise; it is civilization's pioneer machine; the precursor of the carpenter, wheelwright and turner, the painter, the joiner and legions of other professions. Progress is unknown where it is not . . ."

The S.S. Accommodation nosed her way down the St. Lawrence river on her maiden trip from Montreal to Quebec in 1809. Never before had a ship moved from those docks under the power of steam, and there was much talk about the bravery of the ten passengers "willing to peril their lives for the experience of so novel a mode of travelling." These venturesome souls had plenty of time to listen to the engines and to admire the "elegance" of the steamer's fittings. The trip down required 36 hours and coming back took longer still. The fare was $8 from Montreal to Quebec and $9 from Quebec to Montreal.

On momentous trips like this, travellers wore their best clothes and feet trod the deck in fine leather shoes. Men took special pride in their hand-made top boots. These cost $3 or so a pair and would outlast several pairs of today, for no machine work can equal in combined solidity and elasticity the productions of a first class craftsman . . . The jack-boot was the forerunner of the top boot which was popular with the top in a yellow color. It was superseded by the Hession boot, worn over tight pantaloons, then by the Wellington boot and the Blucher half-boot.

The New Year

Our yesterdays, touched by the hand of pain
Our days of loss and our days of gain,
Days, grim and old, soiled by sin's dark stain,
God takes away and gives us again
Days pure and white as the fresh, new snow,
The New Year's dawn with sky aglow,
And courage to meet the days to be
From the power of the past forever free.

We need not mourn o'er the days now dead,
No tears o'er their bier be it ours to shed;
We need not grieve o'er their loss and pain,
For better days will come again;
No dread of the dawn of the New Year's sun
With a chance for a prize when the race is run;
"For as thy days, thy strength shall be",
Is the promise of God to you and me.

Capital Closeups

By JOHN DAUPHINEE
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Jan. 8 —(CP)— There's one manpower shortage that Selective Service hasn't been able to solve—in the External Affairs Department. Once the war ends in Europe the situation will be worse.

External affairs, at a quick glance, needs one minister now to replace Maj.-Gen. Georges Vanier in London where he was minister to all the United Nations governments—Belgium, Poland, Norway, Yugoslavia, Greece, Czecho-Slovakia and the Netherlands. He now is at Algiers.

External affairs needs a man to represent Canada in Sweden, which recently appointed a minister. It needs a minister to Turkey. It soon will need a minister to Mexico and would like to have men, too, for other Central and South American countries. It needs a permanent high commissioner for Newfoundland.

Presumably once peace is restored separate ministries will be established in the European countries now occupied by the enemy.

Employment prospect in the department should be pretty good—for the right men.

Diplomatically speaking: A new Brazilian ambassador to Canada is expected to be named shortly and may arrive about a month from now. The Brazilian mission, now a legation, is being raised to embassy status and Canada is taking the same action at Rio de Janeiro. The present Brazilian minister, Caio de Mello Franco, came here about a year ago and now has been recalled.

Changed Attitude: Laurentian Terrace, the government hostel for out-of-town civil servant girls, is looked upon with new favor—because of the recent flu epidemic.

The hostel, with space for several hundred girls, didn't go over too well at first. Then the civil servant residents began to find it had advantages over rooms in a private home.

The flu was the clincher, though. While some girls in private homes had no one to look after them, the hostel girls had a trained nurse on hand, and adequate treatment.

Laurentian Terrace has a big waiting list now.

There are virtually no profane words in the Japanese language. When a Jap wants to insult another he merely uses a special verb for the purpose.

This Herod had ten wives, but only 14 children.

On January 3, 1894, George Badgley was married to Margaret McLaren at her home on the third concession of Tyendinaga by Rev. Mr. Black of Roslin and at the recent gathering of friends several of those who had attended the wedding were present, including the groomsman, Alex McLaren, (Mrs. Thos. The minister, Rev. Mr. Lougheed, expressed the desire of all who were assembled to felicitate the happily married couple. Mr. and Mrs. Badgley replied, saying that married life brought true happiness.

The company dispersed about midnight after singing "Auld Lang Syne."

Mr. and Mrs. Badgley, who have served in the congregation of Salem for many years, he as elder and she as organist and teacher of the adult class, are among the district's most highly respected citizens, prosperous farmers, hospitable and loyal to the church.

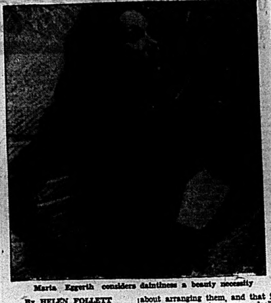
Dainty Girl Is Cleanly, Careful of Her Grooming



Maria Eggerth considers daintiness a beauty necessity

By HELEN FOLLETT

NO MATTER how much a girl spends on cosmetics, coiffures and elegant dry goods, if she isn't dainty, there's something lacking. The dainty girl is a crank on cleanliness, order and grooming. She hates dirt, even a little bit of dirt.

She may spend an extraordinary amount of time in the fight for cleanliness, but she knows the results are worth it. She'll have no dust anywhere, on her skin, in her hair, on her stockings or garter belt. She carries an appearance of springtime freshness at all hours of the day and night, which more than compensates for facial features that may not qualify.

Pleasant Chores

She loves the smell of soap suds. She loves to soak in the bath tub. The business of keeping herself in tiptop form is no tiresome job; it is a diversion that she enjoys.

She puts her hankies, gloves and scarves in boxes that contain sacket powder. She is a bit fussy about arranging them, and that is why everything she wears looks new and fresh. She doesn't kick her shoes under the bed, but puts trees in them. She brushes her hat before she puts it on her head. That's a task that too many girls skip.

Slips of Grooming

The careless girl who thinks that people don't notice small slips of grooming is off her reckoning. They do.

It won't do to postpone the shampoo. To tag around with nail polish piebald and patchy is a good looks misdemeanor. If a girl has started to pluck her eyebrows, she had better keep at it, as those stubby little black points emerging from the skin make the facial landscape look scrubby and messy.

One common slip is to have curly locks all over the head and a straight fringe along the nape line. Any beauty shop will put in one row of permanent curls. Takes only a few minutes, costs almost nothing.

In Manhattan

(By H. M. PETERS)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Jan. 8. (CP) — The work of most of the playwrights being rather ordinary this season, the Actress Ruth Gordon solved the problem for herself and large audiences at the Music Box Theatre by writing her own.

She called it "Over Twenty-One" and wrote into it a lot of laughter, the greater part arising out of lines the writer Ruth Gordon gave the Actress Ruth Gordon.

Produced by Max Gordon —no relation—and expertly directed by George S. Kaufman, the play opened this week. Taken for what it is, a light comedy, unburdened by any message or any profound thinking, it is good entertainment.

The scene is a tourist court in Florida, a rackety sort of place where the refrigerator is too noisy, the light switches are in the wrong rooms, the window opens by stamping hard on a certain spot in the floor and there is no water in the kitchen.

Zasu flutters: Zasu Pitts of the movies and her fluttery hand appeared in the second play to open this week, a melodramatic farce called "Ramshackle Inn", at the Royale Theatre.

Most critics found Miss Pitts herself excellent but the play weak and creaking.

The third scheduled opening of the week, Maxwell Anderson's "Storm Operation" of which much is expected, had to be put off until next week because a leading actor lost his voice. It is about the Allied invasion of North Africa.

Harold

On Tuesday evening, Dec. 28th, Mrs. Marion Sine and Mrs. Harold Morgan of Minto called at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Dunkley and gave their daughter, Edna, who is stationed at O.T.C., Brockville, a wrist watch on behalf of the community.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Mother Looks on the Bright Side of War

A woman with two sons in the armed forces has written me a letter which may prove sustaining to other soldiers' mothers.

One of her sons has been invalided home and the other was in North Africa. She writes me: "If these boys survive, they will have greater advantages than it was ever in my power to give them. They are getting a real education."

When the boys were in high school their father died. Both boys had to go out and earn some money. One delivered newspapers and the other worked in a bowling alley. It was hopeless to get them to study or go to night-school to patch up some of the subjects they flunked. Neither of the boys were apt pupils or seemed to have any interest in getting an education. Then came induction in the army. At the post to which they were sent, school work was obligatory and for some obscure reason they had never shown in school, they developed a pride in keeping up with their school work.

At present they are among servicemen who are taking correspondence and self-teaching courses through the Armed Forces institutes. Practically any subject the soldier desires is available.

It's amazing how the army has made these men realize the value of an education. Many of them when drafted hadn't gone beyond the fourth grade; some had done post-graduate work at universities. A variety of reasons is ascribed for taking the work. One man may want to improve his standing in the army, another wants to prepare for a new trade when he leaves the service. Mathematics seems to be the most popular subject.

As this mother writes me: "My boys were always at the tail end of their classes. They made poor grades; they regarded school work as a bore, but since they've gone into the service, they have taken the keenest interest in getting themselves an education."

Yes, it's hard on mothers, especially when they wake up in the middle of the night and wonder what's happened . . . but if their sons survive . . .?

GOOD MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

New Year—New Manners?

You're stepping forth into the New Year. You and that inseparable and so-important part of you . . . your manners. Are a few bright resolutions in order?

Ten stepping-stones for your bright path into the New Year:

1. WRITE. And keep on writing to your men and women in the service.

2. WRITE. Write to far-away civilian friends too. Relatives, friends working in war plants, others whose lives have been uprooted by the war, who long for letters from back home. Keep the bonds of friendship strong.

3. THANK. Spend your "Thank you's" spontaneously, lavishly. No hoarding. Write prompt thank-you letters too. Think, act, say your appreciation for all kindnesses and courtesies, small or large.

4. PLEASE say "Please" when you ask anyone to do anything for you.

5. INTRODUCE properly, gracefully. If you're a bit wobbly about the proper rules, resolve now to find out about them. And ACKNOWLEDGE an introduction properly . . . "How do you do" is always right . . . and say these words so you'll make that fine first impression.

6. TALK. As charmingly and engagingly as possible. Show a flourishing interest in the interests of other people. Learn the enormous value of "small talk." It starts a conversation blithely. If you're struggling with that ol' debbil self-consciousness, this New Year is a perfect time to win a victory over it . . . get so busy remembering to think about other people that you forget to think about yourself.

7. LISTEN. A good listener is a joy forever. Good listening inspires conversation. Listen actively, with both ears, and with the whole expression of your face kindled with eagerness to hear what the speaker is saying. Listen carefully to "catch" people's names when they are introduced to you and to remember their names when you meet them again. And listen to your voice . . . do you like it?

8. WATCH your table-manners. Are you careful about them? Proud of them? The way you eat is a tattle-tale about you.

9. THINK. Think about the comfort of other people. Consideration for others is a brilliant jewel in a good design-for-living. Don't be a seat-hog. Think "First come, first served," when you're shopping, when you're waiting in line. Think about other people's comfort in the movies. Think about being courteous to people who are trying to serve you, usually under great difficulties these days. Think before you say something tactless, something that will hurt.

10. GIVE. Give your pleasant, heart-worming words . . . they are a tonic to everyone in these troubled days. Give quick, responsive smiles . . . they're a wonderful tonic too. Give a cheerful "Good Morning," "Hello," "How do you do," "Thank you," "Please" . . . all those everyday words that come to life if you give life to them. Give courtesy, kindness. Give your warm understanding to those who need its deep comfort.

The Marry-Go-Round

How to Please Women

"How to please men" was for years the greatest study of womankind and the favorite topic of popular writers.

This was because if a woman wanted anything in this life, from happiness to luxury or from a good income to good service, she had to get it from some man! On all sides were men to be flattered, coaxed, charmed or inveigled; catered to, jollied or manoeuvred into giving her what she wanted.

But today, the shoe is on the other foot. Here, on the home-front, men are surrounded by women; and if they want to be made comfortable and happy, the chief study of mankind will be "How to please women!"

A man will find women, women, at every turn—in his household, in his office, in his factory and in every other office or factory. Secretaries, cab-drivers, waitresses, post-women, saleswomen, welders, bus drivers, electricians, hotel clerks, conductorettes, doctors, podiatrists, etc., etc., ad infinitum.

Diplomacy and finesse in dealing with the female of the species are now essential to every man's well-being. For it is women whom he will face in every walk of life—at least, for the duration—and on whom he must depend for every service, from his cooking to the running of his office.

Of course, men won't have to use the same methods or to go as far as the girls have gone in the matter of "pleasing" the opposite sex. They won't need to go in for face-lifts, lipsticks and imported perfumes and permanent waves in order to be popular with women and to keep them jumping through hoops. A man's charm is not so much a matter of beauty as of technique. But they'll need all the technique, diplomacy, artful wiles and beautiful manners they can muster in these days of woman-power.

Some men are born with a talent for pleasing women; a few men acquire it; but most men just bungle their way through life and wonder why women can make them so darned uncomfortable!

Yet, it is so easy for a man to please women, if he will only remember that a woman does not want to be impressed, dazzled or instructed. She wants only to be appreciated and admired! And the "technique" of pleasing a woman consists entirely of keeping her pleased with herself!

This does not require any self-sacrifice or hard work. The born diplomat can use practically the same words, music and gestures with the waitress who serves his pork and beans as he uses to his hostess, his secretary or his wife. If it's the right line, they'll all fall for it.

But one thing is certain. No man can live with comfort and safety on the Home Front under the fond delusion that he can get along without women! Woman is in the picture—to stay; and misogynists are in a spot. Some authority on "How to Please Women" should start a course in diplomacy.

Fashion Flashes

A THEME used frequently by the leading designers is the wool suit, its jacket lined with print to match a print blouse. Coral gabardine is used for a very smart Spring suit, the jacket lined to match the coral-on-white blossom print of the overblouse which can also be worn tuckin. Jacket cuffs turn back to reveal printed lining.

A debut down south that has attracted some attention is that of bathing suits fashioned of fine flannel. Deep white wool flannel is used for a one-piece model with black saddle stitching. Very smart!

A brilliant attraction for dress or coat is a pin of pink gold on sterling, in the shape of a big banyan leaf spiked with a cluster of rhinestones in jewel colors and crystal.

Coming up from South America are nice gloves geared to the coming Spring scene. A good model is a shortie done in black suede also in colors with hand-crocheted silk fourchettes which give an openwork look to fingers and side seams.

Never, well, hardly ever have we seen so much brown as this season. A charming frock is of brown crepe made with deep square neckline and easy silhouette. Bronze bead embroidery in a leaf pattern trails across the side of the bodice and down the skirt.

Definitely a hat, no matter how small, is the happy news for milliners and for women who don't want a weight on their head, yet who don't want to fare forth hatless. Worn back on the head is a skull cap fashioned of tiny pale blue felt three-leaf clover petals fagoted in black with a misty black veil overall.

HEALTH CHATS

Hemophilia

The blood of certain persons lacks the property of clotting quickly. Persons with this dangerous disorder usually inherit the condition. The disease is called hemophilia. It does not show up in women, but women transmit the disease. A woman inherits the disease from her father and transmits it to her sons. Thus, only men have the disease.

The main point about hemophilia is that the clotting time of the blood is greatly prolonged. Under normal conditions the blood obtained from a vein will clot within from six to twelve minutes. In a hemophilias it will require from twenty minutes to several hours. By using the proper tests to measure the clotting time of the blood hemophilia can be diagnosed with certainty. Since there is slowness in the clotting of the blood, the symptoms of the disease will depend on what injury or accidents a person may suffer. There may be bleeding from the gums when the teeth are brushed. Frequently, just after the birth of a baby the cord bleeds for a long time and there may be great difficulty in checking the bleeding.

In so far as treatment of hemophilia is concerned many methods have been suggested. For the patient's general well-being he should have a well-balanced diet rich in protein foods, such as meat, milk and eggs, also plenty of fruits and vegetables as well as whole-grain cereals, to supply him with the necessary vitamins. Special vitamin preparations may be given with benefit. About the most effective method thus far discovered to control the bleeding of these patients is the giving of a blood transfusion.

Following the transfusion of about a pint of fresh blood from time to time, additional transfusions of a fifth of a pint of blood may be used. Larger amounts of blood are not necessary unless the patient is suffering from severe anemia. Dried serum is not effective in this condition.

If it is found necessary to perform an operation on a patient with hemophilia it is a good idea to give a pint and half of blood by transfusion before the operation is performed, and a similar quantity should be given during the operation. At twelve-hour intervals after the operation for at least three days, these transfusions should be repeated.

Thrombin is one of the substances which is found in the blood, that has to do with blood clotting. Thrombin has been prepared from rabbits' blood and it has been found that it is effective in controlling small hemorrhages both in persons with hemophilia and in normal persons. The dried thrombin powder is put directly on the bleeding area.

Further research is necessary in hemophilia to determine the exact cause of this disorder before it may be completely cured.

Appetizing Desserts

By LAURA C. PEPPER

Chief, Consumer Section,
Dominion Department of Agriculture.

Is there a sameness about your meals that is getting you down?

So many of us slip so easily into ringing the changes on a few familiar dishes that it is no wonder we . . . and the family . . . begin to find mealtime a bit of a bore! And, if our conscience begins to prick a little, how many of us excuse ourselves with "Oh well, what can you expect in wartime . . . so many things I can't forget".

It is, of course, true that it takes more planning to provide interesting meals now than it did when a phone call to the corner store would bring your every whim to the kitchen door. But it is equally true that nutritious, appetizing and varied meals can still be attained, even with present day limitations.

A dessert that is new to the family is a splendid antidote to monotony. Like pease porridge . . . "some like them hot and some like them cold," so here is a selection of wartime deserts from the Consumer Section of the Dominion Department of Agriculture that will help bring variety to your winter meals.

Trenton Juniors Tie Belleville For Lead in Group by Winning At Home by 6 to 3 Count

Score Two Goals in the Initial Period and Never Headed

FAST CONTEST

Trenton, Jan. 8—(Special)—Grabbing off the initial two goals Trenton Juniors evened matters with the Belleville kids here Friday night by taking a clean-out 6 to 3 decision over the Quinte City sextette in a junior O. H. A. fixture played on lightning fast ice. The homesters led 3-2 at the end of the initial frame, added two more to make the count 5-2 at the end of the middle session after which both teams scored once to finish the tussle in the last stanza.

F. Hamilton and Maxwell led the homesters in the goal-scoring department as Hamilton bagged a brace of counters and helped himself to an assist, while Maxwell drove home Trenton's first two goals. Lesperance and Taylor accounted for the remaining Trenton goals. For Belleville the scoring was evenly divided with Barrett getting a loner, while B. Meagher and Moher notched one each with Semark and Holway on the helping end respectively.

Referee Late in Arriving

Owing to the absence of a referee the game was late in starting, but finally Benny Bowen, a former Belleville and Trenton hockey player of years standing, was pressed into service and the game commenced long after starting time leaving the patrons shivering in near zero weather. A sturdy Trenton defence, headed by Stogan, halted Belleville's early drives with Harvey thwarting the visitors at the goal-mouth before Coach Stan Jackson's sextette took to the offensive and were rewarded halfway through the first period, when Maxwell took Hamilton's long pass and beat Fitzpatrick from close in. Seconds later Lesperance set up another perfect one for Maxwell and that made it 2-0 for the home team.

A change of lines saw Don Barrett intercept a pass and drive through the Trenton defence for a pretty lone effort that put Coach Holway's Belleville kids back in the running with the visitors' first score. Bush drew down a major penalty that gave Hamilton a chance to help the locals as he pulled the Belleville defence aside, slipped the rubber to Lesperance and Trenton led 3-1. When all was even Johnny Semark raced into a corner and passed perfectly to B. Meagher who rapped the old "boot heel" home for Belleville with the period ending 3-2 for Trenton.

The second period saw Trenton doing all the scoring as Hamilton flashed the red light on a solo effort and Jack Taylor rapped the rubber home from Lemorre's pass inside the Belleville defence zone.

Belleville Carries Play

Undaunted the Belleville sextette carried the play early in the last stanza and were rewarded at the halfway mark when Holway stickhandled through centre, drew the defence aside and passed to Jerry Moher, who had little trouble in rapping the rubber behind Harvey. With the count standing 5-3 Belleville moved all out as Lesperance stole the rubber raced to the blue line and passed to Hamilton, who went in alone and scored his second goal and the final counter.

It was a typical Belleville-Trenton hockey game with little quarter given or requested as the game was enjoyed by a goodly crowd and played on fast ice. The win evened matters after Belleville had won at home earlier in the week.

The line-ups:-

Belleville, goal Fitzpatrick, defence Bush and Rosetti, centre J. Wardaugh, wings Barrett and Moher, alternates Holway, B. Meagher, Soule, Semark, Day, A. Meagher and Rollins.

Trenton, goal Harvey, defence Stogan and Campbell, centre Taylor, wings Scott and Johnson, alternates Lesperance, Maxwell, Lemorre, Hamilton and Filion.

JACK'S MANAGER SCREAMS THOUGH HIS BOXER WON

Lulu Costantino Gives the Champion Real Classy Go for Ten Rounds

New York, Jan. 8 —(AP)— Beau Jack has a win over Lulu Costantino and a healthy slice of a $43,161 melon to show for 30 minutes of work on Mike Jacobs' first Madison Square Garden fight show of 1944 but his manager, Chick Wergeles, is screaming from the rooftops the familiar refrain, "we was robbed." The crowd of 14,876 detected no larceny.

When they counted up the ballots after the non-title 10-rounder between the New York version of lightweight champ and Costantino it was discovered Referee Eddie Josephs had voted for Lulu, 8 rounds to 2, and the two judges had given the nod to Jack, 5 rounds to 4 with one even.

Wergeles was disturbed, to put it mildly, that the referee had voted against his boy Jack. He hastily drew up plans to hie the champion out of town, hinted that he already had signed for one such scrap and threatened to call off the Beau's Jan. 28 Garden date with Sammy Angott. Mr. Jacobs was not worried unduly.

Costantino, the New York East Sider who is the pride of the Johnston brothers, made the former Georgia shoeshine boy look bad as Beau missed his bobbing target time after time by as much as three feet. The 4 to 1 underdog outsped the champ but he couldn't punch hard enough to offset the Beau who was always boring in, missing plenty, but always moving in and throwing punches. Jack weighed 139 and Lulu 130.

Interscholastic Basketball And Hockey Will Continue In Bay of Quinte Group

St. Michael's Academy Will Enter Senior and Junior Hockey Teams

PROPOSE FIELD DAY

Interscholastic basketball and hockey will continue on a larger scale than ever in the Bay of Quinte group of the C.O.S.S.A. this winter it was decided at the semi-annual meeting of the Bay of Quinte Interscholastic conference here Friday night. Secondary schools represented were Belleville Collegiate, Tweed, Stirling, Trenton High School, Picton Collegiate and Albert College.

The district Interscholastic hockey picture is not unchanged, except for an additional entry from St. Michael's Academy. In metropolitan area of Belleville—B.C.I., St. Mikes and Albert College will round out both senior and junior interscholastic hockey groups, this being the first season the "Irish" have entered both series. Hockey in the northern group, sometimes referred to as the Trent Valley Interscholastic league, will again see Marmora, Stirling and Tweed High Schools playing senior Interscholastic hockey only, as has been the case for years past.

Several New Schools Entered

Several new school entries in the two basketball series were noted, when 12 teams were suggested in both girls' and boys' basketball. In the boys' series Picton Collegiate entered a junior squad, as did Belleville Collegiate, Albert College and Stirling High School, a new entry. In the senior boys' category only Belleville Collegiate and Albert College are being anticipated, announced convener H. Townsend. In the girls' section, however, Picton C.I. entered a senior squad as did Trenton and Belleville C.I., while Albert College is being counted on. The matter of junior girls' basketball will be between B.C.I. and Albert College, with no other entries being suggested.

In the boys' junior basketball group B.C.I., Stirling and Picton agreed upon home-and-home games and will invite Albert College to participate. However, in the event the latter school does not choose to make road trips and play return games with the other three schools, then the junior interscholastic cage series will include but the initial three schools named, Stirling, Picton and Belleville Collegiate.

President Lester Shiels addressed the meeting and expressed hopes that the annual C.O.S.S.A. annual basketball finals between the Bay of Quinte, Georgian Bay and Niagara District winners would continue throughout 1944. "This is the only successful financial play-offs we have been able to continue in war years, but schools participating next spring will be called upon for additional fees," explained President Shiels as he urged the Bay of Quinte group to continue membership and affiliation in the provincial interscholastic cage playdowns.

Suggests Annual Field Day

The chief item on the agenda was presented by T. E. Moffatt, secretary and treasurer of the Bay of Quinte conference from Tweed. The proposal was the resumption of the annual Bay of Quinte Interscholastic field day, that was dropped for the first time since inauguration in 1943.

"I would propose that the three Belleville Schools, Belleville Collegiate, St. Michael's and Albert College combine to name a committee to study ways and means whereby our annual field day may be resumed in 1944. After all Belleville is the central point and has an ideal athletic field available at Albert College," stated Secretary Moffatt in his plea towards the 1944 resumption of a Bay of Quinte Interscholastic track and field meet. Later representatives from each local secondary school were named to such a committee. Messrs. Townsend (B.C.I.), Doran (St. Mikes) and Pepper (Albert College) were named to the committee to make a report before Easter.

The schools and representatives present were: Belleville Collegiate, Miss I. Morton and H. Townsend; St. Michael's Academy, B. W. McQuaid, Tweed; Messrs. Burns and Moffatt; Stirling, Messrs. Good and Paul; Picton, Messrs. Sutton and Perkins, and Albert College, Mr. Pepper.

Sammy Byrd Scores Four Under Par in First Round

By The Canadian Press

With a spectacular 66 on the par 71 course of Wilshire Country Club, Sammy Byrd, former outfielder of the New York Yankees, roared to the front in the championship first round of the $12,500 Los Angeles Open golf tournament yesterday. Trailing with 69 were such stars as Olin Dutra, who was playing his home course, Jimmy Hines of New York and Willie Hunter of the Riviera Club, Los Angeles. Byrd, who quit baseball in 1936 to specialize in golf, registered six birdies in the 18 holes and putted faultlessly throughout.

A galaxy clustered in the 70-score groove for the day, including Ellsworth Vines of Pasadena, former tennis champion; amateur Ralph Evans of Inglewood, Calif.; Leo Diegel of Tucson, Ariz., and Johnny Bulla of Chicago. Recent rains resulting in slow greens spoiled the play for many competitors in the field of 135 qualifiers.

President Frank Sargent of the C.A.H.A. announced at Port Arthur last night the lifting of the suspension for the war's duration of Joe Gollat of Fort William for alleged breach of contract with Buffalo Bisons of the American Hockey League in 1942. Gollat will be permitted to play in Fort William only.

George Hayes of Ingersoll, baseball organizer and O.H.A. referee, has been appointed to the refereeing staff of the American Hockey League and will officiate Saturday night at Cleveland in the game between the Barons and Buffalo Bisons.

The public address system at Crosley Field, Cincinnati, will be used to explain plays and decisions in the coming baseball season for home games of the Reds in the National League, it was announced last night by general manager Warren C. Giles.

Pitcher for the Detroit Tigers for 14 years, George Joseph Mullin died at his Wabash, Ind., home yesterday after a month's illness. He was credited with a no-hit game against St. Louis Browns July 4, 1912, and led the American League twirlers in 1909 with 29 wins and eight losses.

Willie Hoppe of New York held the lead, 250 points to 224, yesterday at Kansas City, Kans., at the close of five blocks of play in a 1,900 non-title billiard match with Welker Cochran of San Francisco.

Pitcher Emil (Dutch) Leonard of the Washington Senators was reclassified 1-A by the U. S. Draft Board at Springfield, Ill., yesterday and the knuckle-ball specialist expected to be called for service early in February.

President George Trautman of the American Baseball Association and chairman of the minor leagues' post-war planning committee declared yesterday he did not expect radical changes in the baseball set-up and had no fear pro football would displace the diamond sport after the war, adding "But I do think baseball needs to be alert."

BATTLES BEING WAGED FOR 2ND AND 4TH PLACE

No Chance of Catching Canadiens and Rangers Far Out of Race

LEAFS SECOND

By the Canadian Press

The disparity of player strength which has split the National Hockey League race into four practically water-tight division leaves little room for speculation on anything except the battles now being waged for second and fourth place.

Montreal Canadiens are so far in front and New York Rangers are so far behind there is little prospect of immediate change in their fortunes, but there is no leeway in the other two divisions. Toronto Maple Leafs and Boston Bruins are deadlocked for second place with 28 points while a similar impasse occurs in the struggle for fourth place, which finds Chicago Black Hawks and Detroit Red Wings on even terms with 20 points.

Some progress in settling these two duels should be made in week-end competition which calls for Boston to play at Toronto tonight and Chicago at Detroit Sunday night. The other two games match top and bottom, Rangers playing at Montreal Saturday and at home against the Canadiens Sunday.

The Boston-Toronto game marks the farewell appearance of Don Gallinger, 18-year-old Port Colborne, Ont., centre now in his second season with Bruins. Gallinger, one of the league's brightest young stars, has been ordered to report to the R. C. A. F. Monday.

What's Doing in Sport

Detroit — (AP) — Even while missing, Bobcat Bob Montgomery, former holder of the New York-Pennsylvania version of the lightweight title, is quite a puncher. He proved it last night by hammering out a unanimous 10-round decision at Olympia Stadium over Joey Peralta of Douglas, Ariz.

There was no knockdown. Montgomery weighed 137, three pounds more than Peralta.

Miami, Fla. — (AP) — Fans turned out 12,726 strong for Hialeah track's opening yesterday, when Herbert M. Woolf's Adulator won the featured $5,000 added inaugural handicap by half a length. An opening day mutuels record was hung up as $635,738 passed into the wickets.

Nanaimo, B.C. — (CP) — President Jack Ryan of the Pacific Coast Senior Hockey League said last night he expects Nanaimo Army will continue to play scheduled games as this will not be in conflict with defence headquarters ruling barring soldier teams from Allan Cup and Memorial Cup play. Army would not participate in any league play-offs, however.

Cleveland — (AP) — American Hockey League teams will be required to name a team captain and substitute captain for all games, a league rules interpretation meeting decided last night. The new regulations stipulated that a captain represent his club in all protests unless he is in the penalty box. In this case, the sub-leader must replace him.

Port Arthur — (CP) — Frank Sargent, president of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, said yesterday the C.A.H.A. "regrets" the loss of Army hockey teams, but accepts "without any protest" the ruling from Ottawa. It was announced in Ottawa that Army teams and Army personnel will not be permitted to play in Allan and Memorial Cup competition.

Toronto — (CP) — The Globe and Mail says today there are rumors that Thomas (Nipper) Rowe, identified with starting and schooling of horses on Canadian race tracks for 23 years, is planning to resign as starter on tracks operated by the incorporated Canadian racing associations. The paper said that Walter Richey, native of Arnprior, Ont., likely will succeed Rowe if the resignation materializes.

ST. CATHARINES NEEDS OVERTIME TO BEAT KINGSTON

Register 6-5 Win but Time Almost Up When Winning Goal Scored

BELLINGER HERO

By The Canadian Press

St. Catharines Saints required almost 10 minutes of overtime to register a 6-5 victory against Kingston Frontenac Army last night at St. Catharines in the only played match of the senior O.H.A. series, Toronto R.C.A.F. having defaulted their scheduled game at Hamilton because of the Air Force ruling against continued participation in Allan Cup hockey.

Twice during the encounter the issue was deadlocked, the score standing 1-1 at the close of the first period on scores by Red Reynolds of the Saints and Tisdale for Army. St. Catharines held a comfortable 5-3 lead going into the 3rd period but Doran and Foster quickly made it square at 5-5. Eventually necessitating extra time with Blink Bellinger ramming home the shot for the winning goal. As a result, the Saints went into leadership with the Kingston squad for first place in the standing with 18 points apiece but the rivals face each other once again tonight on Kingston ice — when anything can happen.

Eleven players accounted for the 11 scores last night, the sharpshooters for the winners being Reynolds, Goble, Mundrick, Backor, Mason and Bellinger. Scorers for Kingston were Tisdale, Grigg, White, Doran and Foster.

In the one junior O.H.A. fixture in series "A" at Port Colborne, Stratford Kroehlers came from behind in the third stanza to win 6-5 against the Recreationists who clung to a one-goal margin with less than four minutes to go, only to see Rohfritch equalize on a shot set up by McKelvey and Jackson, and Jackson win the struggle with a score just two minutes from the end.

Morrison was the leading goalgetter for Stratford with two while McKelvey, Schillizi, Rohfritsch and Jackson earned one each. For Port Colborne, Pitts bagged two and singles were registered by Wallace, Simpel and Savicky. It was the 4th win for Stratford in 12 starts. The game brought no change in the group standing.

Providence Goalie Sold to Chicago

Providence, R.I., Jan. 8—(AP)—Goalie Mike Karakas of Providence Reds was sold today to Chicago Black Hawks of the National Hockey League for cash, believed to be upwards of $10,000 and two players. The Hawks sent Goalie Vic Highton and Forward Gordon Buttry to the Reds and also gave them option on a third but undisclosed man.

Karakas broke into pro hockey with the Hawks in 1935-36 and won the Calder Trophy as the outstanding rookie that season. He joins the Hawks in Detroit Sunday night Mike was "farmed" to Providence mid-season in 1938-39 and sold to the Providence Club the next year.

CASUAL COMMENT

by K.J.C.

Near Thing.

A soldier whose main trouble was extreme talkativeness was on escort duty with a corporal taking an important prisoner to headquarters.

Before starting he had been told that on no account was he to speak; a bet of a tin of cigarettes had been made that he couldn't keep silent until reaching headquarters.

They went in single file, the soldier quite mute.

On arriving at headquarters, the corporal, without looking round, said: "Well, Tommy, you've won the bet."

"Yes," replied Tommy, "but you nearly had me when the prisoner escaped."

Trenton Evens It.

FO. Stan Jackson's Trenton kids turned the tables on "Toots" Holway's Belleville Juniors last night over in Billie House's native village and to the tune of 6-3. The homesters got the jump on the local kids when Maxwell went to town and scored two goals at the halfway mark in the first stanza, just quick like a bunny. Out in front a brace the homesters were never headed and every time Belleville scored and moved anxiously to the fore, Jackson's kids broke away and the result was another Trenton goal. Actually the Belleville boys were inside the Trenton zone enough to win a season of games, but between Stogan and Harvey the locals just couldn't get the rubber in the net, which might all add up to the fact that the Holway-led crowd need considerable practice in the old art of "shooting where the goalie isn't."

Trenton's defence, bolstered by Stogan, stood up much better than in Tuesday night's game here, when Belleville won 8-3, and perhaps therein lies the answer to last night's finale. However, after Maxwell scored the first two goals and Hamilton added a brace more Belleville's three counters didn't counteract and now the squads are even and may not meet again, even in the play offs.

When Referee Ken Davis didn't show up Bennie Bowen, former Belleville goalie, was pressed into service and although Bennie is more interested in Merchant Marine sailing for the United Nations he still likes his hockey.

Interscholastic Sports.

It looks like a gala winter for the boys and lassies of secondary schools throughout the Bay of Quinte area for both hockey and basketball. Why even Stirling High School is giving the hoop game a trial in the boys' junior section, along with Picton, Belleville and Albert College, providing the latter school will participate in a home-and-home game series. Already the other three agreed on that subject to protect Stirling and Picton last night. Locally the three secondary schools, Albert, St. Mikes and the Belleville Collegiate will battle it out in both senior and junior hockey circles, while in the northern end of the circuit, Tweed, Stirling and Marmora will maul each other in their annual senior hockey round-up, which is usually something to talk about.

Homer Townsend, athletic director at B.C.I. in the boys' department, entered senior and junior squads in all categories, namely hockey and basketball. The same is expected from Albert College, although Mr. Pepper, the Albert coach, reserved the right of final announcement until next week. Bert McQuaid represented St. Mikes, as Jack Doran was over in Trenton with the Belleville Juniors and Bert entered junior and senior hockey squads for the "Irish."

Welcome News.

The matter of the erection of a modern artificial ice arena in Peterborough has again come to the front, according to Scribe Fred Craig in a recent sports article. The Liftlock City scribe says:

"The campaign to put an artificial ice arena for Peterborough in the forefront of this city's post-war program has been quiet over the holiday season but the drive will soon be under way and in the meanwhile firms, sporting organizations and individuals should not lose sight of the object of the campaign and be prepared to do their part when the call for action comes. This winter's experience, with Peterborough out of the O.H.A. picture entirely for the first time in more than half a century and without even a city league to help develop young hockey players, has surely emphasized the need of a modern arena more forcibly than all the propaganda that could be put together. The simple truth is that artificial ice for hockey and skating has become a community necessity in all Canadian centres and no city the size of Peterborough should be willing to try and get along without such a building, any more than it would try to get along without parks, or paved streets, or other municipal facilities of a similar nature. The campaign will soon be under way in earnest and should have the support of the community."

Team of the Year.

The New York Yankees barely nosed out the Notre Dame football team to gain rating as the No. 1 team of 1943, chosen in a poll of sports editors by the Associated Press. It was the twelfth straight year that a major league team had gained this honor, the Cardinals being acclaimed in 1942. The Yanks and Irish received the same number of first-place votes, 32 each, but the diamond kings gained their winning margin in total points, 168 to 166, through the balloting for second and third. The Cardinals rated third in the poll, being the only other baseball club to finish among the first ten.

The Yankees also finished fourth in the news service's poll on the greatest comeback in 1943, with Football Coach A. A. Stagg, first; Golfer Patty Berg, second, and Footballer Bronko Nagurski, third.

Luke Appling of the Chicago White Sox, American League batting champion, finished behind the Yankees in the comeback voting. Other comebacks to gain recognition among the first dozen in the poll were Schoolboy Rowe of the Phillies, Joe Gordon of the Yankees, and Rip Sewell of the Pirates.

Toronto, Jan. 8 — (CP) — Dick Irvin couldn't believe it if he had not seen it with his own eyes. The Montreal Canadiens' coach says his players actually are concerned about something other than their share of goals and assists. Canadiens, Dick told Dink Carroll of the Montreal Gazette, are willing to take time out from their goal-scoring to help goalie Bill Durnan. "Against the Red Wings the other night, after we scored our first three goals, the fellows said, 'We've got enough goals to win now. Let's help Bill get a shut-out.' When Grosso scored for Detroit they were as sore as if they had lost the game. I've never seen it happen like that before in all the time I've been in hockey."

Carroll adds this comment: "There was a little incident in that game which may explain the reason for Bill's popularity. He lost his stick and, while it was lying on the ice a Red Wing shot hit the goal-post. Canadiens cleared the puck and Bill retrieved his stick. Then he patted the goalpost affectionately and muttered, 'good old goalpost.'

Identify this Redhead:

He went from third trumpet in the Oxbow, Sask., town band to write sports in Winnipeg and Toronto, enlisted as an army private, went overseas as sergeant, then was recruited by his newspaper as war correspondent. That's right! He's Ralph Allen of the Toronto Globe and Mail, home on furlough after a nifty job of reporting Canadians in action in Italy.

This Will Jar You:

When the lowly New York Rangers obtained defenceman Bob Dill from Buffalo Bisons, the Montreal Herald headed the story: "Rangers get Dill, hoping to get out of pickle."

Across Canada:

New sports columnist of the Halifax Herald is Larry Honnor, whose newspaper experience has taken him to many Canadian cities ... Sqdn. Ldr. James Harold Baird, who received a commendation in the New Year's Honors List, is Jimmy Baird, former jockey who, with his brother Sammy, was a familiar figure on western tracks before the war. Sammy is in the Royal Canadian Navy ...Gypster, King's Plate candidate of the Cosgrave stable, is being trained at Florida's Hialeah Park.

Incidentally:

Spike Larabie, the former Ottawa athlete who made quite a name in sports at Halifax after joining the navy, is reported in serious condition in hospital in Newfoundland following an operation on his head. It is reported the operation was to correct an old hockey injury and that he will never play football or hockey again ... E. O. Sliter, who died last week in Kingston, Ont., aged 80, was a former coach of Queen's University rugby teams and is credited with being the first to use a second line of defence in the Canadian game.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 271

By SAM GORDON

The Kibitser

Slim are the chances of making a slam unless you see 12 tricks. The slam is still slim unless you also know what will be trumps. Even then, it is a slim slam unless you have enough aces and kings.

Settle down to this pair of partnership hands:

SOUTH
♠A K J 7 5
♥A K J 7 5
♦5
♣J 8
NORTH
♠Q 6 4 2
♥Q 6 4 2
♦A J
♣A 4 2

The bidding should go like this:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 S	3 S
4 NT	6 C
6 S	Pass

The response of three spades says north has five tricks, two of which are sure tricks, and support for spades. With seven of his own, south now sees 12 tricks and spades as trumps.

So, south bids four no-trump, the convention bid that says: "Partner, I see 12 tricks; I know what's trump; my hand has two aces and a king, or better; tell me how many aces and kings you have."

Partner must respond with a convention answer. If the answer is five clubs, it shows no aces; five diamonds, one ace and no kings; five hearts, one ace and one king; five spades, an ace and two kings; five no-trump, an ace and three kings.

But if the convention reply is six clubs, it shows two aces and no kings; six diamonds, two aces and one king; six hearts, two aces and two kings; six spades, two aces and three kings.

Therefore, the six clubs response by north in that spot does not say anything about club holdings. It is simply the code reply for showing a hand that contains two aces and no kings.

With opponents holding two kings, south realises that a trick will likely lose in clubs. So, a grand slam bid would be too risky. That makes a small slam bid in spades correct.

A stop in time gathers no loss.

"Edge of Darkness"

"Edge of Darkness," starring Errol Flynn and Ann Sheridan, adapted to the screen from the William Woods novel of the same name, which is scheduled to open at the Capitol Theatre next, is the story of a little Norwegian town's unyielding defiance of Nazi domination.

The production was directed by Lewis Milestone, the man who brought to the screen the greatest story of World War I, "All Quiet On The Western Front." Milestone sincerely believes that in "Edge of Darkness," he has the first truly great film story of the new World War.

An Outstanding Cast

Given a powerful story and a masterly director, Warner Bros. set out to match it with an outstanding cast. Selecting Errol Flynn, Ann Sheridan and Walter Huston from Hollywood, Warner Bros. combed Broadway for the best available talent. The result was a galaxy of New York names rarely seen together in one production. These include Judith Anderson, Ruth Gordon, Charles Dingle, Tonio Selwart, Roman Bohnen, Art Smith, Morris Carnovsky, Helene Thimig, Torben Meyer, Tom Fadden and Francis Pierlot. To these, Warner Bros. added brilliant young Nancy Coleman, seen recently in "Kings Row" and "The Gay Sisters;" Helmut Dantine, lately in "Casablanca;" John Beal, Monte Blue, Virginia Christine and Dorothy Tree.

"He Hired the Boss"
(Comedy Riot)

When a fellow goes all-out for national defence and his gal goes all-out for him the result, as added up by 20th Century-Fox, is the amusing comedy drama, "He Hired The Boss," due next at the Capitol Theatre as the added hit.

The film features Stuart Erwin and Evelyn Venable, two players whose appearance on the screen lately have been too few to satisfy their many fans. And, according to preview critics, their expert performances in "He Hired The Boss" seem to bear-out the fans.

The Canadian Universal News completes the double attraction.

AT THE McCARTHY

You're a Lucky Fellow Mr. Smith

Romantic entertainment with music and action is promised by Universal in "You're a Lucky Fellow Mr. Smith", which opened today at the McCarthy Theatre. An emergency wedding and its amusingly surprising consequences motivates the plot of the zestful drama comedy. Allan Jones and Evelyn Ankers are co-starred.

Prominent screen players in the supporting cast include Billie Burke, David Bruce, Patsy O'Connor, Luis Alberni, Stanley Clements and the Kings Men.

Oscar Brodney authored the original story which takes, for its central character, a beautiful girl who must marry before her twenty-fourth birthday in order to inherit a fortune. Miss Ankers appears as the prospective heiress and the young gentleman of her choice is portrayed by David Bruce. Difficulties arise, however, in that he is in Chicago while she resides in New York. Another complication is the violent opposition of her younger sister. Patsy O'Connor is seen in the latter role and she is the one who succeeds in upsetting the whole scheme by helping to substitute another bridegroom, the part played by Allan Jones.

Much of the breezy entertainment takes place aboard a train en route from New York to Chicago. Highlight among the many comedy scenes is one in which the younger sister pretends to have measles and a Pullman car is sidetracked and quarantined for the night.

Among the eight numbers featured in the film are "On the Crest of a Rainbow", "Swing A-Bye My Baby", "When You're Smiling", and "You're a Lucky Fellow Mr. Smith" sung by Allan Jones and The Kings Men. Jones also renders "You're Eyes Have Told Me So", and Cole Porter's "What is This Thing Called Love", as solo selections.

Second feature attraction is "Vivacious Lady", co-starring Ginger Rogers and James Stewart.

AT THE BELLE

"This is the Army"

Irving Berlin's "This is the Army" which successfully stormed city after city in its original stage version, comes to the screen of the Belle theatre today in its Warner Bros.' Technicolor production. The picture will be a happy invasion of the hearts of America by its stalwart and talented sons in the service.

The Warner Bros. production for Army Emergency Relief uses all three hundred and fifty of the original cast plus heavyweight champion Sergeant Joe Louis. In putting the great show on film, the studio was careful not to alter but to augment it. Thus a large cast of motion picture and radio stars was added as were some old and new Irving Berlin songs.

Hollywood is richly represented by, among others, George Murphy, Joan Leslie, Lieutenant Ronald Reagan, George Tobias, Alan Hale, Charles Butterworth and Una Merkel.

Radio's great star, Kate Smith, sings the beloved hymn, "God Bless America," which she introduced to the nation over the air waves. Frances Langford puts over the new Berlin number "What Does He Look Like" while Gertrude Niesen sings some of the composer's World War 1 tunes.

A screen story was built around the show, linking together the generations of the two world wars and giving the production a plot interest which the stage version lacked.

Based upon a screen play by Casey Robinson and Captain Claude Binyon, Irving Berlin's "This is the Army" was directed by Michael Curtis who directed "Yankee Doodle Dandy," "Casablanca," "Mission to Moscow" and other outstanding motion pictures.

BOXING LOOKS FORWARD TO BUSY YEAR IN 1944

Ball Parks and Outdoor Arenas Will be Used for Staging Bouts

MUST CHANGE SYSTEM

By ABE J. GREENE
President, National Boxing Association.

Patterson, N.J., Jan. 8 (AP) — Anaemic and scrawny in quality, but well fattened and paunchy in box office appeal, boxing in the United States can look forward to another busy year in 1944.

Promoters the country over are setting up for a big year. Lifting of dimouts in coastal areas has added to their anticipation. Ball parks and outdoor arenas are being figuratively whitewashed for a grand summer splurge.

But what of the future? Therein lies the rub.

As one of the major sports industries of the country, boxing can stand to have its collective nose rubbed in the sand a bit. Boxing has its National Boxing Association.

But N.B.A. doesn't have New York in its membership, and so long as the juicy bait of Madison Square Garden payoffs remains without the N.B.A. organization, there will be bountiful mutiny.

In spite of the marked progress other key cities in the country—notably Cleveland, Philadelphia and Los Angeles—have made in staging major attractions, New York, with its Garden and its manna, is still the mecca to which star entertainers turn.

In this new year, and in anticipation of the day when thousands of new-found boxers and fans return from the wars, boxing has got to cut its cloth to a new pattern of decency and universal ethics. Otherwise, how can the farcical dual championships which consistently crop up to plague the game be averted?

I contend this is . . . A weird, untenable and ridiculous situation which should not prevail if boxing were organized on a national scale, with proper power in the hands of its officers.

This blow was announced today by Allied headquarters.

The barge sinkings are estimated to have cost the enemy 100 dead and wounded soldiers.

Little Benny's Note Book

Pop was smoking and thinking and ma said, The Gils were here for their meeting this afternoon, William. I told you we were going to have a meeting to decide on a uniform. The entire organization showed up, she said.

Meaning 6 ladies including ma, Gils being short for Give Lifts to Servicemen, and ma said, While we were all together we took up the topic of whether or not to expand the organization and let other women in, because after all it stands to reason that the 6 charter members can only give a comparatively limited number of lifts to servicemen, but at the same time we didn't feel we wanted the organization to lose it's chief attraction, in other words its exclusiveness. And yet we dont want to be accused of sacrificing usefulness to exclusiveness, so we finely decided to admit any woman who applies, with 2 provisions, first she must pay a small monthly fee as an evidence of good faith, and 2nd she mustn't expect to be allowed to wear the uniform, ma said.

Yee gods, pop said. How about that uniform, did you finally get it designed? he said, and ma said, Well in a vague way, yes, but there was great argument and dissention about the color, and that's what's holding it up. The final bottleneck was whether to make it in red for Daring, or white for Service, she said.

White would surely mean laundry service at least, pop said. Why don't you all just wear a white feather of truce and let it go at that? he said, and ma said, Now that's a coincidence, because as a matter of fact we finely did decide on a compromise. We decided on a baige color, because baige is a nootral one, in other words a truce between red and white, so that's where it stands now, subject to further suggestions at the next meeting, she said.

AT THE BELLE — Lieutenant Ronald Reagan, who plays the role of a corporal in Irving Berlin's "This Is The Army," and Joan Leslie provide the love interest in Warner Bros. screen adaptation of Mr. Berlin's all-soldier show, now on the Belle Theatre screen.

JUSTICE RINFRET

Still Member of Privy Council.

"Knowing the exceptional vigor of his mind, his rich and widely varied scholarship, and the great breadth of his interests, not only Canada but all the countries of the British Commonwealth, will welcome the fact that Sir Lyman Duff's retirement from the position of chief justice of Canada will not affect, in any way, his position as a member of the judicial committee of the privy council of the United Kingdom. Of this highest court, he is a life member.

"Sir Lyman retires from the office of chief justice with the knowledge that no member of the judiciary of Canada has a finer record of service, or has possessed more completely the esteem of the bench and the bar of our country, or the confidence and regard of its citizens."

The new chief justice is 64. Before his appointment to the supreme court 20 years ago, he spent two years as a member of the Quebec Superior Court.

His appointment to the Quebec bench in his early 40's climaxed a brilliant legal career in Montreal, during which he made himself an authority on corporation and municipal law. For 10 years he was Professor of Comparative Law and the Law of Public Utilities at McGill University.

Duff's Closest Collaborater.

During recent years as the senior puisne judge, he has been Sir Lyman's closest collaboratar. Sir Lyman frequently held whispered consultations with his colleague on the bench over points of law raised by the counsel arguing before them or court procedure.

Mr. Justice Rinfret is less volubable than Sir Lyman and speaks slowly and deliberately. He is equally at home in English and in French and his judgments are noted for their clarity and conciseness.

A short man of rather slight build with a bristling mustache, once black but now greying, he takes an active interest in many cultural and social organizations and is a former president of the National Film Society and of L'Alliance Francaise.

Born in Montreal in 1879, he received the degree of Bachelor of Arts after a course at St. Mary's College. He took his legal education at McGill and was called to the bar of Quebec in 1901.

He began his legal practice at St. Jerome, Que., but soon moved to Montreal, where he developed his special mastery in the fields of corporation and municipal law. His one venture into politics was in 1906 when he contested the federal riding of Terrebonne for the Liberal party but was defeated.

10-Year-Old Girl Saved From River By Airman Who Leaps From Bridge

Trenton, Jan. 8—(Special)—Ten-year-old Jean Jackson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Jackson, 149 Dundas St., East, narrowly escaped drowning Friday afternoon while playing alone on the north shore of the mouth of the Trent river, just below the town bridge.

The ice at this spot, where the sewer empties, is very thin but is protected by spruce trees. However the child did not realize the danger until she suddenly went through into the icy waters. Corporal Nelson of the R.C.A.F., crossing the bridge at the time, heard her cries and immediately jumped over the bridge railing and into the icy waters to rescue her. The temperature was just ten above zero and the child received severe shock.

She was taken to a nearby restaurant and from there to the home of her parents by police, while the airman was taken to his home.

Allan Lucas, 19, who lives in Stanley Park, near the Trenton airport, was severely injured and rushed to Belleville General Hospital about 12.45 A.M. Friday morning when the motorcycle on which he was riding collided with a car owned and driven by Murray Faden of No. 6 R. D., R.C.A.F.

Faden had driven from north Campbell St. and was proceeding across the No. 2 Highway to Bay St. when the motorcycle proceeding east struck him broadside. The cycle was almost a complete wreck and the car received a damaged right front fender, although the driver of the latter vehicle was not injured. Trenton police investigated the accident.

NORTH TO DANGER by TOM GILL

CHAPTER 15

"It means you're looking at a detail map of the south shore of Hudson Bay. That crescent-shaped inlet where those arrow marks are drawn is the country east of the Beaver." He pointed at the pile of photographs on the table. "Look. There must be dozens of prints here—most of them centred about that inlet. We're getting close to the trail's end."

Carefully, Colin laid the map in place. "If I'm not back here by noon tomorrow, come to my cabin and wait for me until dark. If I'm not back by then, go straight to Selkirk and the Mounties. Tell them everything. Tell them a plane is making reconnaissance flights south of the bay and it's working with Jonathan Dove."

"But Colin, what's it mean?"

"Something I couldn't make myself believe—somewhere up on the bay the Nazis are getting ready to strike America from the air."

Faced with a thought too ghastly to accept, they stood silent; then Blair whispered, "Where are you going?"

Colin raised the hood of his parka and replied, "After Dove."

Kneeling beside his toboggan, Colin tightened the dogs' harness and slipped off their bells — the work ahead could be done better without a sound.

At the lake's edge, he stopped and circled until he found the fresh ice scratches that told of Dove's passing straight north. With a shout to his dogs, he started in pursuit.

The wind felt warmer and, looking up, he saw that the stars were gone. A bad sign. Warmer weather might mean snow and the obliteration of Dove's tracks.

The dogs themselves caught the scent and, with claws clicking on the ice, they trotted steadily, lapping snow as they ran.

Still warmer. By two o'clock, Colin felt the touch of wet snowflakes on his cheek. Flashlight in hand, he began running ahead of the dogs to urge them on. He saw traces of blood where the crust had cut the feet of Dove's dogs. From his toboggan he took five sets of the small canvas moccasins that trappers make for their dogs and, slipping them over the feet of his animals, tied them securely above the ankle, while understandingly they licked his hands.

By four in the morning Colin stopped and led his dogs a half mile into a clump of spruce. Here, with a snowshoe, he scraped away the snow, and cutting down a few handfuls of boughs, made camp for his team. Five bushy tails wagged as the dogs crowded around him expectantly, but he shook his head. "No fish, old fellows," he apologized. "It's no grub for all of us."

Tying them securely, Colin made his way back to Dove's trail, and on a jutting point of rocks took up his vigil. If Dove returned the way he had gone, he would pass there before dawn in order to reach Learmonth under cover of darkness. To continue farther would be to risk the chance of meeting him head-on—and the quarry for this night was not Jonathan Dove. Time for that later.

The only hazard lay in Dove's discovering the tracks of Colin's toboggan, but this was negligible, for Dove would be facing a strong, snow-laden wind; and, following his own tracks in the darkness, he would not be likely to look for signs of pursuit.

Hours passed. Snow flurries blustered past and twice Colin moved back into the spruce for the solace of a smoke. Then, two hours before dawn, he heard the scrape of a toboggan and the steady patter of dog's feet; Dove was going back to Learmonth.

The way was clear—hurrying to his dog team, Colin took up the northbound trail again.

It was nearly eight when the sun rose—a lurid sun, almost obscured by clouds, and an hour later a fine, steady snow warned of worse things to come. Straight toward a distant point of spruce Dove's trail was leading and caution told Colin to tie his dogs and reconnoitre.

But, even as he hesitated, his doubts were dispelled. Fully a mile ahead five timber wolves came down toward the lake in single file. Out upon the ice they trotted; then, turning, rounded the point of spruce and disappeared. Clearer than words their actions vouched for the absence of any human being. Calling to his lead dog, Colin pushed on. And soon the search ended.

The dogs, sniffling the trail, slackened pace and, stooping, Colin saw the unmistakable tracks of airplane skis. Farther on, a few drops of engine oil stained the ice.

The tracks told the story. Dove had stopped beside the plane and fed his dogs, for a few pieces of white fish lay scattered about. Colin picked up a fragment of freshly torn brown cardboard. A column of numbers was written there in pencil, and he saw that the figure 7 bore the small horizontal cross mark used by Europeans.

Colin's mind went back to that airplane map of the bay, with arrows pointing to the little crescent-shaped inlet. Up there, three hundred miles to the north, the trail was leading. Too far for any dog team trek.

Sunk deep in meditation, it was minutes before Colin raised his head to see that the long-expected blizzard had broken and already the lake shore was blotted out in a swirling curtain of white. Pulling up the hood of his parka, he started his dog team south. None too soon.

In less than an hour the wind had risen to a howling gale, filling the world with snow so needle-fine that Colin could scarcely breathe. For a while, he rode the toboggan but soon the cold forced him to run beside the team. The dogs were whimpering, weaving back and forth. Colin veered westward, hoping that in the lee of the timber the wind's force might be broken.

It was almost noon when he realized he must be far west of the trail, while the fury of the storm increased. He could scarcely see the lead dog.

Blind going now. He let the dogs drift farther west—easier to make for his own cabin than face the wind into Learmonth. Then suddenly he realized the dogs were following a vaguely familiar ridge trail that wound down to the shores of a tiny lake.

Head down, eyes almost shut, Colin followed the toboggan until suddenly the team stopped, and, laying his hand on the lead dog's head, Colin felt him shiver—in the same second he heard the long, quavering howl of a wolf. Then he understood. They were on the trail to Nate Tennant's cabin—he was farther west than he had thought.

Storm-beaten and weary, Colin remembered their quarrel the night before, while the dogs looked at him, whining. He knew they were hungry—hungry as himself — and the temptation to risk it grew strong. Sooner or later he was bound to meet Tennant, so why not now?

And if Tennant was not there, he could borrow some whitefish and rest his team under the unwritten law of the north — the never-failing offer of refuge in a storm. He turned his dogs toward Nate's cabin.

Tying them well back from the trail where they would not be close to Nate's wolf team, Colin patted the lead dog's head. "Food soon, old boy," and he knocked on the door.

No answer, but the latch was up, and, shoving his shoulder against it, Colin entered, eyes half-frozen. As he closed the door, Nate Tennant stood watching him.

No sign of welcome on the big trapper's face; his eyes were cold as Arctic ice, and in that moment Colin knew he should have gone on. Too late now. He could only make the best of it.

"I've got a team of tired, hungry dogs outside, Nate." He drew off his mitts. "Mind if I feed and rest them?"

"Your dogs are welcome—but not you!"

Colin made no move, but the taut muscles of his jaw showed how near Nate had come to the danger line. Worn out with his battle against the storm, weary with the past night's sleeplessness, Colin's own patience was rapidly thinning. Only a single word was needed—the merest spark.

But calmly, so calmly Colin wondered at the sound of his own voice, he answered, "All right, Nate. If that's the way it is, I'll go."

He turned, then stopped—Tennant had stepped between him and the door.

"You're not going anywhere." One hand closed on the fold of Colin's shirt and roughly Tennant jerked him close. "I told you last night what would happen if I saw you again. I gave you fair warning to get out. Now they'll carry you out."

Within Colin something snapped. At sight of Tennant's savage face thrust so close to him and the feel of that hairy hand gripping his shirt, the memory of past provocations swept over him in a red wave.

"Nate" — the words came very slowly—"you're not man enough to drive me out of this country; you're not man enough to keep me away from Blair."

Ripping off his parka, Colin threw it behind him. "You've been asking for this fight all your life."

For the space of a heartbeat the two men stood poised, while Colin was conscious of the roar of flames rising in the stovepipe and the solitary howl of a wolf outside.

In the next second, Tennant struck.

A vicious blow, driven with all the power of Nate's huge shoulder muscles, catching Colin high on the chest, sent him crashing back against the cabin wall. There he steadied himself.

Then a sweep of Tennant's hand and a chair splintered in a far corner. He lowered his head and rushed at Rae.

In the centre of the room they met. Flat-footed, flailing with both hands, making no effort to ward off the other's blows, they fought almost toe to toe.

Lighter by twenty pounds, Colin gave ground as Nate crowded him. Twice around the cabin they fought, Colin forced ever backward by the very bulk of his huge adversary. His lip was bleeding, and a blue-red welt stood out upon his cheek, but he was beyond the reach of pain.

Savagely Colin lashed out and missed. A blow from Tennant caught him squarely on the jaw, and he fell, upsetting the table; then rose to his knees.

"Get up!" Nate towered over him. "Get up! I haven't even started."

Slowly Colin gathered himself, shaking his throbbing head to clear it, and through a blood-hued mist he heard Tennant laugh. Already triumph was lighting Nate's eyes. Anxious—too anxious—to get it over with, he lunged again, missed, and, losing balance, struck the stove. With a crash it overturned, scattering burning brands across the cabin, and the stovepipe clattered to the floor.

At that moment Colin was on him. A terrific blow drove Tennant's head back. Nate stumbled against the bunk, then, growling like a wounded bear, came out again, and once more Colin struck.

Out of the stove a thin tongue of flame began licking its red way across the floor until it reached the wall and, spreading fanlike, climbed swiftly upward, crackling through tinder-dry moss that chinked the logs.

Unheeding this blaze, the desperate battlers fought on. By now that spreading flame had gained the rafters, filling the place with smoke while the dogs and wolves raised a maddened, frantic chorus.

Then suddenly it was over. Out of the smoke Colin saw Nate's face loom and he struck with all his might. A spasm of pain darted through his hand; the face disappeared.

Guardedly, Colin took a step forward, and his foot touched Tennant's prostrate body. For a moment he swayed, then groped his way out the door. The cold touch of snow on his face brought sanity surging back; he saw smoke billowing from the cabin. Even as he watched, a spearhead of flames flared out of the open door; a window broke with a crash of glass.

Throwing both arms across his face, Colin groped his way into the cabin. He called. No answer. He felt about until he reached Tennant, dragged him oustide and, rolling him in the snow, beat the flames from his clothes.

One more trip into that blazing cabin—and only one. But Colin was able to rescue his parka and two heavy blankets.

His dogs were dancing in a frenzy as he laid Nate down among the blankets and tied him to the toboggan. In a hoarse voice he gave the signal to his team; wildly barking, they tore down the trail.

Dog-tired, barely able to keep pace with the team, Colin rode the toboggan on the down-grades.

Hours later, it seemed, Colin was standing before his cabin door. With a sense of blurred recognition he knew that someone was coming out; the dogs were barking and jumping. Then all the world went black.

Colin Rae awoke on the floor of his cabin, with someone kneeling by his side; and as his vision cleared he spoke the one word, "Blair".

Painfully he asked through frost and fist-cracked lips, "Where's Nate?"

Then he saw Tennant's body sprawled across the room.

Aching in every joint, Colin forced himself to his feet and, with Blair's help, laid Nate on the bunk. Colin read the question in Blair's eyes. "I knocked him down", he said. "He must have hit the stove when he fell. Let's get some water".

Together they bathed Tennant's wounds. Then Colin looked up. "How long was I out?" he asked.

"Not long". Blair did not raise her eyes from Tennant. "Where did this happen?"

"In his cabin".

Rae forced a little hot water between Nate's dry lips; then at sight of Blair's clouded eyes, he came and stood over her.

"Better say it, Blair", he urged.

"What's the use of saying anything? But did you have to go to his cabin to force a quarrel?"

"I didn't," Colin faltered, "but—Blair", he said, "its no good kidding ourselves. There's something in Nate, or me, or in both of us—We'll never change—A soon as this is over I'm going away". Again he looked down at Nate's feverish face. "If he's not conscious by morning, I'll take him into Learmonth".

"Not to Learmonth"! Fear quickened Blair's voice. "Keep away from Learmonth! Dove is looking for you. I think he's found out something, Colin. He wanted to know if you were here at the cabin, and I told him you were out on the trap line along the Upper Nelson. I never saw him so deadly quiet. Does he know you followed him last night?"

"I don't think so".

"What did you find?"

Rae told her. "I think that plane was bound for the arm of the bay where the photographs were taken", he said. "Dove passed me on the way back. I'm almost certain he didn't see my track". He was silent, his thoughts on Blair's father: Had Dr. Benedict talked?

"It may have been Colonel Dowling's message", he heard Blair say.

Sharply, Colin turned. "What message?"

"Colonel Dowling radioed me from Winnipeg. He's flying up to see you day after tomorrow. Do you suppose—" She stopped, and with a little cry leaned over Nate who had opened his eyes. For a moment they rested on Blair, then closed again, and Tennant slept.

Blair pointed toward the farther bunk. "That's what you need, too", she counseled.

Colin did not awaken until after midnight; then, at his insistence, Blair curled up in the chair by Tennant's bedside, and ten minutes later she was asleep.

Refreshed with a night of rest, Colin felt no ill effects of his encounter except for an aching hand and swollen cheek. He bathed his face and shaved and, when dawn began graying the window, set about boiling coffee.

He looked toward Blair— cheek pillowed on her arm, long legs tucked under her, she was still sleeping. Gently he laid a blanket about her shoulders. The long, heavy-lashed eyes fluttered, but did not quite open, and the lips half parted, as if ready to smile.

A crimson shaft of sunlight struck suddenly athwart the window, lighting the cabin with dramatic brilliance, touching two sleeping forms.

Water Gasoline For Speed

(From "Newsweek" Magazine.)

Have you ever noticed, when motoring on a damp evening, how the family bus just seems to purr along—even now, old as she is? Well, that happens because an ideal climatic condition for internal combustion engines exists: The damp air is fine mixed with gasoline. A smoother explosion with more oomph results.

Recently after a delay for military reasons, Pratt and Whitney announced its engineers had invented a gadget with which our fighter pilots say 35,000 feet up in the dry, frigid substratosphere, could figuratively reach out and grab a lot of that same damp air and put on amazing bursts of speed just when needed.

Here is how the P. & W. water injection device works: It squirts water into the airplane's cylinders, right with the fuel mixture. The trick: The water is not mixed with the gasoline; it is shot into the vaporized mixture of air and high test gasoline within the cylinder, and that mixture is so hot that the water turns into dry steam. In the process it exerts a cooling influence and then combustion takes place with more power but with less heat than when the cylinder is using gasoline and air alone.

Water injection is not used for any great length of time, but when a pilot in combat wants to hop his sights on the enemy or shake a Zero off his tail he does not need it for long.

To work the injector, all the pilot does is squeeze a grip, much like that which fires his machine guns, and his 2,000 horsepower Wasp engine temporarily takes on a lot more horsepower—just how much is a military secret.

Farm Buildings Of Tomorrow

(An Owen Sound Sun-Times Editorial)

A U.S. farm magazine, "Capper's Farmer", published by Senator Capper in Kansas, has an interesting article on farm buildings of the future, which while written for the middle west corn country, applies also to the farmers of Ontario. It is written by Dr. Deane G. Carter, agricultural engineer at the University of Illinois, who emphasizes that the scientific and mechanical wonders of the postwar period will play as prominent a part in future farming as in city and industrial life.

Dr. Carter predicts that farm buildings of the future will change in three major ways (1) They will be designed for multiple uses. (2) They will be prefabricated. (3) They will be more substantially built. Summing it all up, farm buildings will have greater utility than ever before. They will be thoroughly equipped with electricity as rural power projects are pushed ahead. They will help farmers to diversify. There will be changes in many details. Bins will be made stronger to carry far heavier soybean, rye and barley crops. Buildings will be broader and not so high. Dr. Carter claims high barns are inefficient because crops can be stored more easily on the ground floor than overhead. There will be greater emphasis on storage space for machinery such as trucks, tractors and other engines. There will be greater sanitation in the future. Concrete will be used more widely. Drainage and water system will be highly developed.

This is information on the barns. The farm house of the future comes in for attention too. Central heating will be installed. The house will be insulated against the chill winds of winter and the hot sun of summer. Plumbing will be far more extensive. The water supply will be much improved. Electrical appliances of all kinds will be common.

Here in Ontario electric power already is available in most of the older rural sections, and will be rapidly extended as soon as war restrictions are fully lifted. In this regard Ontario is ahead of most parts of the United States. However, in only rare instances has there been any attempt to modernize farm buildings along the lines proposed by Dr. Carter. If an era of property can be assured the farmers of Ontario they will quickly improve and modernize their farms.

Canadian Air Squadron in Italy On Constant Duty Against Huns

By ALLAN NICKELSON
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

London, Jan. 8 — (CP) — A mobile force that leaps from one airfield to another behind an advancing army, the City of Windsor squadron sends its Spitfires roaring into the air daily from a muddy Italian plain to the other side of the front line in a death challenge to the faded power of the German air force in the Mediterranean.

The powerful whine of its fighters has been all but continuous as the squadron has kept pace with the great advance of the Eighth Army that swept the enemy from Africa, Sicily and southern Italy. It has been a tough grind and there is more to come.

Life has been a mad jumble of fighting and moving in dust and heat, rain, mud and cold in the year that the squadron has been under canvas. No other unit has had a greater share of discomforts and primitive living, yet right now squadron morale is the highest ever.

I spent a day and a night with this "hot" outfit in its tented living quarters and bog-like airfield and portable wire runways.

Officers and men walked about in worn battledress, open shirts and muddy footgear. A discipline adjusted to suit front line conditions worked well and comradeship was closer than on many stations.

Primitive Accommodations.

Inside the tents, each shared by three or four, the fellows sleep in folding cots. Empty gasoline tins, scattered about, serve a variety of uses ranging from ash trays to book ends and correspondence files.

I shared a tent with Sqdn.-Ldr. Ken MacGillivray of Toronto, Public Relations Officer, and FO. Ken Coleman, photographer from St. Thomas, Ont.

Led by Sqdn.-Ldr. Bert Houle, D.F.C., Massey, Ont., some of the pilots had finished a dawn patrol when we arose in the morning and walked through mud to the main mess tent. There, thawed by a coal fire in a tin that once contained gasoline, we took a truck to the field and watched four planes take off on a front line patrol.

Led by Flt.-Lt. Hedley Everard of Timmins, Ont., the patrol soon returned. It came in fast and the boys made a rush for the mess when it was announced mail and parcels had arrived.

Over a steak dinner there was brief mention of the day's activities. Such pilots as newcomer John Case, a flying officer from (75 Becher St.) London, Ont.; Flt.-Lt. William Whiteside of Simcoe, Ont., and FO. Gilbert Lequerrier of Montreal, passed around newspaper clippings containing the mail from home.

There was plenty of letter-writing that day, by such fellows as WO. Paul Lapointe, relative of Canada's former justice minister, who hails from Montreal and WO. Walter Chittenden of St. Catharines, Ont.

Incidentally, the boys are unanimous that one of the first places they'll make for on their return to Canada will be Windsor, Ont., the city that adopted them.

Windsor citizens took the squadron to heart. Cigarettes, packages and letters come from people they never have seen. It gives them a warm feeling inside.

Official Predicts Lots of Lay-Offs In Near Future

Ottawa, Jan. 8 —(CP)— There will be "lots of lay-offs between now and June, D. W. Foster, Associate Director of National Selective Service, said yesterday in forecasting before a meeting of the Canadian Restaurant Association that National Selective Service will be called on to solve a "lot more" manpower problems.

He said that between 2,000 and 4,000 men are being laid off in a war industry in Nobel, Ont. (Defence Industries Ltd.). Of these, perhaps only 100 will not be placed immediately in other employment, and it is expected that slightly more than 100 claims for unemployment insurance will be made.

Mr. Foster said that in future there will be 100,000 men after jobs rather than jobs available for 100,000 men. Unemployment can happen again, and "I think the best thing to do is to talk little about it and do as much as we can to avoid it."

He suggested that a post-war employment service, modelled on present-day Selective Service, be set up. An "efficient" government employment service would do much to help solve post-war labor problems.

Shortage of 100,000 in Priority Groups.

Speaking in place of Arthur MacNamara, Selective Service Director, who is ill, Mr. Foster said there is a shortage of 100,000 men in industries in "A," "B," and "C" priority groups. About 15,000 workers were shifted into essential jobs by the six compulsory transfer orders issued so far, but compulsory labor transfers could not be credited with putting the manpower situation "over the hump."

Kenneth W. Taylor, Foods Administrator for the Prices Board, said no great increase in Canada's farm production can be expected because of the manpower situation. The 1944 food supply will be about the same as in 1943, but there will be greater demand for available supplies.

Farmers, with three-quarters of pre-war manpower, have boosted their production 42 per cent. Despite this, demands for food from Canada still exceed output and they can be expected to increase when the liberation of Europe began.

Furniture Donated For Recruiting Office

An appeal made several weeks ago by the Canadian Women's Army Corps for furniture for their Recruiting Office in the city netted them several chairs, tables and a settee which the two corporals, Lois Pilkington and Helen Knopp have adapted to their use. The latter article of furniture was covered with a tasteful cretonne and made into an attractive addition to the office. The girls have hung curtains of the same material and are arranging to have the floors sanded and put into shape. When this work is finally completed, the C.W.A.C. Recruiting Office will be one of the finest appearing ones in the Province.

When the two army girls first opened the office they were inclined to be doubtful whether it would ever be possible to make it into what it had always been, a store, but with tireless and ceaseless endeavor, they have made such progress as to be able to visualize a recruiting centre worthy of any city. Heating the office was at first a problem as fuel was so difficult to obtain, but after a bit of "scrounging", they managed to get sufficient coal from the Belleville Armouries and since have been able to obtain a continuous supply. There is complete co-operation between the Armouries authorities and the C.W.A.C. Recruiting Centre, and the two N.C.O.'s are expecting exceptional results when they launch their more intensive campaign for recruits.

Brings Bolivian Views to U.S.

Washington, Jan. 8—(AP)— The revolutionary government in Bolivia is sending another representative to Washington, although United States State Secretary Cordell Hull has indicated chances for United States recognition are slim.

Fernando Iturralde Chinel, Minister of Information and now undersecretary of Foreign Affairs in the new regime of Major Gual Berto Villarroel, is the man chosen to bring Bolivian views to the United States.

Hull has already said however, that sufficient information about the origins of the revolt that ousted President Enrique Penaranda Dec. 20 has been gathered to strengthen the belief that anti-Allied influence played an important part.

Hull's statement said that the exchange of information with 18 other American republics about the origin of the revolution in Bolvia "should soon permit each government to reach its own conclusions."

British support would be essential if sanctions are slapped down on Argentina, and there is every indication it would be forthcoming within 24 hours if the United States announced its decision to cut off trade.

District Hog Producers Ask Greater Control Over Marketings and Price Of 20 C. Per Pound for Export Hogs

Unanimous endorsation of a marketing scheme to be set up by the Hog Producers' Association to exercise greater control over hog marketings was seen at a distict hog producers' meeting held at Cannifton Friday evening.

The meeting was held under the sponsorship of the County Federation of Agriculture with Mr. Charles McGinnis of Dundas County, President of the Ontario Hog Producers' Association as the guest speaker. A similar meeting was held in Madoc on Friday, while on Saturday Mr. McGinnis spoke to a meeting in Picton.

The resolution as passed by the meeting laid down no specific program for the provincial organization to follow in their movement to attain greater control over hog marketings but a discussion heard following the general meeting indicated that a marketing board, run on something the same lines as the cheese board, was favored.

A second resolution passed asked for the federal government to establish a price of 20 cents per pound dressed weight f.o.b. Toronto for export hogs.

Producers Squeezed

Demonstrating a wide knowledge of the hog producing picture and the deficiency, from the producer standpoint, of the present marketing system, Mr. McGinnis contended that a definite relation must exist between the price of pork and the price of grain. Figures for the past 30 years had revealed that there was no relationship between these two commodities. "The reason is," he said, "that hog producers have been hedged in between the two speculative elements of the grain trade and the packers."

"The time had come," he said, "for farmers to make a show of confidence and make no apologies for their being farmers. As such they comprised one-third of Canada's population and in their production of domestic and export food requirements had stabilized the national economy.

Farmers Low Income Group

"Farmers served their country down through the normal years and during the depression they continued to produce even when they could not show a profit. Yet, although comprising one-third of the population, they receive only one-tenth of the national income."

Continuity of supply was termed by the speaker as one of the essentialities of a certain export market. He stated that the lack of this in former years had made the Canadian export market in Britain uncertain.

The present system of hog marketing in Canada whereby 85 per cent. of the production goes to the packers with only approximately 15 per cent. sold on the open market was termed as unsatisfactory to the farmer. By this system packers were not compelled to go to the open market for their requirement with the result that farmers had no say in the establishment of price. Hog producers needed a sales manager. They have been so busy producing that they have failed to realize their responsibility in giving leadership.

Organize on County Basis

Mr. McGinnis advocated hog producers to be organized on a county basis with each county to appoint a member to the provincial board of directors for every 5,000 hogs marketed. A county executive would look after hog marketings within his district.

Aims of association would be negotiation with the packing houses on price differentials. This would apply in the period following the war, although the power to negotiate would now prove advantageous to farmers when selling off-grade hogs. The association would also seek to investigate into condemnation insurance and would seek to control transportation of hogs from the farm to the packing house. Licencing of processors and drovers was also advocated.

A marketing agency, enabling representatives to find out in advance the number of hogs to be marketed and estimate needed production, would also be set up, while warehouses and storage plants could be provided to take care of periods of over-production.

Unwise to Process Hurriedly.

Although urging for legislation, which would permit producers greater control in the marketing of their hogs, Mr. McGinnis indicated that he thought it would be unwise for farmers to rush into the processing of hogs. Rather hogs should be sold on a competitive market which would compel the two packing house factions, the industrial meat packers and the domestic packers and small butchers to buy their requirements on the open market.

No change in the system of hog grading was thought needed as this was considered by the speaker to be generally satisfactory. Finances for the Hog Producers' Association would be realized through the collection of a five cent fee for each hog handled.

Col. Roscoe Vanderwater, speaking briefly on the Federation of Agriculture, indicated that farmers were becoming organization conscious as was evidenced by the many individual organizations of commodity groups. The aim of the Federation of Agriculture was to co-ordinate these commodity groups together so they could speak with one voice, he said.

Canvass for Signatures.

Referring to the scheme of financing the Federation through collection of one-fifth mill on the municipal tax rate, Col. Vanderwater stated that the south nine townships of Hastings would be canvassed for signatures endorsing this procedure. He prophesied a 90 per cent signature favoring the levy.

Roy Bateman, Rawdon, gave a report of the recent convention of the provincial hog producers held in Toronto. Urging for greater hog production he stated "that if we are lucky enough to stay at home we should do everything we can to help feed the people overseas and the boys on the fighting fronts."

Deputy Reeve Harry Harrison of Thurlow Township welcomed the visitors, with Seldon Homan and Mr. George Stokes, M.P., also speaking briefly. Mr. Wilfred Spencer, chairman of the county hog producers, acted as chairman for the evening while H. Lynn Fair, agricultural representative, acted as secretary.

Mrs. H. Hoover Dies Suddenly

Suffered Stroke After Returning to Her Apartment From Concert

New York, Jan. 8 — (AP)—Mrs. Herbert Hoover, "First Lady" of the United States from 1929 to 1933, is dead.

With former President Hoover at her side, she died unexpectedly at their Waldorf Towers apartment Friday night, shortly after she was stricken with an acute heart attack.

Mrs. Hoover, who was 68, had just returned from a concert and appeared in good health. Then the stroke came, just as her husband was telling her goodbye preparatory to leaving for a dinner. She died a few moments later.

Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, Chancellor Emeritus of Stanford University and one of the Hoover family's closest friends, paid tribute to Mrs. Hoover as "a typical American woman."

"She was a great success as a mother, a wife, a friend, as the presiding Lady of the White House and as an executive of the Girl Scouts," said Dr. Wilbur.

Both she and her husband were born and reared in Iowa, but their first meeting and courtship were on the Stamford campus in California.

Police Frown On Use of Streets For Hockey Rinks

With city streets covered with ice the temptation to utilize the public thoroughfares is naturally too great for children with the result complaints have been received that near accidents have occurred on various streets throughout the city where hockey games are being played in the face of vehicular traffic.

"Police received several such complaints Friday until it was necessary to have police journey to the scenes and caution the children regarding skating on the public streets, more especially the travelled portion where motor vehicles are travelling. Parents should caution their children regarding such hazardous practice. It is only inviting trouble as on such slippery streets as we have had for the past few days it is difficult enough for motorists to keep their cars under control without having to avoid children skating in the centre of the street," warned city police officials today.

There is ample room to skate on sidewalks and various ponds about the city without taking unnecessary chances of skating on the public streets where it may result in the endangering of life and limb, police added as a warning to parents.

8,802 Airplanes U. S. Production In December

Washington, Jan. 8 — (AP)—Aircraft left the assembly lines at a rate of 339 for each working day in December in the United States, the Aircraft Production Board reports in announcing that 1943 production nearly doubled the output of 1942.

Last month 8,802 planes were produced, 13 more than in November.

December output brought the year's total to 85,946 military planes of all types, compared with 1942 production of 47,873.

Meanwhile, it was learned that the United States War Production Board is preparing to revise drastically its order which not only barred iron and steel in a long list of goods, but also any substitute metals except gold and silver.

Among those which fell under the original ban were items such as coathangers, bathtubs, compacts, flashlight tubes, ice cream freezers, laundry trays, lipstick holders, house numbers, parking meters, automatic pencils, match boxes, mop wringers, pie plates and shower stalls.

Old Whalebacks Are Nearly All Gone From the Lakes

(By Fred Landon in The London Free Press)

The whaleback type of lake carrier, once so familiar a sight on the Great Lakes and its connecting waters, will soon be a thing of the past. Only four of these vessels were operating during the navigation season of 1943, the steamers Alexander McDougall and John Ericson and the tow barges Alexander Holley and No. 137. One other, reconstructed during last winter as an oil tanker, may also be counted in as a survival of the original fleet.

The whaleback was one of the most distinct changes in marine architecture on the Great Lakes from the time when the Walk-in-the-Water made its way in 1819 up Lake Huron to Mackinac, the first steamer to ply those waters. It was Capt. Alexander McDougall, after whom one of the last remaining of the type was named, who devised the new form and who promoted their building. Born in Scotland, Alexander McDougall spent his early years at Nottawa, near the Georgian Bay, and it was from there that he went as a youth to become a fresh-water sailor and ultimately a captain with the old Anchor Line out of Buffalo.

The conception of the whaleback appears to have come to McDougall in the later eighties when he was captain of the Hiawatha and towing the barges Minnehaha and Goshawk. At that time he wrote: "I have thought out a plan to build an iron ship cheaper than wooden vessels. I want to get a ship that wind and water alone cannot destroy—a boat that could be made from the flat, smooth plate and fine straight frames as they come from the rolling mill; a boat that could be made with a few large tools and built on a sand bar close to eight feet of water into which to launch it sidewise; a boat square in cross section able to carry the greatest cargo on the least water."

* *

McDougall began making models of a kind that no one had ever seen before. His ships were to have flat bottoms so that they could carry the maximum cargo in least water. They were to have a rounded top to the hull so that water could not stay on board. The bow was to be spoon shaped, gliding over the water rather than cutting through it. No one at any time ever regarded the whaleback as having any beauty but later derisive remarks were as nothing to the scorn with which the idea was at first received. McDougall showed his models to shipbuilders but they would have nothing to do with them. "She will roll over," was one of the most frequent comments. "You call that thing a boat," said one shipbuilder. "What it looks like is a pig." And "pig" the whalebacks in due time became, though "cigar boats" was another descriptive name given more particularly to the whaleback barges. In both cases the slang name applied was not without some justification.

In the end Captain McDougall had to build his own first vessel and did so on land which he owned in Duluth. He gave it no name but merely a number, 101. It is said that this came from a bet made by one of his critics that it was ten to one that the vessel would never reach its first harbor. When the 101 was launched it was towed to Two Harbors, loaded with 1200 tons of iron ore and towed to Cleveland. McDougall was aboard the barge during its first trip and was subjected to endless ridicule but his idea had worked.

* *

In the end it was New York financiers, not Great Lakes shipowners or builders, who took up his ideas. Colgate Hoyt, an associate of John D. Rockefeller, was impressed and a company was formed to begin construction. On Christmas Day, 1889, work was begun on a drydock at West Superior and five months later the first steamer of this type, the Colgate Hoyt, was being built. From that time on ships were turned out with great speed. Ten were under construction at one time in 1893 and by 1898, 46 such ships had been built. By that time they were to be found everywhere about the lakes. One was also built in England and was used for twenty years on the run between Liverpool and the Black Sea.

It was during these years that Capt. McDougall took the whaleback Charles W. Metmore on its memorable trip across the Atlantic with a cargo of wheat. Later the Metmore made a trip around the Horn, carrying construction materials to the City of Everett, Wash. and continued in the Pacific trade for many years.

Probably the best known steamer of this type was the Christopher Columbus, which was built as a passenger ship and used to carry the crowds from Chicago city docks to the World's Fair Grounds in 1893. This ship was launched on December 3, 1892, and ten Pullman cars of World's Fair boosters came to Superior to see the hull enter the water. Work was pushed during the winter so that the trial trip was made as early as May. It was stated that 7,000 people were on board when the five-decked vessel made its way about the big Duluth-Superior harbor and out on the open waters of Lake Superior.

The Christopher Columbus was 362 feet long, 42 feet wide and 24 feet deep. Her triple expansion engines developed 2,800 horsepower. During the World Fair days of 1893 the vessel carried more than 1,700,000 passengers. Not until 1940 was the big vessel taken out of service and scrapped at the Manitowac, Wis., shipyards.

* *

The whaleback type of carrier ceased to be built as the newer types of bulk carriers so familiar today began to appear. The long slim freighters were more efficient and the original McDougall fleet began to disappear. A few were lost. The whaleboat steamer James R. Colgate foundered on Lake Erie on October 20, 1916, during a storm of great violence. 24 of her crew were lost, the sole survivor being the master, who was picked up on a raft 34 hours after the disaster.

The South Park, originally the Frank Rockefeller, was driven on the rocks near Manistique in November, 1942, and was released with considerable damage. During last winter she was rebuilt as an oil tanker and came on the lakes this year as the Meteor. She still retains her snout-like bow but the alteration of her deck has partially destroyed her whaleback character. Despite this she can never be mistaken for anything but one of the McDougall boats, and anyone who ever saw one of these vessels would at once recognize the hull not unlike that of a submarine, the deck structure sitting on top of the cigar-like hull. There were occasional variations in design, however. The Alexander McDougall, for example, has a conventional bow and its pilot house is located forward on the hull. Today it is the only vessel of this particular design still operating on the lakes.

* *

Alexander McDougall stands in the records of Great Lakes shipbuilding as one of the pioneer designers. Even to his last days he continued to experiment and to build models. He had behind him a sailor's practical experience acquired when navigation of the Great Lakes had fewer aids than are available today. He had learned his profession by the most practical kind of experience and he knew the dangers that a vessel must face.

He lived until 1923. On a May afternoon in that year one of his whalebacks passed through the Duluth ship canal downbound and as it was about to enter the open lake its whistle sounded a salute to the builder, who was then in hospital there, as he said, he had "gone into drydock" to undergo "keel hauling." A few hours later Capt. McDougall was dead. He was born on the Island of Islay, Scotland, on March 16, 1845.

INCOMES INCREASED

The average earnings of 2,080,833 male wage earners in Canada in the census year of 1941 were $996 as compared with $927 for the 1931 census.

Laying Booby Traps, German Fine Art

(Extracts from letters from Wounded Men in the U.S. Infantry Journal)

"I lost my right hand by picking up a German 'egg' grenade I saw lying on the ground, with its pin apparently in. Feeling confident that it was, I went right ahead and picked it up. It hadn't occurred to me that a fine piano wire might lead from the other end of the grenade to a stake sunk into the ground directly underneath so that when I picked it up the pull on the wire should set the grenade off.

"Something much worse happened to a British squad leader. The squad came across a nice German Luger (semi-automatic pistol) lying on the ground, just waiting to be picked up. The squad leader was wary. He said, 'It's probably booby trapped. I want all you men to stand aside and watch carefully while I show you a safe way of testing it!' He tied a cord carefully, to the trigger guard and carried the other end of the string over to a foxhole, which was about 15 or 20 feet away. 'Now here's what I'm going to do,' he said. 'I'll crouch in the foxhole and draw the cord so that Luger will move and detonate any pull igniter which may be attached to it.

"The squad leader jumped into the foxhole and instantly there was an explosion. The Germans, anticipating his line of reasoning, had mined the foxhole with a couple of 'balancing babies' set for pressure. Incidentally, they hadn't bothered to booby trap the Luger at all."

* *

"When the Germans abandon a gun position, they are likely to leave the mines surrounding it for us to stumble over later on. They think ahead. They try to anticipate what we'll do under every circumstance. If our fellows take this fact into account every minute, and move as surely and as carefully as Indians, they aren't going to be caught unaware."

* *

"The Germans lay Teller mines in the shoulders of roads, especially on turns where vehicles are likely to swerve out. I was the guard in a jeep that got blown up that way. Two men were killed and I lost my right leg and my left foot. I'd been over the road once before but it was the driver's first time. There's a possibility that the mine had been laid at night by a German slipping back into our territory, but of course it may have been there all the time. We went over on the shoulder as we rounded a curve, going a little too fast."

* *

"By and large, you won't find booby traps in places that are inaccessible. If you make your own trail, you're likely to be a lot safer. We soon learn to leave suspicious looking objects alone and notify the engineers. Once my platoon worked for the better part of a day in a little clearing, paying absolutely no attention to a beautiful silver watch that lay on the ground right smack in the middle of it. When we finally left the clearing the engineers still hadn't come up. Even so, we left the watch lying there. Don't think we didn't arrive at this state of discipline through experience, though."

* *

"In paths and defiles the Germans used antipersonnel switches that they had captured from the British. An antipersonnel switch is a pressure release device, shaped like a pencil. It usually is sunk in a path or narrow defile and its three-quarters inch tip concealed with mud, dirt and leaves. It shoots a bullet upward. They go up through your foot or through the tire of a vehicle."

Railroading Is Not What It Was

(By FRANKLIN SNOW)
(In The Christian Science Monitor, Boston.)

Train travellers today need have no fear of ennui. Something is always happening.

Walking through one of the all-coach streamliners in late evening, after the lights had been dimmed, a trainman met an excited porter who exclaimed, "Come quick, Mister; we got a monkey in our car". Following the porter to his car, and directing his gaze upward to where the porter pointed, the trainman detected a figure near the top of the car. Casting his flashlight upward to his amazement, he saw a man stretched out on the baggage rack, his coat beneath him; a rented pillow (price 25 cents) under his head, and his feet pointing upward where the bars between the two adjoining racks prevented him lying at full length. The trainman managed to get him down to advise him baggage racks were not upper berths.

Conductors are becoming so accustomed to receiving tickets for competing, parallel lines that most of them now accept them as a matter of course, letting their accounting departments collect the revenue from the other railway. Names of railroads mean little to today's travellers; they board the first train going to their destination. Indeed, they are highly aggrieved if a conductor remonstrates.

And at the ticket-windows, the query, "Coach or Pullman", to prospective purchasers often brings a blank expression, for many still do not even know the difference. As one ticket-seller put it, "We generally don't ask them now; we can tell by looking at them which they desire".

As the evening advanced, on one all-coach train, the attendants in the lounge car were astonished at what they saw walk slowly down the aisle and select a long couch which was unoccupied and smooth down the covers. Garbed in a bathrobe over his pajamas, a long, flowing white beard lending dignity to his appearance, the traveller produced a pillow from under his bathrobe, and prepared to retire. Finally shaking off their shocked inanimation, the attendants politely asked the passenger if he understood that this car was a "lounge-car", not a sleeper. A harangue in a foreign tongue answered them. It took the conductor to haul him from his repose and send him back to his own coach.

It is in the dining-cars that the real trouble occurs, for waiters who formerly thought that 125 guests for dinner was a "big night", now serve 300 or 400 dinners. One patron, annoyed that a waiter was hanging over a chair gazing out the window, finally called, "Hey, waiter, aren't you going to take my order? Anybody'd think you'd nev:r been on a train before". Turning slowly, with a wide grin, the waiter responded, "That's de truth, boss; this is the fust time I ever was on one. Sho' is wonderful, too, isn't it?" Such are the employment problems today!

Perhaps the prize story of all is the lady who, giving her ticket to the conductor, said, "Tell me, conductor, does this ticket entitle me to a hangover in Philadelphia?"

It is an unusual day that does not find someone on the wrong train; not only the wrong train, but going in the wrong direction, too. Persons ask a gateman or station employee for "the New York train", when they mean the train FROM New York. To every railroader, "the New York train" means the train to New York.

There are incidents, too, that illustrate innate human kindness. A grandmother bound for Oregon found that out of her slender capital of $7 she must pay $5 for an upper berth on a train having only Pullmans during one part of her journey. But the train crew understood —and met the issue. The steward gave her her dinner free; the conductor wired ahead to his own road and to the connecting one to watch out for her and, even though she did not know it no less than three great railroad systems were watching her journey all the way across the continent, with special orders out to every conductor to see that she was well taken care of.

One mother, leaving her baby in her automobile, while seeing relatives off, boarded the train, although warned not to do so. Before she realized it, the train was speeding through the yards. Only by an effort could the trainmen stop her from jumping off. But wires were sent back and although she had to travel an hour and wait for a return train, station employees at the first point had taken the baby in charge.

Served Below Deck In First World War

Ottawa, Jan. 7 (CP)—A title doesn't necessary mean rank—in the fighting forces.

Lord De La Warr, Chairman of the United Kingdom Agricultural Research Council, was asked about his service in the First Great War when he gave a press conference today.

"I was below decks," he said.

"Does that mean you were an able-bodied seaman?" he was asked.

"Oh, no," he said. "That's a high rank in the navy and I never achieved it. I was just a deckhand on a trawler."

Britain's Underground Storage for Shells

(From the London News-Chronicle)

After nearly eight years' work the Royal Engineers have almost completed what is probably the greatest system of bomb-proof underground ammunition storage in existence.

"The Project," as it is called, has just been shown to war correspondents. If the cost to the taxpayer was heavy the results are impressive in their extent and complication. At times the scenic effects and the noises-off produce results which suggest another world —a stone and concrete hell.

It all began in 1936, when the War Office looked ahead and began to plan safe storage areas. Proposals to use disused stone quarries were adopted. These quarries consisted of underground passages, from which the stone had been cut, leaving pillars of natural rock to support the roof. After cutting the galleries were refilled with debris, leaving only small alleyways clear.

The first job was to make an accurate survey. Engineers crawled over the heaped stone in the maze of dark galleries, measuring and calculating. So precise has been their work that where a shaft has been sunk from the surface to meet one driven from below they have rarely been more than half an inch out.

These galleries then had to be cleared of debris by moving to the surface huge quantities of broken rock. When they were cleared it was found that many pillars were overstrained. They had to be strengthened with "corsets" of concrete and steel ribs. Additional galleries were cut.

* *

Thousands of workmen were brought in, a great many of them from the distressed areas of South Wales, Durham, Northumberland and Cumberland. Drawn from other trades, they were trained in hundreds of cases for new ones. In all 57 trades and professions have been concerned in the construction of "The Project."

Quarries deep underground and safe from bombs were prepared. They then had to be "furnished" as storage depots. Shafts were sunk to insure air circulation. Some sections, including offices, barrack rooms, had to be air conditioned. Each quarry system has its own emergency electric generating system underground for immediate use if surface power supplies fail. There is also machinery for circulating air, heating or cooling it, steam heating and sewage systems.

Transport into and out of the quarries presented special problems. The main quarries are divided into separate spaces known as districts. Quick handling both in and out was essential.

Automatic conveyor systems have solved most of the difficulties. There is direct communication to the main railway line from the loading platform of one quarry where the trucks are hauled underground by Diesel locomotives. From these platforms continuous conveyor belts carry the ammunition into the main communication galleries below and from there the stream can be diverted into the side galleries or districts.

Another quarry is served by conveyor belts through a tunnel a mile long. This is supplemented by an overhead steel ropeway. In all there are some 14 miles of conveyor belts. Scattered about the country are surface loading points, carefully camouflaged to give no indication that they are entrances to these elaborate subterranean store rooms.

* *

To the stranger this underground world is disturbing. It is an unrivalled shop for the materials to produce bigger and better bangs. Stacked in these galleries which seem to have no end are vast quantities of ammunition ranging from bullets to shells.

The stranger, rather awed by this hasty stocktaking, passes thru' a succession of steel doors and air-locks to find himself in weird surroundings. A rough-hewn, gloomy tunnel leads to a small door giving on to a brilliantly lit concrete room where an electric motor whirrs and there are levers and needles flickering on staring white dials.

Struggling against an invisible giant, to force open a narrow door, the stranger enters a dim and fabulous cavern filled with a vast roaring. Behind a wire-netted circle a huge fan is drawing air into the galleries at the rate of 400,000 cubic feet a minute. It comes from the surface far away through a tunnel looming darkly in the far wall. There is an impression that the rushing air will hurl one into the fan whose blades are whirling too fast to be seen.

The stranger struggles through more doors that clang hollowly after him, and tramps down more galleries to find himself in a tunnel that stretches away and away. There is just room to walk between one wall and the conveyor belts. There is a rumbling noise and one starts to move. A moment later a procession of shells begins to trundle by. Just who controls their destiny in this robot world is impossible to see. Presumably it is one of those men in those small cabins who have rows of knobs to press and rows of colored lights which flash on and off.

Farther on through more galleries a vast crashing made a long and draughty cave hideous. Soldiers hurled boxes of ammunition on to steel trucks with bored nonchalance, while a conveyor belt thrust more and more boxes at them with mechanical insistence. Crashing and banging the trucks were pushed forward, where they were gripped by steel teeth and disappeared up a ramp to an entrance on the surface.

* *

Back in the absolute silence of the underground barracks a visiting soldier said: "I know, we're dead and they're going to break it to us soon very gently."

When known, the way to the surface and escape is simple. You are unlikely ever to see these caves of shells; but you might remember that somewhere in England is a road which passes near to a small building with a red tiled roof. It houses the air conditioning machinery for a system of underground caverns in which is stored enough T.N.T. to make the largest bang in history..

U. S. Builds 65 Carriers in 1943

New York, Jan. 7—(AP)—United States shipyards, working at high speed and doubling the size of the navy in a year, built 65 aircraft carriers of all types in 1943.

James Forrestal, Under-Secretary of the Navy, disclosed this record figure on carrier production today in a speech for a hospital fund drive

The Under-Secretary reported that six 27,000-ton carriers of the Essex type were included in the total. In addition nine light carriers of the 10,000-ton converted cruiser type were built and 50 escort carriers were turned out. The escort carriers are the small ships which have been doing such a big job in beating off the Nazi submarine menace in the Atlantic.

"The United States Navy," Forrestal said, "now has in being forces which constitute the greatest sea and air striking power in history."

Quoting the statement of Prime Minister Smuts of South Africa that "peace without power remains an empty dream," Forrestal asserted that Smuts said "in substance, that peace was obtainable only if guaranteed by the power of nations who want peace."

RUSSIANS THREATEN RAIL JUNCTION OF SARNY

Vatutin's Advance Plunges Within 15 Miles of Bug River

Germans Claim Reds Attempt Landing West of Ochakov On Black Sea

SEIZE ZHORNISHCHE

(By HENRY C. CASSIDY)
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Moscow, Jan. 10 (AP) — Spearheads of Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's 1st. Ukrainian army plunged within 15 miles of the Bug River today, and neared Vinnitsa, rail city of the Bug serving as main control point for German communications to the Dnieper Bend.

Other Vatutin units slashing southward sent deeper one jay of a possible trap for thousands of Germans in the Smela Gap, a Nazi-held zone extending eastward to the Dnieper River. This southward drive was pushing toward a junction with Gen. Ivan S. Konev's 2nd. Ukrainian Army, advancing westward through Alexandrovka north of Kirovograd.

Farther north, the Soviets were within five miles of Sarny, 35 miles inside Poland.

Vatutin's western advance guards seized Zhornishche, 15 miles from a bend of the Bug River. Zhornishche is 30 miles southeast of Vinnitsa and 33 miles from the important Odessa-Warsaw railway.

Eastern Boundary

The Bug River, a natural defence line, is the eastern border of Transnistria, the Soviet area given Rumanian by the Germans.

Other units pushed through Schastlivaya, 19 miles east of Vinnitsa itself, threatening to cut the ~~most important east-west railway~~ left the Germans in the Ukraine.

(The German high command asserted the Soviets attempted a landing west of Ochakov on the Black Sea, between the Dnieper's mouth and the naval base of Odessa, but were thrown back. There was no Russian confirmation of the reported landing, which might be a flanking assault to bottle up the Germans in the Dnieper Bend.)

Vatutin's army was engaged in a complicated manoeuvre, pressing westward even while driving to the south, and mopping up areas to the rear.

Advance on Escape Line

Capture of Sarny, a junction on Wilno-Rovno line, would force the Germans to rely for north-south communications on railways meeting at Brest-Litovsk, 130 miles farther west. The Odessa-Warsaw railway, on which the Russians are advancing from captured Zhornishche, is the main escape line for German troops in Southern Russia.

Stockholm despatches describing the German retreat as "almost chaotic," quoted German military spokesmen in Berlin as admitting that their armies are fleeing during a desperate battle upon which "the outcome of the whole war depends."

The Germans also face disaster in a wide pocket west of the Dnieper River as the 1st. and 2nd. Ukrainian Red armies—the first pushing south toward Buki and the other driving west through Alexandrovka—narrowed the jaws of a possible trad to less than 75 miles. A junction of the two armies would close a ring around the Germans in the Smela Gap in an area 80 miles deep running back to the right bank of the Dnieper.

110 Hamlets Liberated

On their entire front Sunday, the armies of Gens. Nikolai F. Vatutin and Iva S. Konev swept up 110 more towns and hamlets, killed 2,300 Germans in two actions alone, and captured huge stores of war materials, a Soviet communique announced.

The Russians took Polonnoe, just inside Kaments Podolsk Province bordering Rumania, in an advance of 50 miles west of Zhitomir which brought them to within 22 miles of Shpetovka, a junction on the Korosten-Tarnapol and Berdichev-Rovno lines.

The 1st. Army's southern drive, which was reported making the most progress, took some of Vatutin's forces through Buki, while other units mopped up the west flank of the Dnieper south of Kiev, capturing Kagarlyk, 12 miles southwest of Rzhishchev.

Konev's 2nd. Army encountered stiff resistance around recaptured Kirovograd, but occupation of Alexandrovka, 35 miles to the north, helped straighten the front. They also cleared the Germans from 40 other localities.

Konev's 2nd. Ukrainian force rolled the Nazis back from Kirovograd Saturday. The Germans fought between the two converging Soviet armies to keep open two railroads running into Smela, advance point of their salient.

Konev's line also moved through Ivanovka, 20 miles southwest of Kirovograd.

His troops captured a cluster of villages southeast of Smela, including Melniki, 20 miles away, and cleaned up pockets of resistance to the rear, among them towns some 20 miles northeast and northwest of Znamenka.

Tass, Russian news agency, said only 30,000 inhabitants remained in Kirovograd, of a pre-war population of 100,000. The Germans fought desperately to hold the city. Tass added large-scale guerilla warfare was hacking at German rail communications, and that last month a detachment in one district of the Rovno region smashed 10 German locomotives, 168 railway cars and four railway bridges.

Ross Says Injury To Bill Cowley Was Deliberate

Toronto, Jan. 10—(CP)—Art Ross, manager of the Boston Bruins, today was quoted by Andy Lytle of the Star as saying that an injury to Bill Cowley of Boston in Saturday night's National Hockey League game with Toronto Maple Leafs was the result of "a savage and deliberate attack."

Cowley, who suffered a shoulder separation, was injured when body-checked by Jack McLean, Toronto forward.

"McLean didn't try to play hockey," Lytle quoted Ross. "He was the central figure in a mass attack craftily designed to put Cowley out of business . . ."

"I'm not going to take the Cowley incident lying down. My players won't either. Three-for-one, that's our slogan. Nothing can convince me it wasn't a frameup to get Cowley . . .

"Tell Day (Coach Hap Day of the Leafs) to bring plenty of reserves into Boston and to bring Selke (Manager Frank Selke of Leafs) along because he's the instigator."

Fact-Finding Survey In Kitchener, Waterloo To Serve as Model

Kitchener, Jan. 10 (CP)—E. J. Shoemaker was named General Chairman with Leo Henhoeffer as Vice-Chairman at organization sessions over the weekend for the fact-finding survey to be conducted in the twin cities of Kitchener and Waterloo late in January and early February.

Entitled the "Kitchener-Waterloo survey for post-planning," the project is sponsored by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Kitchener Board of Trade. The survey is intended to serve as a model for all other Canadian communities.

QUITE A SAVING

New York, Jan. 10 (AP)—If every American passeger car used one gallon of gasoline less a year, the fuel saved could send 3,000 bombers from Britain to Germany and back for five days, Julius A. Krug, Vice-Chairman of the War Production Board, said last night in a broadcast program.

Captured U. S. Soldier Hoodwinks 19 Huns, Takes Captors Prisoner

By KENNETH L. DIXON
(AP War Correspondent)

With the 5th Army in Italy, Jan. 10 —(AP)— Pte. Billy Miller, 21, a fast-talking soldier from Peoria, Ill., hoodwinked a German lieutenant and 18 men into believing they were surrounded and then marched them single-handed to captivity across 600 yards of No Man's Land.

Miller pulled off the exploit when he went into action for the first time Thursday night as his company attacked a hill in the San Vittore area. Surrounded by 50 Germans while he and a few comrades were bringing some wounded and a prisoner to the rear, Billy and his mates had to surrender.

A platoon of 19 Germans took charge of Billy. In a cave where they put up for the night, the Jerries started talking about taking him back to a prison camp. The lieutenant, who spoke English, told him what they were saying.

"You'll never make it," said Billy. He knew he was at least a quarter of a mile in front of his own line, but he added, "we've got you surrounded. Listen!"

Gunfire crackled outside, echoing in the cave. They spent the night there.

Next day the fighting was still terrific, so the German platoon moved only a short distance farther back. This time to a farmhouse in the valley behind the hill.

Next day, the German lieutenant insisted that the time had come to try to make contact with other German outfits. As he talked, Billy looked out the window.

On a distant hill paralleling the valley he saw troops moving. It was worth a gamble.

"I tell you we've got this place surrounded," he said. "Come outside and I'll show you."

They stepped outside and Billy pointed to the movement on the hill. The lieutenant stepped back inside, talked to his men a moment then came back to Billy, unbuckled his pistol belt and handed it to him.

"You are not our prisoner now," he said. "We are your prisoners."

So back across No Man's Land, the five-foot five-inch soldier led the column of prisoners. Walking up to his lines, he turned them in, together with seven German automatics, nine binoculars and one machine pistol.

HARBOR OF POLA SET AFIRE BY U. S. BOMBERS

First Disclosure Heavy Bombers Are Operating From Bases in Italy

SUB PENS DAMAGED

By LYNN HEINZERLING
Associated Press War Correspondent

Air Headquarters in Italy, Jan. 10 —(AP)—Heavy United States bombers of the 15th Air Force operating from Italy struck a new blow in support of the embattled Yugoslav patriots Sunday when they set the harbor of Pola, at the tip of the Istrian peninsula, boiling with fires and explosions.

This was the first disclosure the heavy bombers now are operating from bases in Italy.

Protected by fighters, the bombers dropped their bombs in the harbor area, drydocks and nearby factories. One explosion threw flames and debris 1,000 feet in the air. Delayed explosions still were shaking the port as the fortresses turned away.

Pola, once an important naval station of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, is one of three main supply ports through which the Germans push their supplies to Nazi divisions in the Balkans.

Returning crewmen said their bombs plastered the harbor area and one merchant vessel in the port was believed hit. Submarine pens in the harbor may also have been damaged, they said.

Detailed studies of photographs showed, meanwhile, that the Villar Perosa ball-bearing works near Turin in northern Italy, was out of commission as a result of the heavy raid of Jan. 3.

Coastguardsman Moved by Plane

Watertown, N. Y., Jan. 10—(AP) —An ill coastguardsman, member of a garrison at the isolated Gallop Island station in Lake Ontario, was flown through a high wind in a light private airplane to Watertown Saturday for hospital treatment.

Seaman Aloysius J. Majerus, 22, suffering from the threat of double pneumonia, was brought to Watertown hospital after an appeal was received from the islands, 15 miles in Lake Ontario.

The small plane was flown by E. M. Hepler, manager of Watertown airport.

HUNT INTENSIFIED

New York, Jan. 10 (AP) — A second report of an abduction its outstanding characteristic again a madly-careening limousine ride, intensified the hunt for two sleek, riding-togged bandits who were reported yesterday to have kidnapped a Washington cab driver and a pretty brunette and to have taken them on a crazy trip from Washington to New York.

'Flying Professors', R.C.A.F. Instructors, Win High Rating

Ottawa, Jan. 10. (CP)—The R.C.A.F. announced last night that its instructors in the British Commonwealth Air Training plan have qualified more than 50,000 fully-trained aircrew men, enough to man more than 15,000 fighting aircraft.

In a press release outlining the behind-the-scenes work of the instructors, the R.C.A.F. gave brief thumbnail sketches of some of the most outstanding of Canada's "Flying Professors".

Rating high among Canadian air heroes is Group Capt. John Fauquier, D.S.O., D.F.C., of Ottawa, who trained under the Commonwealth plan and spent many months as an instructor at Camp Borden, Ont., and Trenton, Ont., before going overseas in June, 1941.

Wing Cmdr. Ralph Christie, D.S.O., of North Bay, Ont., a former bush pilot who joined the R.C.A.F., and became an instructor, was stationed for months at the Service Flying Training School at Brantford, Ont.

Nor are the instructors who have gone to operations the only ones who have tasted glory, said the air force.

Wing Cmdr. J. W. Reid of Belleville, Ont., former instructor and later Ferry Command pilot flew the German General Von Arnim from Africa, after his capture there.

Wing Cmdr. J. G. (Pat) Twist of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., a graduate of the Empire Central Flying School, Eng., and one of the most experienced instructors at Trenton, Ont., has contributed in great measure to the safety of flying through extensive "spinning" tests.

MORE GENEROUS IMMIGRATION POLICY URGED

C.N.R. Official Says Canada Cannot Close Door and Expect Freer Trade

PREDICTS FAST GROWTH

Ottawa, Jan. 10. (CP)—Adoption of "a more generous immigration policy" for Canada was urged today by J. S. McGowan, director of the ~~Colonization and Agriculture~~ Department of Canadian National Railways.

In an address prepared for delivery to an Ottawa Service Club (Rotary), Mr. McGowan said such a policy is essential if Canada is to take her rightful place in dealing with post-war problems of the United Nations.

"Canada cannot hope to close her doors and at the same time expect to trade freely with other nations", he said. "We cannot be a party to a good-neighbor policy if the door is locked with the sign up 'Nobody Wanted'.

"At the same time, no one will for a moment suggest that it will be possible to return to the free and unregulated movement of people such as we had in the early part of the century".

Mr. McGowan spoke optimistically of the Post-War period:

Predicts Rapid Growth.

"I predict that Canada will enter a period of comparatively rapid growth in the Post-War years. I make only one reservation with regard to that statement—provided that international trade is allowed to flow more freely; or, to put it another way, to provide the terms of the Atlantic charter become a reality".

The concensus on a conservative basis was that Canada could support three times her present population without any material reduction in living standards, but many years of hard work would be required to reach that position.

Mr. McGowan listed four factors which he said will be important in determining immigration movements:

1.—Freer exchange of goods throughout the world. With markets for her natural products Canada could double her population for all.

2.— Improvement in agriculture as an industry.

3.—Development of natural resources.

4.—The desire of people in the British Isles, United States and European countries to establish new homes in Canada after the war.

MARINES RESUME BORGEN BAY DRIVE IN NEW GUINEA

Troops Reach Hill 660 an Advance of 1¾ Miles From Beachhead

10 JAP PLANES DOWNED

Allied Headquarters, New Guinea, Jan. 10—(AP)—Bitter ground fighting is raging in northwestern New Britain, with Allied bombers supporting the United States marines' renewed push to clear the Japanese from the Borgen Bay area near Cape Gloucester.

Bombers concentrated 58 tons of explosives on enemy forward positions, the Allied communique said today. A headquarters spokesman said the battle was resumed Friday after a lull, and the high command announced that the marines had reached hill 660, in an advance of 1¾ miles.

Hill 660, an artillery observation point, south of Silimati point where the marines landed Dec. 26.

Ground patrol clashes also were reported in the hills in the airdrome area farther west, the communique said. Marines captured the airdrome Dec. 30, four days after the invasion began.

Bombers and fighters of the South Pacific command struck enemy installations at Cape St. George on the southern tip of New Ireland. The target area is across narrow St. George channel from Rabaul, Japanese stronghold in northern New Britain.

Stiff enemy interception of the attack Friday gave evidence the Japanese will resist desperately any attack that might eventually soften a new landing spot for a flanking assault on Rabaul. At least 10 Japanese interceptors were shot down, and probably two others. Six Allied planes were lost.

Sofia Attacked By Heavy U. S. Bomber Force

Algiers, Jan. 10 (AP)—A large force of American heavy bombers bombed Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, today.

The packed formations swept in about noon, it was announced, for the fifth heavy bomber assault in two months on the German-controlled capital. The raid was a close follow-up to yesterday's first announced operation by American heavy bombers from Italian bases, when the port and naval base at Pola in the northern Adriatic area was hit severely.

Sofia is a rail centre for German troop and supply movements in Yugoslavia, Rumania and Bulgaria, while Pola is a shipping centre used by the Germans to supply their Yugoslav front.

No further details of the Sofia bombing were made available immediately.

2 ASPHYXIATED IN HAMILTON ROOMING HOUSE

Had Returned To House After Rooms Were Fumigated Earlier Sunday

ONE SERIOUSLY ILL

Hamilton, Jan. 10 —(CP)— Two elderly men were asphyxiated and another severely affected last night in a rooming house fumigated earlier yesterday, it was learned today. Ten other persons were removed to hospital for treatment and released early today.

James Foster and William McGrogan died in adjoining rooms on the second story of the one-time hotel. Alfred Cooper, 62, was detained in hospital in serious condition.

Mrs. Frances Zinger, landlady of the building, said the fumigation was ordered by the Hamilton Health Department and tenants were warned not to return to their rooms until after 10 p.m. Sunday. After that time they had all returned to their rooms.

Foster's body was discovered shortly after midnight by Lionel Zinger, son of the landlady, investigating "moaning" heard by another roomer. Police were called and McGrogan's body discovered.

Dr. J. H. Mullin, Chief Coroner, is investigating but has not announced whether an inquest will be held.

Over 250,000 Acres Devoted to Airfields In Great Britain

London, Jan. 10—(CP)— More than 25,000 acres of land in Britain now are devoted to airfields in use by the R.A.F. and the United States Army Air Forces, it was disclosed today.

Development of the vast network of fields needed to accommodate the rapidly growing fleets of bigger planes is approaching the point where the suitable ground will be exhausted.

Before the last war Britain had seven airfields and at the time the armistice was signed in 1918 had 300. In 1938 there were more than 100 military airfields in operation. The number now is a secret.

Richmond, Calif., Jan. 10—(AP) —At least five men, all burned beyond recognition, were killed and seven injured in a fire that destroyed a shipyard workers dormitory today.

Strange True Stories Still Told Of Eerie Week's Fighting in Ortona

By DOUGLAS AMARON
Canadian Press War Correspondent

With Canadians in Italy, Jan. 10 —(CP Cable)—Stories stranger than fiction are still being told of the grim, eerie week that Western Canadian troops of the Canadian 1st Division spent clearing the enemy from blasted houses and rubbled streets of the Adriatic port of Ortona.

Ortona fell Dec. 27 to the westerners—the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, the Loyal Edmontons and the Seaforth Highlanders.

The tales are legion and they are true. If in many cases the heroes must be unnamed it is only because they have since been wounded or killed.

"We were right in the German area for three days," said Capt. J. F. McLean of Vernon, B. C., and Vancouver. "It was eerie work going from post to post in the middle of the night not knowing what was ahead or behind."

Return by Night

"You'd clear an area in the daytime and they'd return by night. It was not only a house-by-house battle but often a room-by-room."

One night McLean set up headquarters in a "rubble heap with a roof" and the roof collapsed. Another time an armor-piercing shell hit the doorstep of a small room where McLean and six others were staying. It blew every object in the room to bits but the only casualty was a runner who was scratched.

Pte. L. R. Elmore of Langley Prairie, B. C., met an English-speaking "Italian" with a baby in his arms coming from a church where other civilians had been sheltering.

"You speak pretty good English," Elmore said.

"You're darn tootin," replied the other, opening his jacket and showing a Canadian uniform. He had been captured but slipped into church, changed into civilian clothes and stayed there all Christmas night sitting on his Tommy-gun for fear the Germans would spot it.

The next day he was wounded.

Heard Enemy Catcalling One Another

Cpl. Dick Moir of Kamloops, B. C., whose platoon was commanded by Lieut. Jim Allen of Weyburn, Sask., said he and 11 others spent Christmas eve in a house so close to the Germans they could hear the enemy giving catcalls to one another.

British Troops Also Cross Peccia River In Drive on Rome

Despite Artillery Fire Tommies Cling to Bridgehead Forged Over the Stream

TAKE 3,500-FOOT PEAK

By JOSEPH E. DYNAN
Associated Press War Correspondent

Algiers, Jan. 10 — (AP) — Fifth Army forces bit deeper today into the tough defence belt of Cassino in western Italy with British troops crossing the Peccia river and Americans advancing two miles northeast of Cassino.

Despite intense artillery fire, British Tommies clung to a bridgehead they forged across the Peccie west of Mount Maggiore near the western end of the 10-mile offensive front of the 5th Army.

This advance was just south of the main western highway to Rome which runs through Cassino. North of the highway Americans in a thrust from Mount Maio captured the 3,500-foot peak of Catena Vecchio overlooking the road from captured San Vittore to Cassino.

Fifth Army troops also occupied other heights preparatory to an assault directly on Cassino itself.

Tanks Used in Action

Americans captured 1,500-foot Mount Chiaia just south of Cervaro and still farther south they completed occupation of 900-foot Mount Porchia by mopping up surviving Germans entrenched on the mountain's western slopes after tanks had entered actively into the push.

The Americans thus overlooked Cervaro, four miles due east of Cassino.

Their advanced elements were more than two-thirds through the six-mile zone of fortifications between Cassino and the captured village of San Vittore.

The troops who captured Mount Chiaia continued their advance northward toward Cervaro supported by fighter-bombers which attacked German positions.

Deep snows in the mountainous sectors of the 8th Army front restricted fighting to patfol activity and heavy artillery and mortar fire exchanges.

Port of Ancona Attacked

Two-engined bombers attacked the port of Ancona on Italy's east coast while fighter-bombers bombed and shot up trains and motor transport back of the battle line in the Aquila area.

The score of aircraft destroyed during the day was even, one German plane for one Allied craft missing.

R.A.F. night bombers also struck another blow at German fighter power in northern Italy with an attack on the fighter base at Villorba, north of Venice, on Saturday night. Crew members reported seeing at least 11 fires and explosions in the darkness.

Dive bombers sank one and damaged two other vessels off battered Civitavecchia, northwest of Rome, in a dive-bombing attack Saturday.

British and Canadian fighter-bombers concentrated on trains and motor transport, destroying 13 vehicles caught in the snow south of Sulmona. Canadian pilots of the City of Windsor squadron smashed two locomotives in the station at Carpo, near Aquila, and damaged a third with cannonshots. The squadron was under command of Sqdn. Ldr. Albert Houle of Massey, Ont. Another squadron strafed a string of freight cars at Rabiscuno and caused ammunition loads to explode.

Kittybombers in sweeps over Yugoslavia attacks oil storage tanks at Ploca and railways south of Metkovic, and in forays up the Italian west coast hit railway yards at Pisa and Via Reggio.

The newspaper, which quoted German sources, said also that another 420,000 Berlin workers are unemployed as the result of the destruction of plants and factories. Some 100,000 of these were reported to have been removed to other cities.

Canadian Front Fairly Quiet During Sunday

By DOUGLAS AMARON
(CP War Correspondent.)

With the Canadians in Italy, Jan. 10. (CP Cable)—Heavy artillery fire and local patrolling constituted the only activity on the Canadian front yesterday, where the position of the troops has remained unchanged for nearly a week.

The Germans also stopped up their shelling and mortaring and their patrols on Saturday night were more active than for some time. One group scouted as far south as San Tommaso, a village about 2 1-2 miles west of Ortona, and took two Canadians prisoners.

Possibility that the enemy may be planning to withdraw completely from below the Arielli River is seen in the fact that all the bridges on roads leading to the river and crossing it have been blown. Houses which the Canadians might use for shelter also are being destroyed.

There was slight air activity yesterday and Kittyhawks damaged a German fighter which crossed the Canadian lines.

Mill Atoll Raided By U. S. Army Airmen

Pearl Harbor, T.K., Jan. 10. (AP)— Seventh Army Air Force dive bombers raided Mill Atoll in the Marshall Islands Friday and the Japanese immediately retaliated by attacking Tarawa in the American-held Gilberts, Admiral Chester W. Nimitz announced yesterday.

The Japanese caused no damage on Tarawa.

POLISH DIVISION IN ACTION

Moscow, Jan. 10 (AP)—A second Polish division, the "Henrich Dombrowski" division, has gone into action with the Red army against the Germans, it was disclosed yesterday. The army newspaper Red Star said the new Polish division would fight the Nazis for "a free, democratic Poland."

CITY AND DISTRICT NEWS

BUMPS POLICE CAR

Whenever a police patrol car becomes involved in an accident it is invariably news. But, here's the exception that proves the rule.

Friday night while on patrol Sergt. C. R. Arnott brought the police patrol to a halt at the intersection of Church and Station Streets. Following behind was another motor car driven by Earl Treverton, Plainfield, whose car ran into the rear of the police vehicle when Treverton attempted to stop also. The street was a glaring sheet of ice at the intersection, which accounted for the collision as Mr. Treverton's automobile merely skidded easily into the rear of the police car without only a minor dent resulting to the rear fender.

Mr. Treverton smiled and agreed to pay for any damage resulting, which was quite acceptable to the police.

MATTER OF DAMAGES AMICABLY SETTLED

Despite the fact the season's iciest streets were seen in Belleville over the weekend only one minor accident, causing slight property damage, was reported to police. On Saturday afternoon while driving an R.C.A.F. station wagon north on Coleman Street, the vehicle, in charge of LAC. Alfred S. How, of Picton, skidded into a parked car. How told police he was about to pass a north-bound motor car, driven by Wm. E. DeMille, Belleville, when the fender of the Air Force truck grazed Mr. DeMille's car causing the heavier vehicle to skid on the icy pavement and skid into a parked vehicle on the west side of the street. Police were notified and as only fender damage resulted the matter was amicably settled by How.

SPEEDING REPORTED IN EARLY HOURS

Complaints have reached police headquarters here regarding the practice of the speeding of motor cars over city streets during the early hours in the morning. "On several occasions recently we have received complaints that motor cars are being driven about the city in a fast and dangerous manner after midnight. Traffic lights are ignored, as are the stop street signs. Whether the same parties are responsible nightly we have not learned, but one thing is certain this practice must come to a halt or charges will be laid," warned police officials today.

PO. KEN McADAM RETURNS TO CANADA

For the past several months associated with the Y.M.C.A. services in North Africa, Pilot Officer Ken McAdam, formerly "Y" director at the Trenton Air Station, has been returned to Canada, it has been learned. Mr. McAdam also acted as Y.M.C.A. war services supervisor for the Bay of Quinte district and while stationed in the Belleville area was noted for his fine singing voice. Until recently Mrs. McAdam has been residing on West Bridge Street.

FOUR IN RUNNING FOR WARDENSHIP

With at least four names being mentioned, keen competition is likely to feature the race for the Wardenship of Hastings County when the January session of county council gets underway next week. According to reports emanating from county council circles the four reeves who will seek the wardenship are Fred Wilson of Sidney; Thomas Fleming, Huntingdon; John Bell of Marmora township and James Nickle of Madoc township.

All four reeves have been active in county council circles for a number of years and are held in high regard by council colleagues. The vast majority of last year's councillors will be back at their accustomed chairs, when county council convenes for its January session, there being only five changes as the result of the annual elections.

TWO MORE DISTRICT SOLDIERS WOUNDED

The names of two more Belleville district boys are contained in the army casualty list issued for today's publication. Acting Sergeant Alvin Edward Neil, son of Mrs. Sarah M. Neil, of St. Ola, Hastings County, is listed as severely wounded, while Pte. Raymond Harold Neal, son of Mrs. Ethel Neal, 222½ Queen St., Trenton, is listed as slightly wounded. Both boys are members of the Hastings & Prince Edward Regt.

EFFORTS MADE TO FORCE ENTRANCE OF FRONT ST. STORE

Efforts to force entrance into the rear of the Empire Groceteria, 280 Front St., failed as the barred door withheld all attempts to pry open the door. The discovery was made early Monday morning when employees opened the rear cellar door to admit delivery of goods. Police were notified and investigations revealed attempts to pry open the cellar door had been made, but strangely enough the window glass in the door was not broken.

MANY ENJOY SKATING ON LOCAL HARBOR

With a complete absence of snow greeting the eye in the immediate Belleville district, youthful merrymakers are taking full advantage of all patches of ice available to get in some skating before a white mantle descends to make them work for their fun. Every evening and throughout the day over the weekend the rattle of skates and the shouts and laughter of children at play could be heard in almost every part of the city as quarries and ponds have been put to good use. The Moira River comes in for its share of popularity from the younger element, while over the weekend the ice-covered bay in and about the local harbor was a gathering place for dozens of 'teen-aged children of both sexes.

L. Cpl. H. Yeoman Killed in Action

Born in Toronto 29 years ago, son of the late Percy J. Yeoman and Mrs. Morrison, L/C. Yeoman had lived in that city all his life prior to his enlistment in March 1940. He went overseas in July of the same year. Prior to his enlistment he had worked as a druggist.

Surviving besides his mother are his step-father, Mr. John A. Morrison of this city; one sister, Mrs. Gordon Palmer of Belleville; an aunt, Mrs. C. S. Coyne, Westminster Ave., Toronto, and an uncle, Mr. Roy Yeoman, O'Hara Ave., Toronto. (Tweed paper please copy.)

Rubbish Dumping Is Protested

The dumping of rubbish and debris on Queen Street between Chatham Street and Bleecker Ave., is not exactly appreciated by residents of that area. Complaints regarding this unsanitary action were received at Mayor Rollins' office in the form of a protest letter last week and in turn handed over to the police for further investigation.

The complaint alleges that for over a year rubbish and debris have been dumped on the eastern extremity of Queen St., rendering that area not only unsanitary, but unsightly. The complaints also add the debris is also a hazard to children playing in that area as the rubbish contains old cans and broken bottles.

The matter was taken up with Mr. H. Belsey of the Health Department and today Mayor Rollins handed the entire matter into the hands of the police department with full authority to act accordingly.

Veterans Hosts At 'Open House'

A large and enthusiastic gathering of service men and young ladies enjoyed the varied "Open House" program sponsored by the Army and Navy Veterans, unit 201, at the Y. M. C. A. on Sunday. "It was the largest gathering of service men to take advantage of these Sunday recreational and religious programs in many weeks," stated J. E. Shortt, general secretary of the "Y".

In the afternoon general entertainment was supervised by the officials of the Army and Navy Vets. while in the evening Ed. Shortt, in his usual inimitable manner, acted a master-of-ceremonies for the varied program presented in the gymnasium, while Comrade Bill McKenna was the chairman representing the war veterans. Community singing was led by Mrs. Mary Plumpton with Mrs. Wm. Warham as accompanist at the piano.

Although community singing was featured, piano solos by Miss Olive Reid, ATCM, and vocal solos by Miss Ethel Smith were appreciated and well received. Ed. Shortt delighted the audience with his monologue rendition of "A nigger in the Army". Old time hymns were sung and the evening's program brought to an end when Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne spoke briefly and gave the benediction.

Refreshments was served by wives of members of the Army and Navy Veterans, unit 201.

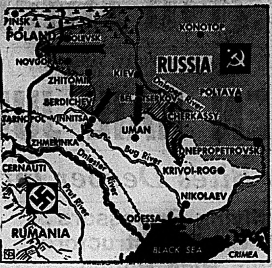
George Arnott Seriously Injured As Ladder Slips

Frankford, Jan. 10 (Special)—Suffering fractures of both legs and injuries to his heels when he fell to the frozen ground on Saturday from a ladder which was placed against his barn, Mr. George Arnott, local auctioneer, was forced to crawl 150 feet for assistance. Mr. Arnott was climbing the ladder when it slipped, throwing him to the ground from a height of approximately twelve feet.

Crawling painfully to the house when his calls for assistance failed to be heard, Mr. Arnott received medical attention at the hands of Dr. D. McMullen of Frankford and was then rushed to Belleville General Hospital. Examination at the hospital showed one leg was fractured in three places, while the other was also broken. His heels had also been crushed when he struck the frozen ground, it was stated.

RUSS LAUNCH SECOND UKRAINE DRIVE



Here are the latest phases of the terrific Russian drives to the west and south. As Cossacks of the First Ukrainain Army advance rapidly into Poland near Olevsk, the all-important "trap drive" from recently captured Beyala Tserkov moves southward at the rate of 30 miles in a single day as Reds race to cut off all Nazis in the Ukraine and the Dnieper river bend area. Meanwhile the Second Ukrainian Army has started a new and powerful drive southward in the direction of Krivoi Rog threatening the Nazis in this area. The new drive is indicated by the small arrow. The smash through of the Red army, direct from Kiev, to cut off the Odessa main line railroad supply-route is also making powerful headway.

Ninety Donors at Kiwanis Centre Clinic on Sunday

The first Clinic of 1944 was held in the Red Cross Blood Donors Clinic, Kiwanis Centre, on Sunday morning, when 90 donors passed through the Clinic and contributed their blood. The majority of these donors came in from outlying points around Belleville, while one local blind boy, Bill Navin, made his sixth donation. He has made two donations in Brantford and two at St. Thomas, where he operated a concession for the Institute. He is at present employed at the Reliance Aircraft Co. Ltd.

A group of donors came in from Marmora by bus, which is the usual procedure twice monthly. The blood donors group of Marmora has been organized by Mr. Walter Hilton and Mr. W. J. Cottrell, who see that at least fifteen persons make the trip into Belleville and are brought back to their homes. Eighteen persons donated blood from this well organized group which totals 400 out of a population of 980. Among those present at the first Clinic of the year from Marmora were Mrs. J. Rice, Mrs. Bert Inkster, Mrs. Vartey, D. Lucas, F. Devolin, G. Scott, J. Proule, H. Fluke, W. Hilton, W. Lavender, Village Constable; D. Richardson, C. Richardson, H. Neal, J. Rice, J. McAvoy, W. Dickson, Co. "B" Coy. H. & P.E. Reserve Army Corps, and Mr. and Mrs. F. Lashwa.

Jewish Auxiliary in Charge

The preparation of toast and coffee, which the Clinic supplies to the donors following their period on the the tables was handled by the Jewish Women's Auxiliary, and all were extravagant in their praise of the splendid job they did. Mrs. B. Yanover, Mrs. G. Lindenberg, Mrs. S. Rose, Mrs. H. Samuels, Mrs. J. N. Yanover and Miss Mona Salz were the ladies of the organization who came out to help at this first clinic. A visitor to the Clinic was Nursing Sister Betty Faulkner, daughter of Dr. J. A. Faulkner. She was supervisor of the Clinic before joining the R.C.A.F. in July. She is stationed at Ottawa at present.

Demonstrating that age is not a detriment to doing this worthwhile work was illustrated by Mrs. Mabel Foy of King, Ontario, who is 64 years old. Mrs. Mabel McKibbon of Milford, is the mother of 10 children, and was present at Sunday's Clinic to donate her blood. Several of the Volunteer Workers of the Clinic made donations during the morning, some of them making their seventh, and others fifth and sixth.

More Local Donors Wanted

The Red Cross officials are somewhat discouraged at the local turnout for this much needed work. Fewer and fewer local citizens are coming in. The regular Tuesday night Clinics are made up of servicemen from the Air Stations around Belleville, and the Sunday Clinics are mostly people from out of town. "There is a more urgent need than ever before for blood," said Col. A. P. Allen, Secretary of the Clinic. "The imminent invasion of the west coast of Europe will develop many more casualties than heretofore and an adequate supply of blood plasma must be on hand. We cannot wait until the invasion starts to obtain this material, it must be done now and be in a nearby position, where it can be called into service without delay". A recent discovery by medical men for the use of blood plasma is to add it to sulpha drugs and apply it to burns. This will mean further supplies will be needed.

Two Attending Physicians

Drs. G. S. Clank and A. E. Miles were the attending physicians at the first Clinic of the year, and were ably assisted by a trained corps of nurses, who expertly attended the donors both before and after their trips to the tables. Not a single donor experienced undue weakness during the morning.

The departure of Mrs. Helen Webb, who is leaving Belleville to join her husband in Toronto, where he has been transferred with the Canadian Bank of Commerce, will be deeply felt by all associated with the Clinic. Mrs. Webb has carried on most admirably as Secretary during the illness of Col. Allen, who expressed his appreciation to her personally on Sunday morning.

W.M.S. Conducts Church Service

A special meeting was held at Aikens Church on Sunday evening under the auspices of the W.M.S. Mr. E. Ray, Centenary, acted as chairman The special feature on the program was a play presented by Centenary Young People, entitled, "O Come Let Us Adore Him." The characters of this play were particularly well portrayed by the young people taking part.

Also on the program was a piano solo, "Christmas Chimes," by Mrs. Lee Grills. The Scripture, taken from Luke 2: 8-20, was read by Mrs. S. Westover and the lesson on the Scripture was given by Mrs. Moon. Vocal duets by Dianna and Sandra Kenny, also Doreen and Lorna Ray and a saxaphone solo, "The Holy City," by Douglas McPherson were enjoyed.

Those present thought it an evening well spent.

Women Snipers Of Italian Army Found Nuisance

Toronto, Jan. 10 — (CP) — Canadians in Sicily had more trouble with women snipers than they did with Italian soldiers, who made themselves a "nuisance" by surrendering in droves, Sgt. Roland Amyot of North Bay, Ont., said in an interview here today.

Amyot, 21, lost his right arm and was wounded in four other places at Missoria in Sicily when Germans shelled the town from surrounding hills after the Canadians had recaptured it. He is recuperating in Christie Street military hospital.

His arm was removed in a base hospital hours after it was hit in two places by shrapnel from mortar fire. He suffered other wounds in the right leg and chest.

When the women snipers were found "they were treated just like any other snipers," Amyot said.

A son of Mr. and Mrs. D. G. Amyot, he enlisted in 1940 with the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment — the Hasty Petes. BBefore the war he was a miner at Malartic, near North Bay, and was known as a catcher with North Bay ball clubs.

Before going to Sicily Amyot married a Scottish girl, whom he hopes to bring to Canada in the spring.

BATTLE LOOMING

New York, Jan. 10 (AP)—A battle is looming over the Alaska highway, war material artery to Alaska, Jim Marshall reports in Colliers Magazine this week. The United States navy now commands the eastern north Pacific, and it is cheaper to ship directly by sea, Marshall says.

Beulah Patrons Burn Cheese Factory Mortgage

West Huntingdon, Jan. 10— On Friday evening the Community Hall at Ivanhoe: was the scene of an event of outstanding interest to the patrons and stockholders of the Beulah Cheese and Butter Manufacturing Co. when the wives of patrons sponsored a banquet when the principal item on the program was the burning of the mortgage of their plant and house.

Mr. Arthur Wood, President of the Company, was chairman for the excellent program and following the banquet. Mr. Wood called the gathering to order proposed the toast to the King, which was replied to by all. Singing the National Athem. He also gave explanation of nature of banquet and welcomed the visitors present.

History of Former Factories

Mr. Charles Mitz, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of Huntingdon township gave the history of the first two factories that operated at Ivanhoe. In year 1872 a factory was built on the farm now owned by Mr. Elmer Rollins. But this plant was not found to meet with the demands of cheese manufacture; in 1889 another and more modern one was built on farm of Albert Clement: This served the community until in 1925 when once more a more modern plant once desired: And in 1926 one of most up to date plants in the county was built in the village of Ivanhoe along main St: This along with the house for cheese maker and equiment cost the company, $11,000.00 hence the necessity of a mortgage.

At this time Messrs. Henry Wallace and Charles Mitz had the honor of performing the ceremony of the burning of the mortgage.

Many Outstanding Speakers

The program committee were fortunate is securing some outstanding speakers for their banquet.

Mr. Tom Fleming, Reeve of Huntingdon township, introduced the first speaker, Mr. Roscoe Robson, M.P.P. for E. Hastings. In his usual pleasing manner, Mr. Robson congratulate the Beulah Cheese Co. for their achievements of the past. He also spoke in high praise of the present cheese maker, Mr. Frank Palmer, who as he said was not only a good cheesemaker but an outstanding citizen and a great help to any community.

Mr. Robson, speaking on the future of the cheese industry stated that a method for maturing cheese more rapidly would be a big factor in the postwar period. For a little spice in the program, Miss Arbuckle of Belleville (a noted elocutionist) gave a fine reading which was well received.

Instructer Heard

Mr. W. Murray, instructor for this area introduced the next speaker, Mr. John Bain (chief dairy inspectod). In his introduction Mr. Murray stated the average score for the Beulah factory for the past year was 93 1-3 per cent which he considered was excellent. In his address Mr. Bain gave a review of the cheese industry from the time it was first started in Ontario.

An American came over to Ontario in year 1864 and built and operated the first factory, in 1865 five more factories were built in Oxford county, then followed in rapid succession numerous other factories until now over 2,000 factories are serving farmers in Ontario. He also compared the conditions of former years with those employed now, also the ebb and flow of prices, the first price obtained was 10 cents per lb to 32c in 1920. But in 1932 this had dropped to 9½ cents and once more the price is advanced to 27½ for 1944.

Varied Program

Mr. Everett Smith of Belleville kept the gathering in laughter from time to time with his magic tricks, songs and stories.

Mr. W. Lackner of Toronto, dairy inspector for Eastern Ontario, brought a timely message on the dairy situation. He advised the Beulah Company, to establish a fund, which would take care of the depreciation of plant. He also explained why there was a drop of 23-000,000 lbs of milk in Ontario this year. This was due to feed situation and milk going for other products. He predicted a 5 1-2 per cent increase this year. He also advised the farmers to stay on the job as cheese would be needed in large quantities for some time.

Mr. J. O. Herity Heard.

An address of unusual interest to all present was brought by a former Huntingdon boy in person of Mr. J. O. Herity of Belleville.

In a reminiscent manner the speaker reviewed many events of his life that were most interesting. Having taught school at Beulah over fifty years ago, he recalled many pleasant memories: the practice of old timers visiting in the old-fashioned manner was grand. Mr. Herity closed his remarks with saying he owed a great debt of gratitude to the Ivanhoe community for the way they helped him in those tender years of his life. Quoting the words of a poem, "Around the corner a vanished friend", was a fitting climax to this fine address.

Others giving short addresses were Mr. G. L. Johnston, manager of Bank of Montreal, Stirling Branch, Mr. J. Bell, president of Hastings County Cheese Producers' Association, Mr. Ernest Bateman of Tweed, president of the Belleville Cheese Board.

(Mr. M. Haggerty, director for Huntingdon Township for the Cheese Producers' Association, did not give his address due to late hour.)

Ladies Thanked.

Rev. O. Wagar voiced the appreciation of those present to the ladies for the excellent banquet and Mrs. John Wallace replied.

The Beulah Cheese Factory is built of stucco and is up to date in every respect and the reason for naming it the Beulah Factory instead of Ivanhoe, was explained by Mr. Mitz. It was a demand from the buyers overseas.

Allied Low-Level Bombers Start Fires, Down Japs

Guadalcanal, Jan. 10 — (AP) — Use of Allied low-level bombers from Bougainville airfields to strike at Japanese positions in the New Ireland area for the first time was heralded today as the start of an intensified air war against the enemy's base at Rabaul, New Britain.

The dive-bombers and torpedo bombers flew through bad weather Friday to hit Cape St. George on the south tip of New Ireland, indicating the size of the attacking force, the bombers were accompanied by nearly 50 fighters.

The raiders set many fires and shot down 10 Zeros and two probables out of an intercepting force of between 40 and 70 planes. They lost three navy fighters and two dive-bombers. A third dive-bomber was forced down returning to base but the crew was rescued.

Raids are expected to force the Japanese ultimatum to discontinue Rabaul as an important sea base since this type of aircraft has shown itself most effective against shipping.

Cape St. George is approximately 65 miles southeast of Rabaul.

Marmora Herald Begins 50th Year

St. Andrew's Women's Association Holds Regular Meeting

Marmora.—This month the Marmora Herald begins the fiftieth year of its existence as a weekly newspaper and the present editor, H. W. Sabine, has been in charge since 1906. The printing office used to be in the J. W. Pearce block on Main Street which was destroyed by fire in 1906. For over thirty-five years the business has been carried on in the building which now houses the printing plant and which was erected for that purpose. Passing through the varying fortunes which face the average weekly newspaper of a small community it is today one of the best equipped of the small weekly offices in this part of the province.

St. Andrew's W.A.

The regular monthly meeting of St. Andrew's Women's Association was held on Tuesday afternoon, January 4th., at the home of Mrs. Thomas Hannah. The president conducted the worship period, with Mrs. L. Green assisting. Minutes of previous meeting were read by the Secretary, Miss Brown, and on motion, were approved. The financial Secretary gave a report of the year's receipts, also the amounts raised by the four circles, which were very gratifying. A statement in full will be given at the annual meeting next week. The treasurer's report was also given for the year and the new year begins with a bank balance of slightly over $300.

The president-elect, Mrs. Prentice, then took charge of the meeting. She read from the manual the duties of the various officers and asked for their fullest co-operation. Several new committees were named for the year. Members on the committee for each month's program were to be responsible for suitable hymns, prayers, etc., and function under the name of "Devotional Committee".

Mrs. H. W. Sabine and Mrs. F. Sweet were appointed to prepare the Communion on the first Sunday in each quarter. A flower committee composed of Mrs. Dickson and Mrs. Wells to secure flowers for the church.

The mortgage on the church now being fully paid off, the Association are arranging to start a special organ fund. The church organ is almost worn out and the W.A. intend to bend their efforts towards the purchase of a new one. The sum of $100 was voted as a start for the new venture with Mrs. Sabine and Mrs. Burwash acting with Mrs. Wells, as treasurer to be a committee to get an "Organ Fund" functioning. It is hoped former members and others will be interested and donations to the fund will be very gladly received.

The executive will draft the year's programs this week. Mrs. Prentice was appointed to be a member of the Official Board of the Church.

The program for the afternoon consisted of two delightful readings by Mrs. Green "The Way Out", and "The Things That Count".

Misses Doris and Iris Hannah sang a duet and Mrs. Sabine conducted a Bible Quiz. The meeting closed with a short prayer.

JOHN W. DAFOE DIES SUDDENLY AT WINNIPEG

Editor-in-Chief and President of Free Press Succumbs on Way to the Hospital

DEAN OF JOURNALISM

Winnipeg, Jan. 10 (CP)—Funeral services will be held here Wednesday for John Wesley Dafoe, 77-year-old editor-in-chief and president of the Winnipeg Free Press, who died yesterday, the result of a heart attack suffered on his way to hospital.

Dean of Canadian journalism, recipient of honorary degrees from Manitoba, Queen's, Alberta and Columbia Universities and Chancellor of the University of Manitoba, Mr. Dafoe was at his desk last Saturday as usual and in good health. Yesterday he had complained of a sharp pain in his side and his doctor ordered him to hospital.

Born in the village of Combermere, Ont., March 8, 1866, Mr. Dafoe began as a cub editor with the Montreal Star for $5 a week and last October, 60 years later, was honored at a testimonial dinner as one of Canada's greatest journalists.

He declined a knighthood, diplomatic posts and cabinet positions in favor of his editorial position where he kept his newspaper in the forefront of every political struggle in the Dominion and every major issue in international affairs.

"I have always been interested in politics, but not in political honor for myself," Mr. Dafoe had said.

Offered a Knighthood

While a representative of the Department of Public Information at the 1919 Paris Peace Conference Prime Minister Lloyd George, of Great Britain offered Mr. Dafoe a knighthood. "What would I do with a title?" the Winnipeg editor asked. "I shovel my own snow and tend my own furnace."

Among the causes he advocated was the creation of national status for Canada. In this capacity, Mr. Dafoe took a prominent part in every Empire press conference from 1909 to 1930. He also wrote books on constitutional affairs.

From 1937 to 1939 Mr. Dafoe's major interest was his work as a member of the Rowell-Sirois Commission on Dominion-Provincial relations.

He was noted for his vigorous writing in a fight against restrictions on world trade. These interests brought him many outside duties, including the presidency of the Institute of Pacific Relations from 1936 to 1938 and the chairmanship of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs.

Last Oct. 16, Mr. Dafoe told 500 members of the newspaper profession, friends and admirers from all parts of the Dominion who gathered in Winnipeg to honor him, that he had "hopes that when the 'long trick's over' there will be a judgment that I have made some contribution to my times and to my country."

Survivors include his widow, four daughters, all of Winnipeg, and three sons.

Tough Course Is Based on Fight Against Elements

Athens, Ga., Jan. 10—(AP)—Future naval aviators, forced down in jungle, Arctic wasteland, desert or open ocean, may survive to fight another day because of a newly-adopted course at the United States Navy Pre-Flight School here.

It is a tough series of lessons in how to sustain life, a product of first-hand experiences of other aviators who have won their fight with the elements. For example, there was the report of Lieut. Kenneth Duval, Marine fighter pilot from Lavern, Okla., who lived seven days on a raft after bailing out in a storm off Bougainville.

Duval snared fish, quenched his thirst with water wrung from their flesh, later employed his canteen cup as a a reflector to signal a friendly ship.

In the woods the cadet learns to identify edible plants. He learns to obtain drinking water from mud by filtering it through grass, and how to wring it from grapevines and rotten logs. He is taught to locate animal life by tracks and how to rig snares from saplings, vines and twigs. He makes fish lines by twisting fibres from inner bark of trees, fashions hooks from thorns, pieces of bone, or even a shoe-nail.

REPORTED WOUNDED

Hamilton, Jan. 10—(CP)— Lieut. Kenner Arrell, 24, and acting Cpl. Angus Bain, 21, of nearby Caledonia, have been reported wounded in Italy Dec. 26. Both were serving with the 48th Highlanders of Canada, a Toronto unit.

ITALIAN FACES TELL THE STORY OF NAZI BRUTALITY

Telling of Nazi brutality while they were in possession of the Italian mountain town of Lagone, a native who has returned to the village from a nearby hideout, gestures while giving the story to Sergeant John Peralta of Socorro, New Mexico. At right her terrified daughter chews her fingernails, still fearful of fate. When Fifth Army captured Lagone, hundreds of residents poured back into the village.

STRANGE STORIES

At 5.20 a.m., German paratroopers moved in on the house and threw Grenades through the door. "Mr. Allen wished us all Merry Christmas and told us not to worry —they were only grandes," said Moir.

House Blow Up

"Then the Germans blew up the house and there were only nine of us for Christmas dinner."

There were also stories how Lieut. Fred Debanke, Chatham, Ont., found a decorated Christmas tree in a tunnel used by the Germans, how the major, since wounded, sat outside the basement window Christmas eve listening to paratroopers singing "Silent Night" in German.

There were stories too, how four unarmed privates carried 100 pounds of dynamite across the street under fire.

Maj. J. Thomas of Vancouver said at the height of the battle "I'm staying in the same houses as Jerry." One of his men bent down, beside a wall in the house and had a brick kicked in his face by a German in an adjoining room.

Shelterd in Same Doorway

The final story concerned the medical orderly and the German who took shelter in the same doorway during a shelling. The unarmed orderly gave the German a piece of his mind in strictly unprintable language.

When he finished, the German said in the best English "OK Buddy, go to it."

When the shelling ended, the soldiers left together, the German turning to the left and the Canadian to the right.

Major Hun Plants Shown Struck By U. S. Bombs

London, Jan 10. (CP)—Reconnaissance photographs of the targets bombed during the American heavy bomber attack of Jan. 5 showed severe damage to Kiel's submarine yards, a bolt and screw factory at Neuss, Germany, and an aircraft plant at Tours-Parcay-Meslay in France, United States Army headquarters disclosed today.

Although fires still raging at Kiel made observation difficult, the photographs showed hits on a number of major buildings at the Germania Werft U-boat yards and heavy damage to industrial centres.

Bomb hits were concentrated across the freight yards at Neuss and partly across the Bauer and Chaurte Bolt and Screw plant.

Major buildings of the S.N.C.A. Aircraft factory were hit, and a large hangar used for Focke-Wulfs was approximately 50 per cent destroyed. The photographs showed four buildings still burning at Tours-Parcay-Meslay air field.

GABLE NURSING BRUISES

Mr. Roosevelt today arranged a late afternoon conference with Congressional leaders—Vice President Henry Wallace, Speaker Sam Rayburn, Senate Majority Leader Alben Barkley and House Majority Leader John W. McCormack.

After formalities of the noon meeting of the 78th Congress' second session, the President was expected to discuss with them the business ahead of the new session; which is confronted with a pair of legislative deadlines and a number of other provocative issues.

Still shaking vestiges of illness—White House officials described it today as influenza—Mr. Roosevelt was keeping all his engagements today in the White House proper.

The annual message "On the State of the Union" will be transmitted at noon tomorrow and read to the legislators by clerks.

At 9 p.m. E.D.T., Mr. Roosevelt will broadcast a resume of it, compressed into a half hour of radio time.

The annual budget estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945, will be submitted to Congress Thursday noon.

The message is expected to deal a major degree with domestic problems, and Mr. Roosevelt's decision to go on the air underscored the importance he assigns them.

Depressing Facts for Enemy

Turning out 85,946 planes in the year 1943 for an increase of 80 per cent in number and 127 per cent in weight, the industrial power of the United States stands revealed. 8,802 planes were the output in the last month of the year. 84,000,000 pounds of aircraft was the December production.

Such are figures that do not require to be hidden for they are so great and represent such power that broadcasting this fact is itself a blow at the morale of the Huns.

Production of aircraft by weight will continue upward, but there will, with the increased production of heavier bombers of the B-29 type and the introduction of other new and high performance types, be a general levelling-off of production.

These figures are so great that they cannot inspire the enemy to greater effort but will rather paralyze the effort of the Hun since the enemy knows what is the purpose of these thousands of planes—to bomb the life out of Nazism and German militarism and to bring to judgment the war criminals of that country and of Japan.

Reports of United States production will be speeded up, being given to the public from a week to two weeks earlier than hitherto without waiting for inclusion in the WPB production report.

Such mammoth figures and what the schools of training in aviation are achieving show the ground for Allied confidence and faith in conquest over the enemy from the standpoint of airplane production.

Russians Drive On

Germany which has for generations prided herself on her armies must come to the realization that a mightier land force, that of Russia, has come upon the world scene. Hitler who looked with envious eye upon the wheat fields of the Ukraine long before the war and openly spoke of their importance and the richness of Russia's material resources, thought in 1941 that he could quickly stab Russia and end her and then turn back to the west to try to crush Britain. But he and every German should know by now that Russia has proven her might and will enter the peace era among the victors while Germany will be defeated. Any thought that Hitler had of German overlordship of Russian territory must have vanished.

The war has been a great wrecker of the plans of the man who trusted his "intuitions." He took the plunge into war and he must pay.

Germany's armies have long since lost any claims to "invincibility" she carefully had tried to inculcate outside Germany. Smashing that idea have been the reserves of manpower in Russia, her resources, and the spirit of her people who have a devout loyalty to the fatherland and the ideal of their right to develop in security. There has also been the aid British, Americans and Canadians have given.

The sand in the glass of time is running low for Hitler. Winter is taking a heavy toll of his gains of other years in Russia, and spring will soon come upon him with greater Allied power than ever.

Tom-Toms Tell Bounty

Tom-toms sounding in the jungle territory of the United Africa Co. told the thousands of employees of the company that it had introduced a pension system for them. Dakar reports that the company which produces timber, cocoa and oil seed, found that the only effective way to proclaim the plan was through the ancient telegraphic code of the drums, as many of the natives cannot read or write. So the tom-toms were used to beat out "Come and draw your pensions."

Manitoba's Huge Sunflower Crop

(Maclean's Magazine)

Though few Manitobans know it, their province grew something like 14,000 acres of sunflowers in 1943—almost half the Dominion total of 29,000 acres. To most Canadians that may mean little except that it sounds like a lot of ground to devote to flowers. And so it is—but it pays off.

Sunflower seeds are a valuable source of edible oil and Canada's supply, now limited, needs all the bolstering it can get. Cultivating sunflowers is a profitable untertaking, too, for cash returns run as high as $35 an acre. For wheat it is only about $29; oats $28 and barley $21. Returns from flaxseed, the only other oil crop of importance, run about $18 an acre.

Sunflower oil may be hardened or hydrogenated to produce shortening. In its refined form it is used as a cooking oil. It finds a multitude of other uses in the preparation of such edible foodstuffs as mayonnaise and sandwich spreads. Sunflower meal, besides being one of the highest protein foods, has commercial possibilities for human consumption. In many respects it resembles the soybean. Roasted, the seeds are good eating and have been in high favor for years with people of Russian extraction.

Sunflower protein may be processed to produce an egg white substitute for use in baking. Other possibilities include its use in the plastic and nylon-type textile field.

The future of the sunflower, officials say, appears almost as bright as the flower itself.

Fuel Song

"If everyone went to bed half an hour earlier about a million tons of coal a year would be saved."—The Minister of Fuel and Power to the House of Commons.)

In blankets warm at ease I lie
  Upon my laurels resting;
A model citizen am I.
  A fact beyond contesting.
For what the Minister has said
  Stirs no reactions surly;
When I am told to go to bed
  I do so blithe and early.

I hear and I obey his call;
  And benefits most ample
Would here and now accrue if all
  Would follow my example.
And, what is more, in this stern day
  When duties rise in number
It is not often one can say
  They also serve who slumber.

Admire, then, my recumbent form
  And let its tale be heeded,
For while I lie, tucked up and warm,
  No fire downstairs is needed.
The saving in our stocks of coal
  Should thus be sent a-soaring—
I feel a friend to Fuel Control
  When I'm snoring, snoring, snoring.

Two Matches From One

(Leeds Yorkshire Post)

I feel you ought to meet an ingenious young man, who generously shared with fellow-passengers in the train yesterday his method of countering the match famine.

It is so simple. He merely slits the match down with a razor blade so that a blob of brimstone is left adhering to each half. By this means a box of matches goes twice as far.

The halved matches are thin, but not too thin to strike without breaking if a little care is used.

Pleasure-Mad New York

("Liberty" Magazine)

The New York theatre is in the throes of a terrific boom. Droves of standees are happily flattening their arches in the stampede. Seats slowest to go are the dollar-tens. And, while it's all very pleasant to sit where you can see the star's tonsils, lots of determined Big Spenders are going to wish they'd climbed to the gallery, or even stayed at home, come next spring when they meet up with the taxes and surtaxes of 1944.

JUST FOLKS

UNINFORMED

'Tis strange, although I get about,
I seldom ferret secrets out.
I do not know a single gun
Of mammoth size at Washington
Who tells me what I shouldn't know,
That I repeating it may go.
I never have been one of those
Who know another man who knows.

Behind the scenes I've never gone.
I don't hear what is going on.
To me, the papers are enough.
I never get the "inside stuff."
I know some business leaders but
In Pullman cars their mouths stay shut,
And none of them pretends to know
What Roosevelt said to Win and Joe.

I go about from day to day,
But no "real stories" come my way.
I get no newsy letters penned
By someone's friend of someone's friend
Who knows an Englishman of note
With bits of gossip I can quote.
In total ignorance I dwell.
I've nothing startling I can tell.

I'm just an ordinary sort,
With nothing secret to report.
I often sit and wish I knew
What Russia's Stalin plans to do.
Will Roosevelt run again or won't,
I wish I knew, but oh I don't!
When great men blab at home or out,
I never seem to be about.

CANADIAN FINDS BRITAIN SCARRED BUT COURAGEOUS

Woman Writer Sees War Wounds Offset by Matter-of-Fact Attitude of People

By MARGARET ECKER
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Dec. 10—(CP)—Britain is battle-scarred—but very matter-of-fact, and even a little gay about its wounds. That's the first impression of a Canadian who sees this island for the first time. Britain is exactly the way a Canadian would expect to find it.

As our ship slipped into the locks of a teeming western port after a slow Atlantic convoy crossing boy dockworkers shouted up at us, "ave you got any furrin coins, or stamps?" The accent was a bit hard to understand. They shouted their derision at us when we didn't respond.

And so, once off the ship, we saw our first "ruins." No one, except the newcomer pays much attention to them, now mossy and grass-grown—except perhaps to point out the stage-set-looking house fronts with something akin to pride. A cabbie, with what has become almost relish, gave us a blow-by-blow account of the blitzing as we drove to the station.

The station was a cross section of the Allied world at war—something like Union Station in Ottawa or Toronto, or Windsor station in Montreal, at least as far as noice and scuffle went—but much, much more of a crossroads.

A tall Aussie in a broad-brimmed hat sang, "We're off to see the wizard—the wonderful wizard of Oz." And it seemed to be the theme song of that port station. Everybody seemed very much alive. Everybody was going somewhere—and glad of it. Tanned lads with B. N. A. F. on their kits and pith helmets bumping alongside tin helmets, were home on leave, on the road to London—and glad of it. Canadians, Americans, and Anzacs were seeing England for the first time—and glad of it.

Canadians Welcomed

Most English people seemed glad to welcome the invasion that has been flowing over them for four years. A barmaid at an officers' club said "Ayez-yer from Canada? I'm glad to see you. That's a fine country they tell me."

It's no pleasure jaunt, travelling in England in wartime. But the Canadian army, R. T. O., godfather to any Canadian innocent abroad, had a compartment reserved for us, and it was a sung affair, with two plush seats, each holding three people, facing each other. Outside in the corrido,r people stood all the long, dusty miles to London, eating sandwiches and passing thermos bottles.

Outside the city, in the suburbs, were neat and tidy rows of houses, almost everyone with its greenhouse. Out in the country the deep green of the fields astounded the Canadians from Eastern Canada, as did the second plantings of cabbage along the railroad tracks.

White sheep grazed on green hills. Boys fished in still silver canals, and in little streams that rushed among the roots of willow trees.

But signs of war were there too. Every so often there was a field pitted with tank traps or mazed with barbed wire, or a bomb-gutted farm house. Occasionally planes, huge bombers, silver against the bright blue of the English sky, flashed into view.

Inside the compartment as blackout time came, we were finding a little bit of war ourselves—that washrooms on English trains, once you fight your way to them, have no towels, no soap, no other equipment—that the dim, yellow light and stuffiness lulls you into such a stupor you dont even rush for the tea counter when the train stops at a station.

Congress Ready To Open Session

Washington, Jan. 10—(AP)—Congress reassembles today with two deadlines staring members in the face and pressure mounting for action on half-a-dozen other legislative problems.

By Feb. 17, the legislators must decide what to do about food subsidies and the commodity credit corporation which administers them. Stop-gap legislation enacted just before the holiday recess extended the life of C. C. C. until that date.

By March, a decision must be reached on the social security payroll tax rates, frozen by emergency legislation at their present level of one per cent each on employers and employees for the first two months of this year. Without the legislation, the tax would have advanced automatically to two per cent Jan. 1.

With senators and representatives drifting slowly back to Capitol Hill, the outlook for the opening day is little beyond formalities. The program for the whole week, in fact, still is up in the air pending knowledge of when the President's annual message on the state of the Union will be delivered, and whether Mr. Roosevelt is sufficiently recovered from an attack of the grippe to make it in person.

TO MONTREAL

Edward Phelan, director of the International labor office of the League of Nations, told reporters in New York that post-war unemployment is not inevitable. He predicted "considerable prosperity" for some countries, and named the United States and Canada. He had just arrived on the Pan-American Airway's clipper, on his way to Montreal.

BULLET WOUND ABOVE HEART

Toronto, Jan. 10 — (CP) — Paul Brossett of nearby Islington was in hospital here today with a bullet wound half an inch above his heart. The boy was wounded yesterday shortly before noon but there were conflicting stories about the details. One was that he was playing with a group of boys when a shot was heard and he fell to the ground; the other that he and some other lads were engaged in target practice when h ewas wounded.

PREHISTORIC MEAT

It is often stated that in the frozen regions of Siberia the carcasses of prehistoric woolly mammoths have been found in such a good state of preservation that the flesh is still edible.

There is an ancient story that King Herod Agrippa of Judaea invited the Emperor Caligula to a banquet at Rome at which one of the delicacies was the flesh of a mammoth that had been found embedded in the ice of a frozen lake in the Caucasus.

The mammoth was an extinct elephant-like animal which lived in northern Europe and Asia in the geologic age known as the Pleistocene.

It stood about nine feet tall at the shoulders and was not so large as the ordinary elephants seen in circuses.

The animal, a denizen of the north, had a double coat of hair—a long shaggy outer coat and a dense, woolly undercoat.

Its molar teeth were complex and many-ridged. The long, slender tusks curved upward and outward. Sometimes they described a spiral in which their points curved around toward each other.

Great numbers of these beasts perished and were frozen in the ice when the species became extinct.

Ivory from mammoth tusks was long an article of export from Siberia.

Not only a few, but many whole woolly mammoths have been found in that part of the world.

"Mammoth" is the Russian form of a Tartar word of uncertain origin. One theory is that it originally signified "of the earth" or "earth mouse," and that the Tartars so named this giant prehistoric beast which they occasionally found when the ice melted because they supposed that it had lived underground and perished when it saw the sunlight.

It is said that wolves, bears and other animals of prey have fed on the frozen carcasses in Siberia as they thawed out.

Notwithstanding the fact that these animals have been dead since the great ice age, which was thousands of years ago, their flesh in many cases has been in perfect cold storage all these centuries and is still in a good state of preservation.

But it is doubted whether any mammoth flesh has been found that would be fit for human consumption.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

The Old, Old Case of the Mother-in-Law

Dear Miss Fairfax:

My husband is in service. We have two children. From the time we were married, my husband's mother has never cared for me and is always trying to separate us. My husband and I are in love with one another. And now my mother-in-law is angry and hasn't come to see the children and me for over a month.

I wrote my husband about this, but he said he was sure she isn't angry. She does say mean things about me to others, but my husband says to ignore it—and that you can always have two wives but only one mother. I may as well turn against him as turn against his mother. All our arguments are on account of her. What would you suggest? Shall I divorce him or try to be friendly with her?

C. F.

Trying as it must be to endure, I believe it would be the wiser plan for you to take your husband's advice and ignore your mother-in-law's attitude.

There are a lot of old women who would find it difficult to forgive an angel from Heaven for marrying their sons. But you've got the son, you've got the children and the wisest course is to overlook mother-in-law jealousy. If you don't pay any attention to her, very likely she'll come around of her own accord.

Hand-written Notes Obligatory in Acknowledging Wedding Gifts

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm a war bride, and as my husband is high up in the service, I got a good many handsome wedding presents. I bought the cutest packages of acknowledgments for wedding gifts the other day, and when I showed them to my sister-in-law, she almost had a fit. She informed me that printed acknowledgments for presents, no matter how cute the pictures were, are the last word in bad taste. Is this true? I've got more to do, getting our new quarters in shape, than writing letters to a lot of people I've never seen. I thought I'd ask you before I sent out those printed cards.

War Bride

I'm afraid I've got bad news for you, sister. But handwritten acknowledgments of wedding presents are considered the thing. Get a box of the best cream-white stationery your pocketbook will afford. If there's time to have your address engraved at the top, that would make it even better. Write your acknowledgments in good black ink. There are a dozen good letter-writing manuals on the market, and if you can't make up charming notes, you can pluck a phrase here and there and get by with it. Best of luck to you.

Wants to Marry a Foreigner, But Her Parents are Unwilling

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I'm 19 years old and in love with a young man of foreign extraction and have been for five or more years. I've dated other boys, and one of them sent me an engagement ring, which I promptly returned because I don't love him enough to wear it. I love only the foreign boy, but my parents forbid me to see him or even speak to him.

He is only 20 years of age and is very fond of me. He wants me to marry him before he goes into the service, but I don't think I could marry him without my parents' consent. Please give me your advice in the matter; I'm so mixed up and don't know what to do.

R. F.

It always goes against the grain with me to discourage young love. But twenty is pretty young for a man to make those promises "for better or for worse," particularly as he's about to go into the service. Why don't you two wait until after the war and then decide to marry. If you're still in love, that would be the better plan.

As you've known him as long as five years, it seems to me you could depend on your own choice in the matter. Your parents would probably waive their objections by that time.

The Marry-Go-Round

RESEARCH IN ROMANCE

Next to a sprained ankle or an aching wisdom-tooth, about the most painful thing in a normal girl's life is "first love." It is only in the "last love" that she finds peace-of-heart and abiding happiness.

But, in between the two, the average girl has many little romances, flirtations, heartthrobs and thrills, which are valuable lessons, if she will regard them just as "research" in the School of Experience.

For instance, she will learn:

That every girl is a love-seeker, no matter what her type or career; but most men fancy they can dodge love and marriage—until something like war, separation or jealousy wakes them up.

That times, manners and morals may change, but outside of a plucked eyebrow, there is nothing narrower or more conventional than the notions of a man in love, regarding his own girl—or the girl he wants to "own."

That love is not all there is to a modern girl's life, but it is still the plot, the theme, the incidental music and the climax!

That most men spend their lives, praying for rain—and then wishing it would clear off; pursuing some girl—and then trying to get past her; falling in love—and then trying to crawl out of it.

That whatever a man wins easily, whether it's love or money, he regards as "velvet", and is apt to throw away carelessly.

That the girl whom a man loves best, and who holds him longest, is the one who loves him "just enough!" Just enough to make him happy—and not enough to make him tired or conceited.

That a man's heart may have a secret sanctuary where only one girl may abide — but it is full of little ante-rooms, which are seldom vacant.

That a man's slogan, in love as in politics, is "Promise anything, until the campaign is won."

That love is not an orchid, which must be carefully cultivated, but a wild-flower that flourishes in unexpected places, where it is least encouraged.

That there is still a quaint old-fashioned illusion that a girl "chooses" the man she marries; but every girl knows that a husband is just one of the wedding presents—something that just happens to you, like a winter cold.

That love is a delirium, of which the most striking hallucination is that it will last, forever.

That the only way to find happiness in love is to take it like medicine or religion, with blind faith—and a little philosophy.

Women's Activities

FRIENDSHIP GROUP OF BRIDGE STREET UNITED CHURCH

On Sunday evening the regular meeting of the Friendship Group of Bridge Street United Church opened with a sing-song led by the President, LAC. Allan Thomson, with Mr. Alec Gordon at the piano. Miss Margaret Houston favoured the group with two numbers, "Iche Licke Dicke" and "Still Be The Night." The president then introduced the guest speaker, PO. Ben Owen, of the Royal Australian Air Force, now at Mountain View. PO. Owen spoke about his own county of Australia, comparing it in size, population and climate to that of the United States and Canada. He pointed out the facts of interest concerning the products, their sports, their lakes and mountains, the government and schools, their transportation system and their rationing system. He also spoke about the famous barrier reef made in the ocean off the coast of Australia. In conclusion he stated that in many things Canada and the United States are alike, while Australia resembles Great Britain. This talk was followed by a "get-acquainted" game. The session of the church under the leadership of Mr. Galloway then served a lunch. The singing of "Abide With Me" brought the meeting to a close. Each Sunday evening a cordial welcome is extended to all young people away from home, especially those in the services, to attend these meetings.

MELROSE W.M.S. AUXILIARY

The regular monthly meeting of the W.M.S. Auxiliary was held on January 5th, at the home of Mrs. John Weese with an attendance of thirteen. The new President, Mrs. Eugene Badgley, opened the meeting. The worship service was conducted by the president, assisted by Mrs. F. Bennett and Mrs. C. McFarlane, the theme being, "The Bible for All of Canada's Children." Minutes were read and approved. Mrs. F. Bennett, past president, conducted the installation of officers and offered a dedicating prayer. Reports of the various secretaries were then presented. It was moved by Mrs. Chas. McFarlane and seconded by Mrs. F. Bennett that a mission band be organized for the coming year with Mrs. A. Cole as leader. Mrs. C. Weese, assistant. Collection, $3.64. Mrs. Chas McFarlane, group leader, then took charge of the program, interspersing her readings with little gems of poetry in her inimitable manner. Mrs. T. Howard read an interesting article, "Mottos That Have Moved Men in the Master's Footsteps" by Mrs. C. Weese. An article, "What About Our Future Conduct" was given by Mrs. John Weese. The meeting closed with all repeating the watch word. The hostess served a delicious lunch.

CENTENARY Y.P.U.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Holton kindly opened their home for the regular meeting. There was a good attendance and Donald Hubble, Missionary convener, took charge of the program. A hymn was sung and Fred Edmondson read the Scripture taken from the book of Luke.

The convener's missionary talk was interesting and educational. It was emphasized that the work in missionary hospitals is of very great importance since the Saviour went about healing the sick. The president took charge of the business period and several items of business were discussed. The meeting closed with the Mizpah benediction. The hostess, Norma Holton, served a dainty lunch at the close of the evening and a vote of thanks was given the Holton family for their kindness.

W.M.S. OF BRIDGE STREET UNITED CHURCH

The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Missionary Society of Bridge St. United Church was held in the ladies' parlours on January 7th, with Mrs. E. N. Baker in the chair, due to the illness of Miss Lazelle Brown, the retiring president of the society.

Mrs. Pickering gave a short talk on the great value of religious education for children and one's responsibility toward that subject.

Mrs. Trusdale gave a resume of the reports of the different committees as given at an executive meeting, covering the year's work of the society.

Mrs. Farnsworth took charge of the memorial service given for those who passed on during last year, Mrs. R. Sherman and Mrs. Bonisteel.

The treasurer, in giving the annual report, announced an increase of giving for the year, $76.79.

Dr. Semple led the service for the installation of new officers and stated his appreciation of the work of the Past President, Miss Brown, and of the incoming President, Mrs. R. D. P. Davidson.

Dr. Semple, in a brief message to the women of the society, spoke of the need of the leadership of women in the church. Only a few are willing to pay the price of leadership. The church should not only hear the message; hearing should be translated into concrete action.

After the installation service for the new officers, Mrs. Davidson took the chair and expressed her thanks to the ladies for the honor of being asked to take the presidency of the society. Mrs. Davidson extended thanks to the last executive and expressed a determination to give her best efforts in the coming year's work and especially to do the utmost for the young people of the church.

Mrs. Baker spoke of the plan of Bible study as given in the Missionary Monthly magazine and made a plea for the ladies to follow it.

The group leaders for the coming year are as follows: Mrs. Pearsall, Mrs. Finkle, Mrs. Maguire, Mrs. Hamm, Mrs. Gilbert, Mrs. Thomas, Mrs. Harvey; Assistant group leaders, Mrs. Farnsworth, Mrs. Cole, Mrs. Burr, Mrs. Montgomery, Mrs. Schryver, Mrs. Sharpe, Mrs. Gerrie, Mrs. Shortt and Mrs. Price.

PHILLIPSTON W.M.S.

The January meeting of Phillipston W.M.S., held at the home of Mrs. W. Phillips with the president, Mrs. Harry Ketcheson, presiding, was opened with Mrs. Ketcheson reading an extract from the King's message. A poem was read by Mrs. W. Phillips. The devotional part was taken by Mrs. C. Clarke, who read a piece entitled "Habits for Christian Workers." The matter of unfinished business was brought up and the president said, in thinking over the goal for the coming year, that one must not think only of money, but should take special interest in his own church and see that it is kept alive and prospering. Correspondence was read and treasurer's report given, which showed $56.32 having been raised. A poem was read by Miss Mildred Ketcheson. Twenty questions for an auxiliary were read by Mrs. Billa Ketcheson, the main one being, What have we done to advance God's work? The hostess served lunch and a social half hour was spent. Attendance, 8; collection $1.20. Following are the names of officers for the year: Hon. Pres., Mrs. (Rev.) G. McKenzie; President, Mrs. W. H. Ketcheson; 1st Vice, Mrs. M. Robson; 2nd Vice, Mrs. A. Casey; Corr. Sec., Mrs. Lee Ketcheson; Rec. Sec., Mrs. A. Casey; Treas., Mrs. W. Phillips; Christian Stewardship - Finance, Mrs. E. Sayers; Com. Friendship, Mrs. M. ST. PIERRE—BARRIAGE

A pretty wedding took place at St. Thomas' Church on Saturday afternoon, January 1st, at two o'clock, when Daisy Barriage, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. D. Barriage, became the bride of Leo Paul St. Pierre, son of Mr. and Mrs. St. Pierre of Flower Station, Rev. A. Beauchamp Payne officiating.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore an afternoon dress of white sheer, the neckline and bodice of which were fashioned with lace. Her fingertip veil was of matching silk net and she carried a bouquet of Talisman roses.

Miss Flossie Barriage, sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and was wearing an ensemble of pink with veil to match and carrying a bouquet of asters.

The bridesmaids were Misses Georgina Carson and Helen Keller, the former attired in pink with matching veil and carrying a bouquet of asters and the latter wearing blue sheer with veil of matching hue and carrying a bouquet of carnations.

Nieces of the bride, Jeanette Green and Sheila Green, were flower girls and were dressed in frocks of pink and were carrying bouquets of marigolds.

Groomsman for the occasion was Mr. N. St. Pierre, brother of the groom.

A reception was held at the bride's home which was decorated in pink and white streamers. The bride's mother received the guests attired in sky blue with corsage of cream roses.

Out-of-town guests were Mrs. W. J. St. Pierre, Bertha Peters and relatives from Belleville.

Mr. and Mrs. St. Pierre will take up residence in Belleville.

Fashion Flashes

THE BEST WAY of beating winter wardrobe blues is by wearing a Spring color. A pretty frock, of sheer woolen in qua blue, has fluted edges around its bosom front and push-up sleeves. Bow-tide stitched neckband and belt and colored studs are other details of a dress that will be a Spring delight as well.

A BIG SUCCESS seems destined for the well tailored, untrimmed coat in colorful fabric, come spring. Red worsted is used for a beautiful coat, the bodice softly bloused in back and cut with wide peaked, high-placed lapels. Horseshoe shaped stitching simulates pockets at the fitted waistline.

FLOWERS BLOOM again on pretty hats for early Spring. White straw-cloth makes a charming hat, forward posed, with section of brim in front softly pleated. It is trimmed with tiny pink moss roses and green foliage and has a gossamer green veil.

MUCH DETAIL marks frocks and suits of printed silk prepared for wear in the south now and for later on in other parts of the country. A brown silk crepe with a blue bird print has a collarless V neckline which ends in a self-bow, the fabric edged with brown net. A matching jacket, on boxy lines has insertions of the net to make a tuxedo line.

Save Your Christmas Cards for Sick Children.

It was the children's poet, Longfellow, who wrote those stimulating words, "Give what you have. To someone, it may be better than you dare to think."

A beautiful way to take to your heart these urging words of the poet who loved children is to save your Christmas cards and send them to children, particularly children who are sick, at home or in hospitals. Appeal to your children to save their cards too, to give to children less fortunate than they. Beg your friends and their children to contribute their cards.

Gather all the cards you can (both Christmas cards and other greeting-cards), and for an "extra added attraction," buy some inexpensive loose-leaf scrapbooks (or make them yourself) and some tubes or jars of paste or some rolls of transparent mending tape so that the children themselves can have the delight of assembling the cards and pasting them in the groupings and patterns they choose. The first year I took these cards to the children in an orthopedic hospital I pasted them into the scrapbooks, but then I realized that this took from the children the anticipation of making their own scrapbooks in their own way, their artistic delight, as one bright-eyed little patient said, of being their "own decorators."

It's touching and heart-warming to hear these little patients, sick at home, or temporarily in a children's ward, or alas destined for a long stay in an orthopedic hospital, exclaim joyously about the pictures, watch them choose their favorite designs and favorite colors, and eagerly plan their patterns for the scrapbooks. I paste the most colorful and dramatic pictures on the covers of the scrapbooks, and the children choose their "pet" book. And they love to "swap" some of their pictures for others nearer to their heart's desire!

The children are enchanted too with gay Christmas wrappings (fresh, unused ones are more considerate) or other bright papers such as flower-bordered shelf-papers, to make page-borders or cut-outs. And Christmas booklets with new or traditional stories, or books of comics, make hospital hours pass more happily, more comfortably.

Dedicate some of your card-collection to the lonely or sick children of servicemen in your community. Paste on the first inside page of each scrapbook a lovely New Year's card with a warm-hearted greeting from you and your children (a friendly message as well as a suggestion for assembling the books.)

For more ambitious gifts to sick children, you can do wonders with decorative cut-outs, of Christmas angels or bells, flowers or small scenic details, or picturesque little faces or sprightly figures. With these cut-outs, some paste, and a little imagination, you can make or attractively decorate book-covers, book-ends, bookmarks; desk-sets or desk-blotters, pencil-trays, pencil boxes, writing portfolios, picture frames, photograph frames. Or with a box of child's letter-paper enclose a collection of tiny cut-outs for the child to applique on the top of the paper.

"He who gives a child a treat Makes joy-bells ring in Heaven's street."

LETTERS FROM HER TO HIM

Girls, if you're only a "girl friend' 'of a serviceman .. not his fiancee .. write to him just as a friend. Over-doses of sentimentality in your letters may make him so uncomfortable that he may give you and his correspondence with you the "brush off." Make that "you" you put in your letters the "you" he expects and wants you to be.

THERE'S A BREATH of Spring in a mid-winter dress-up frock of aqua blue crepe made with a sweetheart neckline bordered in black lace ruffles and trimmed with two pink velvet roses.

NOT TOO SOON to be shopping for a Spring blouse, since the shops report that new blouses are selling fast. Eggshell crepe with a lily-of-the-valley design in white and green, makes a pretty blouse detailed with a beruffled, plunging neckline and drawstring sleeves.

JUST LOST TEMPER

Pittsburgh, Jan. 10 (AP)—Clarence L. Zeise was sitting in his Knoxville home last night when he heard a woman scream. He dashed into the street and found the woman was his 35-year-old wife. She was sitting on a man, holding him down. "He tried to take my purse away from me," she explained. "When I wouldn't give it to him, he hit me over the head with his gun. After that—well, I guess I lost my temper."

Pot Roast, Plus

The colder the weather the more your family will like this spicy pot roast of beef

Our 'hint' for this week introduces one of the most useful tricks in the cook's repertoire. That of the marinade or "steeping sauce."

Many of the less popular cuts of meat can be given unusual and attractive flavours by soaking them in such a sauce.

Try the marinade given in the panel with a pot roast of beef : : : a 4 lb. beef rump or chuck : : : prepare the meat as directed and let stand, covered, in cool place for 2 hours or more. Pour off liquid and save. Rub meat with mustard and brown in hot fat. Add the spiced mixture. Cover and cook slowly adding hot water as needed for 3 to 3½ hours. Vegetables (onions, carrots, celery, etc.) may be added just long enough before serving to ensure tenderness.

Toronto Gives Fine Display In Scoring Defeating Bruins; Bill Cowley Out for Month

Boston Centre Ice Star Suffers Shoulder Separation When He Crashes Into Boards

CANADIENS WIN TWICE

By ALAN HARVEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Symptomatic both of Montreal superiority and the insuperiority of their opposition is the fact that Toronto Maple Leafs appear the only club capable of catching Canadiens before the National Hockey League schedule ends in March.

They'd probably have to do it with mirrors, at that, because injuries to Bob Davidson and Mel Hill have stripped Leafs down to three N.H.L. veterans in Reg Hamilton, Lorne Carr and Paul Bibeault, a Montreal castoff. However, the other clubs are too far back to have anything but an academic interest in the question.

Leafs slipped into undisputed possession of the runner-up spot Saturday by routing Boston Bruins, their chief rivals for the berth, 12-3 before 11,093 home fans. More than that, they unwittingly became the instrument in removing Bill Cowley for at least a month. Checked by Jack McLean early in the third period, the 30-year-old Boston centre star crashed into the boards and suffered a shoulder separation, third serious injury of his bigtime career.

The loss of the league's outstanding playmaker not only leaves Bruins in the position of an automobile without a steering wheel, but also cheats Cowley of a chance to shatter the modern scoring mark of 73 points, set by Ralph (Cooney) Weiland of Bruins in 1929-30 and equalled last season by Doug Bentley of Chicago Black Hawks. Up to Saturday, Cowley had accumulated 52 points (19 goals, 33 assists) in 25 or the 50 games Boston will play.

Wings Master Hawks.

In other games during the N.H.L.'s 11th weekend of competition, Detroit Red Wings mastered Chicago Black Hawks 4-2 Sunday to snap their fourth-place tie with Hawks, while Canadiens assaulted New York Rangers twice, 8-2 in Montreal Saturday and 6-5 in New York Sunday, to increase their league lead to 13 points and their current victory string to nine games.

Goals by Mud Bruneteau, Carl Liscombe, Hal Jackson and Syd Howe gave Wings their victory over Hawks, who relied upon Doug Bentley for both their scores. The game, which marked the return of Mike Karakas to the Chicago nets, also left the Hawks without a victory on Detroit ice in 16 games since 1940.

Mike McMahon and Toe Blake with two goals apiece featured Montreal's home-ice victory against Rangers, but the tailenders threw a scare into the Habitants at New York as Dutch Hiller scored three goals against his former teammates.

One-Goal Verdict.

Despite Hiller's efforts, two goals apiece by Murph Chamberlain and Ray Getliffe spurred Canadiens to their one-goal verdict, sending Rangers down to their fifth straight defeat and their 20th in 25 games.

George Boothman scored three goals at Toronto Saturday as Leafs staged their sharpest offensive display of the season with 26 scoring points, while three other Toronto youngsters—Gus Bodnar, Jack Ingoldsby and Jackie Hamilton—collected two apiece. But the brightest Toronto star was defenceman Babe Pratt, who set about 50 percent of the Toronto attacks in motion and received five assists on the night.

SAM LANGFORD, BLIND, PENNILESS ENJOYING LIFE

Does Not Want Anyone to Feel Sorry for Him

FOUGHT THE BEST

New York, Jan. 10 — (CP)—Sam Langford, blind, penniless and far from being the young buck who, as the "Boston Tar Baby," cut a wide swath through boxing ranks three decades ago, laughed happily today and declared stoutly:—

"Don't nobody need to feel sorry for old man. I had plenty of good times. I been all over the world. I fought maybe three, four hundred fights and every one was a pleasure. If I just had me a little change in my pocket, I'd get along fine."

Langford, born in Weymouth, N. S., on a date he doesn't know — pressed, he'll say March 4, 1886 — was found by a New York Herald Tribune reporter in a dingy hall bedroom on 139th Street, the heart of Manhattan's Harlem. He has only memories to remind him of his days in the ring when he fought and defeated such boxing greats as Jack Johnson, Harry Wills and Fred Fulton, despite their huge advantage in size.

The Boston Tar Baby fought at 165 pounds. He now is 210, although only five feet, 6½ inches in height. The Herald Tribune termed him a "gnome with a prodigiously broad flat nose, a cauliflower ear and an immense amiability."

The buffeting he received in the ring left Langford blind and he now ekes out an existence on a few dollars a month income from a foundation for the blind.

Langford began fighting before 1900 but boxing records list his first fight as in 1902. His last was in Mexico City Oct. 19, 1923, when he knocked out Fireman Jim Flynn in three rounds.

Red Tilson Ruled Out of Junior Competition at OHA Meeting

By The Canadian Press

The sub-committee of the Ontario Hockey Association, meeting in Toronto yesterday, drew up a one-week's revision of the senior schedule but went no farther because of conditions that were described as unsettled. The new dates were necessary because of the withdrawal of Toronto R.C.A.F. Jan. 6 under the Air Force ban on Allan Cup competition. Kingston Frontenac Army, Hamilton Majors, St. Catharines Saints and Toronto Navy are continuing in the loop.

Manager Harold Ballard of the Toronto Marlboros in the junior 'A' series was given a warning for having played Albert (Red) Tilson, an ineligible player, against Oshawa Generals one week before and Tilson was ruled out of junior competition because he had played too many senior games this season. The same reason was applied to Pat Powers whom St. Michael's College wanted to use while William Jordan was ruled out for the Owen Sound Greys, in the junior "B" series after having played for Falcons in the U. S. Eastern Hockey League with Philadelphia. Don Skirk was awarded to Waterloo juniors and Derwin Garner of Breslau was granted permission to play with the club nearest to his hometown. Brantford Manufacturers League was admitted as a four-team group, the winner to participate in the intermediate "A" playoffs. The application of Barrie to enter the North York junior "B" group was refused.

Southpaw Marius Russo of the New York Yankees announced yesterday at New York he would not play this year because he expected to remain in war work at the Republic Aircraft Company plant at Farmingdale, N. Y. This will leave the world champions with only two rookie southpaws, Johnny Johnson of Kansas City and Willis Baker from Elmira, N.Y.

With an average of 243 in 15 games, George Hall of Guelph defeated Charles Roxton of Sarnia in a $100 five-pin challenge bowling match at Guelph Saturday, Hall's aggregate being 3,644 against 3,574 for the loser. Both went over the 300-mark for a single game.

The New York State Athletic Commission has asked manager Chick Wergeles to appear at a hearing in New York Tuesday to explain his comments regarding ring officials following the appearance of his fighter, lightweight champion Beau Jack, against Lulu Constantino in Madison Square Garden Friday night, the bout resulting in a split decision.

Manager Leo Durocher of the Brooklyn Dodgers offered at Miami, Fla., yesterday to lay odds his team would finish no worse than third in the 1944 National League race. He conceded, however, the St. Louis Cards were the team to beat for the pennant.

After 20 years with the New York Giants, William Harold Terry, general manager of the club in 1942, announced yesterday at Memphis, Tenn., he was quitting baseball for keeps in order to devote full time to the cotton manufacturing business. He claimed that baseball had become a "cheap business."

Black Badge, odds-on favorite, defeated a 35 to 1 shot, Good Bid, in a photo-finish Saturday for the $5,000 Hialeah Stakes at Hialeah Park, Miami. Third in the six-furlong dash for three-year-olds was another long shot, Brief Sigh, which paid $21.70 to show.

The Chicago Chapter of the Baseball Writers Association of America yesterday announced the selection of third-baseman Bill Johnson of the New York Yankees as the rookie find of 1943. Johnson will receive the Louis Comiskey Memorial Trophy.

Willie Hoppe, billiard king, scored 400 for eight sessions to win by 58 points Saturday night at Kansas City against Welker Cochran of San Francisco. Hoppe took the final block of the match 50 to 49 in 61 innings.

KINGSTON ARMY WINS GAME IN LAST 10 SECONDS

Defeat St. Catharines 5-4 to Hold First Place by Two Points

TORRID CONTEST

(By The Canadian Press)

After a third-period seesaw scoring struggle, White of Kingston put the Senior O.H.A. game against St. Catharines on ice Saturday night for Frontenac Army with only ten seconds to go, the soldiers winning out 5-4 after the torrid session. The fixture saw Frontenacs take their 10th match of the season and assume leadership in the race once more with a two-point margin over the Saints.

Pete Backor put St. Catharines in the lead at the outset when he converted a pass from Red Goble and the Saints held a 2-1 advantage at the close of the initial period when Concessi came through with a score after Foster had found the net for Army's first counter. Both sides notched one in the second stanza, with Peters doing the trick for the homesters and Fritz counting for Saints.

Phillips of Kingston tied it up once more in 1.18 of the third period and the soldiers went to the front 4-3 on Corrigan's tally two minutes later. Paul Mundrick registered the equalizer for the visitors 14 minutes later but, in the closing moments, Peters and Corrigan set up the play which enabled White to find the target for the winning goal.

Port Colborne Outclassed.

In the Junior "A" series of The Ontario Hockey Association Saturday night, Port Colborne recreationists were outclassed 12-2 at Oshawa by the Generals, the latter running in ten goals before Kaiser found the cage late in the second period for the visitors' first score.

At Galt, the Kists required overtime to dispose of Brantford Lions 5-4, with Harry Kazarian pulling off a mystery shot which entailed a decision by Referee H. McLean of Hamilton, after a goal judge failed to flash the signal. Galt is now tied with St. Catharines for Group 2 leadership with 20 points apiece.

The afternoon double-header at Maple Leaf Gardens, Toronto, witnessed an 8-0 whitewash of St. Catharines and an 8-2 victory for Hamilton whizzers over Toronto young Rangers.

PRO. FOOTBALL HAD BEST YEAR SAYS E. LAYDEN

Attendance Up 34,000 in 42 League Games and Competition Keener

GOOD OUTLOOK

By ELMER LAYDEN
(Commissioner of the National Football League)

Chicago, Jan. 10 — (AP) — A year ago the continuance of professional football was fronted with a number of perplexing problems. These problems amounted to a challenge. The National League owners accepted the challenge and were rewarded with their best season.

Continued operation in 1944 presents the same problems. They no longer, however, constitute the formidable challenge that confronted owners in 1943, when on every hand well-meaning observers warned that teams could not be got together.

New stars came to the front in 1943. More persons, by some 34,000, saw the 42 league contests last year than witnessed 56 games in 1942. The average game attendance was up 36.7 per cent. Receipts for the championship game on Dec. 26 broke all existing play-off records.

Much of the increased enthusiasm for professional football stemmed from the better balance in the league. In the main, the perennial leaders remained the leaders but their margins of superiority were reduced to a minimum. Further shrinkage in these margins can be expected next fall.

Talk of immediate expansion in the league probably is premature at this time. Expansion, however, is inevitable in the post-war period.

All in all, the 1943 season has left such a favorable impression that it is difficult to adopt a pessimistic attitude toward 1944.

Action Please.

After advocating "Peace at any price!" the lady on the soapbox demanded:

"Can any person in this audience give me a slogan that will help to win the war?"

"Ah, miss, I can!" shouted a stalwart sailor in the crowd.

"And what is it, my friend?" the orator asked, with a superior smile.

Like a shot came the reply:

"Stop yapping and start scrapping, Miss!"

Junior Hockey Picture.

Three junior games are scheduled in group No. 2 of the O. H. A. this week, tonight will see the inaugural of F/L. Buff Horton's R. C. A. F. "Flyers" at Stirling, when the "Combines" will also be playing their initial group game. On Wednesday night the Flyers journey to Trenton and on Friday night the Combines invade the Hume Arena for the only game of the week for Holway's Belleville kids. By Saturday the fans will have a pretty good idea as to the relative strength of the four clubs, as all will have met, except the Flyers and Belleville.

With four days at his disposal before the locals swing into action, Coach Holway should have ample time to whip his charges around into something like a winning combination. Over at Trenton Friday night their shooting was woefully weak, as Belleville kids are reported to have been in scoring position so often, and muffed their chances, that it was nothing short of pitiful. A few good drillings at the oldtime art of shooting at a target might remedy the local trouble. At least it would be worth a try.

Cagers Strut Stuff.

Tonight sees the opening of the Ladies City Basketball League at the "Y" with the Alemite lassies meeting Reliance at eight and Sargents and Deacons clashing at nine. Girls' softball has boomed in Belleville for the past few years and the same teams are now playing basketball. If girls can become proficient at softball, there's no reason why they can't be just entertaining when it comes to the hoop game. Most of the girls on the league's four team roster played softball last summer for the same clubs and will be easily recognized by the patrons.

For the past month the four teams comprising the loop have been practicing diligently until today the lassies are nearly as proficient at the high-hoop game as they are at softball, so with no sport in town until Friday night's hockey, here's diversion for the time being tonight at the "Y".

Remember When—

Light Heavyweight Champion Billie Conn, seeking a heavyweight bout with Joe Louis, scored a decisive 12-round victory over Henry Cooper, four years ago tonight, in heavyweight debut at New York's Madison Square Garden.

Run-producers Slump.

It is interesting to observe how the number of men driving in over 100 runs has shrunk during the war. In 1941, ten American leaguers batted in a century or more—Rudy York, Joe DiMaggio, Jeff Heath, Charlie Keller, Ted Williams, Bob Johnson, Sam Chapman, Jimmie Foxx, Jim Tabor, Cecil Travis. By 1942, the group had dwindled to five—Williams, DiMaggio, Keller, Gordon, Doerr—and in 1943 it was York and Etten. Of the 1941 "Big Ten," DiMaggio, Williams, Chapman and Travis are in service and Foxx has dropped out of the majors.

Room for Argument.

Writes Bill Gaynon in the Niagara Falls Review: "There will be little disagreement with Connie Mack's own admission that the greatest blunder he ever committed was the sale of Herb Pennock to Boston Red Sox in 1915. The present general manager of the Phillies was just a youngster at that time and after joining the Hub clubs he spent nearly a score of seasons with good Red Sox and Yank teams and became one of the greatest southpaws of all time. His displays would entitle Herb to classification beside such other great forkwheelers as "Rube" Waddell, "Lefty" Grove, Eddie Plank and Carl Hubbel, all but the last named of this quartet, being members of some of Mack's finest teams. Control was his greatest asset and it's questionable if any leftie in the game's history could match Herb in this respect. The same Mr. Pennock could have done succeeding Philadelphia teams a lot of good, and there's little question about old Connie not realizing this point more than anybody else. However the sale was a swell break for the player as it provided him with an opportunity of getting on championship teams, both at Boston and New York, while the Athletics went through a long period of lean seasons when the leftie was enjoying his peak campaigns."

BUFFALO BISONS WIN TWO GAMES OVER WEEKEND

Defeat Top Teams in Hershey Bears and the Cleveland Barons

BEARS WIN ONE

(By The Canadian Press)

Buffalo was the only team in the American Hockey League to win two weekend games. Last night they defeated the league leading Hershey Bears 4-1 and Saturday night the second-place Cleveland Barons 6-2.

Bears gained a 2-1 victory over Providence Saturday night while Barons took a 4-3 decision over Indianapolis Capitals last night. Pittsburgh Hornets defeated Caps 3-1 Saturday night and Reds whipped the Hornets 4-1 last night.

Last night Captain Wally Kilrea scored Hershey's only goal. He was playing his last game in Buffalo before reporting to the United States army. Maxie Bennett and Larry Thibeault tallied for Buffalo in the first period to take the lead. Fred Hunt added another in the second round and Thibeault made the fourth in the final.

In the Bison-Baron game, Buffalo scorers were Roger Leger, Dede Klein, Walter Atanas, Fred Thurier (2) and Bennett. The Cleveland goals were scored by Phil Hergesheimer.

Three-Inch Cut

In the Bears' 2-1 victory over Reds, George Patterson tallied for Hershey at 1:32 in the first period, but Harold Cooper tied the count three minutes later. The second period was scoreless, but Hec Highton, former Chicago Black Hawk goalie in the nets for Providence, stopped a flying puck. Three stitches were required to close a cut above the left eye, but he returned to play. Billy Hudson added Hershey's winning goal in the third period.

Young Highton played brilliantly again last night when Providence Reds took the Hornets for a 4-1 ride. Cooper collected two goals while Art Giroux and Hec Pozzo made the other two. Lloyd Roubell scored Pittsburgh's lone tally.

Barons outskated the Caps at Indianapolis last night and won their 4-3 victory with Hergesheimer shooting the winning goal at 17:22 in the final period. Tommy Burlington started the scoring in the first period.

Saturday night's game at Pittsburgh was Hornet's fourth straight victory on home ice. Tony Hemmerling, Leo Richard and Jones collected Pittsburgh's three counters while Nakina Smith scored Caps' only goal in the last round.

Horse Sense Bridge

LESSON NO. 272

By SAM GORDON
The Kibitzer

Avoid the sad fate of Rosie O'Day. Her husband took bridge in a serious way. She once took her tricks without time to consider. And now Rose O'Day is another bridge widder.

A hot bridge player is not content with the mere taking of the tricks he needs. He plans beyond the obvious. He looks for extra pickings. Even if it takes some unusual method of play.

South is declarer at a contract of six spades in this deal:

NORTH
♠ Q 6 4 2
♥ Q 6 4 2
♦ A J
♣ A 4 2

WEST
♠ 10 8 3
♥ 9
♦ K Q 7 4
♣ K Q 10 9 8

EAST
♠ 9
♥ 10 8 3
♦ 10 9 8 6 3 2
♣ 7 6 3

SOUTH
♠ A K J 7 5
♥ A K J 7 5
♦ 5
♣ J 5

The opening lead from west is the club king. With single plays, declarer can take the 12 tricks needed to make the small slam. The first trick can be taken with dummy ace of clubs.

After three rounds of trumps and four rounds of hearts, dummy sluffs a small club on the south fifth heart. The diamond ace wins and the diamond jack is trumped by south.

In this plain manner, the second round of clubs is a loser; the only loser. But an expert player could and would take all 13 tricks with the cards as they are.

The dummy club ace, three rounds of trumps, four rounds of hearts would take his first eight tricks. The fifth south heart would be led and a small dummy club would be sluffed thereon.

These steps are the same as those taken before. But at this point, the diamonds would not be touched. Instead, another round of trumps would be won in the south hand.

By this time, each player has left only three cards. West has the club queen and K Q of diamonds. Dummy has A J of diamonds and a tiny club. South has a trump, a diamond, and the club jack.

Right here, south leads his last trump and sluffs a club from dummy. And west is squeezed. All he can do is holler uncle.

"Flesh and Fantasy"

Lauded as one of the most deeply engrossing motion pictures ever to come from Hollywood, "Flesh and Fantasy" co-produced by Charles Boyer and Julien Duvivier, is scheduled to open next at the McCarthy Theatre. The new Universal film, described as a radical departure in screen entertainment has a cast of noted stars which include many outstanding cinema players. The stars include Robert Benchley, Betty Field, Robert Cummings, Edward G. Robinson, Charles Boyer and Barbara Stanwyck.

Based on stories by Oscar Wilde, Laslo Vadnay and Ellis St. Joseph. "Flesh and Fantasy" is said to blend three dramatic episodes with novel effect. Ernest Pascal, Samuel Hoffenstein and Ellis St. Joseph wrote the screen play which is declared to be a remarkable contribution to movie literature. Fact and fancy are mingled in fascinating manner as separate trains of human events overlap through circumstance and logical coincidence.

Strangely interwoven are the experiences of a homely woman who becomes glamorous and find love; the would-be murderer who meets his own doom because of a clairvoyant; and the high-wire artist of a circus who skirts disaster after an extraordinary dream.

Startling suspense is claimed to have been achieved by the unique plot construction and the wide variety of intriguing sequences. Expert port rayals are credited to the film's co-stars among whom are such well-known as Edgar Barrier, Thomas Mitchell, C. Aubrey Smith, Anna Led, Dame May, Whitty and Charles Winninger.

AT THE BELLE

"This is the Army," In Color

"This is the Army," the Army's own musical show that was so great it had to be put on film for the whole world to see, is now at the Belle Theatre, in its magnificent Warner Bros. Technicolor production.

For an inspired job of transferring the show to the screen—all proceeds going to Army Emergency Relief for the privilege—Warner Bros. deserves the nation's "E" for excellence and its everlasting gratitude.

The Sergeant Irving Berlin of World War I was responsible for "This is the Army," and, of course, wrote the music, music that is already famous and loved. He wrote one new number for the picture version, entitled "What Does He Look Like," a beautiful tune, sung in the film by Frances Langford.

Happily, it's a case of "something new has been added" and, just as happily, nothing has been taken away. The entire accomplished original cast remains, singing "This is the Army, Mr. Jones," "I'm Getting Tired So I Can Sleep," "With My Head in the Clouds" and all the hit parading tunes.

As he did in "Yip, Yip Yaphank," his soldier show of more than twenty-five years ago, and again in "This is the Army," Irving Berlin sings his plaintive lament, "Oh How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning," in a way that puts a lump in your throat and brings the dew to your eyes.

Then, there are the infectious high-jinks of the comedy "find" Sergeant Julie Oshins, whose good-natured humor and masterly timing make him a comedian to be remembered after the war, Sergeant Ezra Stone, the original Henry Aldrich of radio fame, Sergeant Philip Truex, Jr. and Private Joe Cook, Jr., the edged and revealing impersonations by Sergeant Alan Manson and Private James MacColl; the lightning-fast acrobatics of the Allan Trio, the "K. P." juggling of corporal Larry Weeks and the sleight-of-hand of Sergeant John Mendes. Heavyweight champion Joe Louis—Sergeant Louis, now,—is interpolated to lead the "What the Well-Dressed Man in Harlem Will Wear" number.

Lavish Cast

The Hollywood contribution is a lavish cast of players including George Murphy, Joan Leslie, Lieutenant Ronald Reagan, George Tobias, Alan Hale, Charles Butterworth and Una Merkel, telling the story sequence written around the soldiers' show by Captain Claude Binyon and Casey Robinson. The story reaches back to the "Yip Yip Yaphank" of World War 1 and returns to the present with a warming father and son tie-up.

Another contribution, from the radio, is Kate Smith in a thrilling rendition of Berlin's beautiful anthem "God Bless America."

Michael Curtiz's direction carefully brings the robust body and radiant spirit of the Army show to the screen in full color and glory, and uses the screen story to make a smooth and ingratiating continuity. "This is the Army" is a big show and a great show, a full-scale all-out offensive of high spirits and good cheer!

AT THE CAPITOL

"The Edge of Darkness"

"Edge of Darkness," the Warner Bros. film based upon William Woods' popular novel of the same name, will be the new screen offering at the Capitol Theatre, startling tonight.

Errol Flynn and Ann Sheridan head one of the most distinguished casts ever assembled in one motion picture. Featured in the supporting cast are Nancy Coleman, talented young player who performed so notably in "Kings Row," "The Gay Sisters" and others; Walter Huston, whose performance as Jerry Cohen in Yankee Doodle Dandy" will long be remembered; Judith Anderson and Ruth Gordon, both prominent players of stage and screen.

Other important names in the film include John Beal, Charles Dingle, Morris Carnovsky, Roman Bohnen and Helmut Dantine, who scored in "Mrs. Miniver" and "Casablanca."

Brought to life on the screen is this story of a Norwegian fishing village, its simple, peace-loving people, and of the brutal Nazi boot that stamps out freedom wherever it goes.

"He Hired The Boss"
(Comedy)

Although their screen marriage in 20th Century-Fox's "He Hired The Boss," due tonight at the Capitol Theatre, is constantly frustrated by various events, Stuart Erwin and Evelyn Venable are rated among Hollywood's happiest parents.

Evelyn Venable is married to Hal Mohr, an ace cameraman, and has two girls, six and five years old. Stuart Erwin, who is married to June Collyer, also has two children, a boy, nine, and a girl, six.

The Canadian Universal News completes the splendid program.

AT THE CAPITOL — Stuart Erwin and Evelyn Venable look like sweethearts—and that's just what they are in 20th. Century-Fox's new comedy, "He Hired the Boss," now at the Capitol. On the same program "The Edge of Darkness."

AT THE BELLE — Joan Leslie appears with George Murphy, Lt. Ronald Reagan and an all-star soldier cast in Irving Berlin's "This Is The Army," filmed in Technicolor by Warner Bros. The picture is currently featured at the Belle Theatre.

AT THE McCARTHY — "Flesh and Fantasy," starting next at the McCarthy Theatre, the remarkable thrill drama produced for Universal by Charles Boyer and Julien Duvivier, co-stars Robert Cummings and talented Betty Field in one of the sensational romantic episodes.

Trenton and District

2 LOCAL SOLDIERS RETURN HOME FROM OVERSEAS

Signalman P. C. Dempsey Back from Britain — Pte. H. Hyatt Saw Service in Sicily

ALLIED MORALE HIGH

Trenton, Jan. 10 — (Special) — Two Trenton soldiers were among those to arrive home on the Lady Nelson last week, and both are now resting at their homes in Trenton.

Youngest is Signalman Peter C. Dempsey, 23 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter C. Dempsey, Henry St., who has spent the past five Christmases in England. He enlisted with the Signallers from Kingston when only 19 and went overseas in December 1939 with the First Division.

Last April, while on manoeuvres, he was severely wounded and lost the sight of his left eye. He spent several months in hospital and has now been granted 28 days' leave before reporting back to hospital at Kingston.

While on duty in England he spent much time in electrical work and hopes to be able to continue his studies along that line now that he has returned to Canada. He was a graduate of Trenton High School at the early age of 16 and has always been keenly interested in electricity.

While in England he met several Trenton friends on various occasions and in different parts of the country. Asked as to the morale of the people there he said they were in the best of spirits but had not relaxed their untiring war efforts for one minute. He said the food in the army there was excellent and that restaurants and public eating houses were still in a position to supply extremely tasty and well nourishing meals though all the frills of culinary had long since been forgotten.

Signalman Dempsey had the highest of praise for the Red Cross who supplied comforts and materials to those in hospital, using occupational therapy to keep the boys busy and contented during their long leisure hours. Peter produced some excellent hand made gloves and other leather work which he was allowed to bring home to his mother and sisters.

Pte. Harry (Tiny) Hyatt, severely wounded in the battle of Sicily is resting at the home of his parents Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hyatt, 69 Water St. Pte. Hyatt is a member of the Hastings & Prince Edward Regiment and went overseas in July, 1940. His wife and small son reside in England but are expected to soon join Pte. Hyatt in Trenton.

Though still feeling the effects of shrapnel in his hip Tiny was exceptionally pleased at greeting his parents and other members of the family. He had extremely high praise for his Regiment and his only regrets were that he was not able to go on to victory with them.

Trenton firemen answered a call to the Bay Shore at the East End of town about 5.30 Saturday afternoon to a vacant house, owned by Joe Gonyea, now in the Canadian Army. Though their response was within just a few minutes after the call, it was found impossible to save the frail frame structure in which flames had already gained great headway owing to a strong wind blowing at the time. A hole was quickly cut in the ice along the shore from which water through several hose lines was successful in saving surrounding dwellings.

It is thought children playing around the vacant house might have been responsible for the fire.

German Warship Of 4,000 Tons Sunk at Stettin

London, Jan. 10 (CP)—Allied air activity against continental targets from British bases during the week-end simmered down to small-scale forays and none was announced immediately for last night, although radio silence in Vichy suggested attacks in that area.

Maintaining the record that has sent aircraft to the attack on Germany every night since the new year, however, R.A.F. Mosquito bombers again attacked the western Reich Saturday night. Berlin said the old city of Aachen was the target.

Heavy bombers of the R.A.F. and R.C.A.F. last were out in force to raid the Baltic port of Stettin Jan. 5.

During the raid on Stettin "a German warship of about 4,000 tons was sunk in the middle of the harbor when it received direct hits," according to a Stockholm report quoted today by BBC.

Other vessels were wrecked, added the broadcast recorded by CBS at New York.

HUN PROPAGANDA RETREATING ON BROAD FRONT

New "Line" of Talk Deals With German Defences, Excuses Nazi Defeat in Russia

TREND IS SHOWN

By WADE WERNER
(Associated Press Staff Writer)

Lisbon, Jan. 10 —(AP)— German propaganda, once a powerful weapon in Hitler's arsenal, is retreating on a broad front in Europe after being forced to the defensive by the reverses suffered by the Nazi armed forces.

This is not merely a United Nations view, for it is supported by dispatches published in German papers. For instance, the Pariser Zeitung published recently under a Lisbon dateline a description of the increasing pro-Allied tone of the Portuguese press and acknowledged that the trend was even more pronounced in Sweden and Switzerland.

The story bemoaned the fact that Portuguese movie theatres are "completely dominated by Anglo-American films" and that bookstalls and newsstands are "flooded" with British and American books and periodicals of all kinds.

German setbacks on the eastern front, the sinking of the Scharnhorst, the aerial battering of Berlin and other demonstrations of growing Allied air strength have been most effective propaganda here as well as elsewhere.

In the face of these setbacks, German propagandists have been forced to develop a new line which is wholly defensive in nature. German papers now are emphasizing the construction of great defence works for the European fortress while excusing Nazi defeats in Russia by stressing the enormous strength of the Red army.

Newspapers like the Voelkischer Beobachter and Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, meanwhile, devote their front pages to articles designed to convince wavering Germans that Italy's example shows that "capitulation means starvation."

INCREASED REFUND VALUE

Toronto, Jan. 10—(CP)—Ontario Liquor Control Board officials said last night the board has approved an increased refund value of one cent a bottle on all Canadian beer sold in Ontario. The action, taken to relieve an acute bottle shortage, means an increase to three cents per small bottle and five cents per large bottle.

Little Benny's Note Book

Us fellows were standing around the letter box Saturday talking and arguing about what kind of a game to get up, and Shorty Judge came up with a funny looking little kid with a little round cap and big glasses. Being too little and skinny to be any good in a game, and Shorty said, This is my cousin Ollie, he came with his mother today and he's going to stay till tomorrow.

Saying it kind of apologetic, and we kept on talking and arguing and Ollie tried to butt in every once in a while without anybody even listening to him, and Shorty said, He's got 3 dollars spending money just to spend while he's staying with me.

G, 3 dollars, just for a couple of days, jimminy what's you know about that, 3 dollars, us fellows said, and Skinny Martin said, How about getting in a game Ollie? I bet you can run fast with those little legs. Oh boy if I had 3 dollars I'd take this whole crowd to the movies and make a reguler celebration, he said.

Sure, that's a swell idea, so would we, us other fellows said, and Puds Simkins said, We're going to get up a game, Ollie, do you want to get in it?

Let's let him be one of the choosers when we choose sides, I said. Hay Ollie do you know what I'd do if I had 3 dollars? I'd go right up to Sterns sporting goods and buy a Junior archery set. That's what I'd do if I had 3 dollers I was suppose to spend, I said and Ollie said, Noboy said I was suppose to spend it, I'm going to put them in my education bank for my education fund.

Aw, that's a heck of an idea, why do you need any more education than anybody else, good night you must be goofy, us fellows said, and we started to choose sides for cops and robbers and the sides came out even without Ollie, so he didn't get in it.

Proving if you dont share your blessings with other people they dont want you around, especially if they didn't want you around anyways.

The War Today— German Reich in Grip of Jitters As Disaster Looms in Russia

By DEWITT MACKENZIE
(Associated Press War Analyst)

Hitler's unhappy Reich is on tiptoe of tenseness in anticipation of Anglo-American invasion—a state of nerves which is aggravated by the grave dangers of the Russian battle.

News from Moscow today emphasizes the threat to the vital Nazi rail communications both in Poland and to the south in the Dnieper bend where a big German army is threatened with encirclement. Berlin spokesmen are preparing the public for more bad news. Should disaster overtake the Hitlerites in Russia at the same time a major invasion was launched in the west, it would represent the worst situation that even the most gloomy Nazi could envisage.

The Germans are jittery in all possible invasion zones, from the the Balkans clear around to Norway. The fact is that while they know where invasions might be staged, there's no way of telling just where the Allies intend to deliver their major blows and where the feints will come.

Thus the Hitlerites are forced to stand on the alert everywhere, and hope against hope that they have their forces distributed to the right spots. If they guess correctly, the Allied task will be multiplied; if they're wrong, the difficulties of invasion will be lessened. This matching military wits is a matter of life or death for thousands of soldiers who soon are to undertake this great adventure into the unknown.

The Germans, fishing anxiously for information, say the Allies have mapped out a five-week bombing program to pave the way for the invasion of western Europe. This would set the date about the middle of February. Well, if the Nazis come as close as that to the zero hour, they will be lucky. Anyway, Hitler is taking no chances but is rushing preparations for defence.

Nancy De Marigny To Sell Effects

Miami, Fla., Jan. 10 — (AP) — Nancy Oakes De Marigny, returning to Nassau to settle her personal affairs, said last night that she has little hope of a new investigation which might solve the murder of her father, Sir Harry Oakes, who made his fortune in Canada's gold mining country.

"I would turn heaven and earth if it were possible, but I am helpless without the cooperation of the Bahamian government," she stated.

Mr. and Mrs. De Marigny now live in Havana, Cuba.

Mrs. De Marigny said colonial authorities in the Bahamas had refused to grant her permission to take out of the country any of the money owned in her own right or willed to her by her father. Sir Harry's will directed that she be paid the equivalent of $1,000 in United States money monthly.

At Nassau, she plans to auction her household furnishings, some of them exotic objects of art gathered on a trip to the Far East with her father in 1939.

CHAPTER 16

His eyes fell to Blair's hand, resting on Tennant's forehead. In the years of his absence they had grown closer to each other, and apart from him. . . . Better not to have come back.

Blair had awakened, and Colin poured her a cup of coffee. She was leaning over Tennant, and now she raised her face. "He's coming to!" she cried, and Colin then was convinced that. . . .Nate was all that mattered.

Tennant had opened his eyes. Quickly consciousness flowed back; the great recuperative power of the man asserted itself, and in half an hour he was sitting up in the bunk. Once his hand rose gingerly to his swollen jaw, and he looked at Colin with a rueful smile. "I still think I can lick you", he said.

Colin sat down beside him. "Nate", he began, "I'm not going to be here very long. But you are, and so are Blair and Selkirk— and maybe Irina Meredith. I'd like to think that when I'm gone nobody is going to suffer because of any whispered lies. You said something the night of the dance that wasn't true. And I know who told you that story—Dove".

Tennant gave an almost imperceptible nod, and Rae went on.

"Well, pretty soon you'll find out a few things as far as Dove's concerned, and then you can judge what this story is worth. In the meantime, here's something to think about: it was Dove who dared you to bring in more trappers; it was Dove who stired up his Crees to fight you, and it was Dove's man Olsen who tried to start trouble between you and me by jumping on Alec".

Tennant looked at Blair. "What do you think?" he asked.

"I think Colin's right".

Nate did not speak again but sat in his bunk with brooding eyes until a half hour later Alec arrived and, at Blair's insistence, Tennant reluctantly consented to be taken to Dr. Benedict.

Carefully Blair bundled him in the cariole, then stood watching until he disappeared down the trail.

"Don't be worried about him". Colin closed the door. "Nate's indestructible". He walked to the window and for a time looked out. "I've been thinking about Dove. If he went hunting for me along the Upper Nelson, he can't get back to Learmonth until noon today. But before Col. Dowling comes up tomorrow, you and I have a job to do: Blair, I want you to fly me up to the bay".

"Today?" Her own eyes opened wide.

"Today. If anything is happening up there, we've got to know it before Col. Dowling leaves Winnipeg. What we find there may change all his plans". Then as an afterthought he asked, "Can I carry two dogs and a light toboggan in your plane?"

"Of course. At noon I'll fly over here and pick you up. That will make it look like my regular mail flight". Her eyes were brighter with the promise of action. "Colin" —she drew a deep breath—"what are we going to find up there?"

"Maybe the end of a long trail".

Yet Colin felt no elation.

Blair began washing the breakfast dishes, and Colin dried them while the silence lengthened.

At last she looked up. "You said you were going away".

"Just as soon as I'm through her".

Silence again. Then, "Why are you going?"

"I'm going because —" He stopped; suddenly he laughed. "This homecoming hasn't been exactly a success, has it, Blair? I brought trouble to Rod, fought with Nate, and broke off with the Bay Company. I've lost everything but your friendship; and if Nate and I tangle again, I'm faced with the loss of that. You already blame me for the fight".

"But you did go to his cabin".

"My dogs took me there in the storm".

Blair touched his arm. "I'm sorry".

"I'm the one who's sorry. The last thing in the world I ever want to do is hurt you".

"But you haven't."

"You know I have. Nate and I always brought you more pain than happiness, and neither of us is going to change. Even if you marry him—"

Colin broke off and, picking up a cup, began drying it.

"It's strange" — Blair's voice was muted—"strange to think of never seeing you again. It takes all the fun out of things."

He saw her looking at him curiously—the cup lay crushed in his hands.

"You're just too strong." Smiling, she stooped to help him pick the fragments from the floor. Her dark head brushed his cheek, and the faint fragrance of her hair rose up to him. Memories long buried rose with it .. His hands opened, and the pieces of china fell to the floor.

"Blair!" It was a cry, compact of yearning and lifelong hunger, surging from depths so powerfully unleashed that the little cabin vibrated to the sound. And as she raised her face, he caught her to him, lifted her, and held her motionless.

"Please! Colin!" Again the pressure of hands seeking futilely to hold him off. "Let me go."

Head thrown back, she looked up at him. He felt her eyes searching his, and in that second knew that she and she alone had ever mattered. He knew too why he and Tennant must always be at war; both wanted her.

"I love you," Colin whispered. "I've never loved anyone else. I never will."

Blair's arms moved upward over his shoulders, and now her head fell back. She gave him her lips ..

At last Blair moved a step back, and looked toward the fire. "Better take the kettle off," she faltered, "before it all boils over." As if the last remnant of strength had gone from her, she sank into a chair and covered her face with her hands. Instantly he was kneeling beside her. There were tears in her eyes, and her lips were tremulous when at last she rose with "I'd better go."

But at the cabin door Blair held out her arms, saying, "Kiss me once more," and she stood on tiptoe to reach his lips.

"At noon, I'll be back," she whispered, and held up a warning finger. "But if you, Colin, ever—"

"I know—if I ever call you little sister again, you'll murder me."

Just before noon that day, in a corner of the big room at the inn, Irina Meredith and Jonathan Dove were talking. The little man showed visible signs of strain.

Dove was saying: "Rae couldn't have been on the Upper Nelson; his traps hadn't been visited for days." He seemed to deliberate; then abruptly he asked, "What does Colonel Dowling want with him?"

"The radiogram didn't say."

"Did you see the message yourself?"

"Rodney let me read it. It said that a Colonel Dowling was flying up to see Colin tomorrow and that it was urgent."

Dove's fingers moved. "I can imagine it might be. This Dowling is head of the military intelligence." He leaned forward until his eyes were very close to hers. "Irina, I don't want Rae and Dowling to meet."

Impassive, she watched him until once more he spoke. "I am leaving now to look for Rae again —this time along his lower trap line. I will not be back until tomorrow. You wait for him here. If he doesn't come to Learmonth by tomorrow morning, go to his cabin." Dove's eyes fluttered. "You know the way."

Irina ignored the thrust. "What do you want me to do when I find him?"

From his pocket, Dove pulled a small black cardboard box. "What if Colin Rae is not well enough to see Colonel Dowling tomorrow?"

The girl's eyes burned more brightly. "Poison?"

"Nothing so obvious. An opiate; but for a time he will lose all interest in officers of the British Intelligence, and at the hospital Benedict will say he cannot see anyone for two days. That is all I need."

Dove raised his head, and a note of savage exultation rang in his voice. "Twelve years I have worked and waited. Long I have listened to these blustering Canadians and loud-mouthed Americans denouncing my Party and my Fatherland; and I have smiled and made ready for an hour I knew would come. That hour is almost here."

He reached forward. "This is your chance to be of supreme help to the Party. Succeed, and you can ask much. But failure is not permitted."

Dove dropped the black box in her lap, and she turned it in her fingers. "You swear this is not poison?"

"Irina!" The kindly eyes were reproachful. "Between us there should be trust." After a pause, the Nazi asked, "When are you going to marry Selkirk?"

Rebellion gathered in Irina's eyes. "We have been through all that before."

"Well, you can't stay here much longer, putting him off day after day with no good reason. You will be still more valuable as his wife. You are so obstinate, Irina. Are you in love with someone else—with Colin Rae?"

"No."

"Then why not marry Selkirk? He may not be young, but neither is he repulsive."

Deliberately she turned on him, her green eyes cold as sea water. "I could marry him if he were . . . as repulsive to me as you!"

"Listen, Irina!" The smile had left his lips. "Yesterday you received a radio cable saying your father was in Lisbon. Does this account for your defiance? I could have kept him from getting beyond my reach, but I did not. It was not necessary. For you, my dear, are not beyond my reach."

Dove rose. "In the United States and Canada, today—at this very hour—hundreds like you are working for the Fatherland. Remember. Irina, mein Schatz, that life is very sweet."

He left the room, and with wide unblinking eyes, she sat looking at the black box in her lap.

Colin was waiting at the lake shore when Blair landed her plane Quickly he stowed a light toboggan behind the seat, and, lifting two of his dogs inside, seated himself beside her with a cheery "Let's go."

Blair opened the throttle. He directed her flight over frozen lakes and swamp. For two hours they bore northward, and at last he folded his map. "We're close enough to that inlet now. Better land."

She circled, examining the surface of the ice; then, cutting the motor, glided in behind a low projecting headland.

There Colin harnessed his dogs and swung a pair of field glasses over his shoulder; then he looked at his watch. "In three hours at the most I should be back. If I'm not, don't wait. No matter how much you want to, don't wait. Go back and get Colonel Dowling." He kissed her and, calling to his dogs, was gone.

For Blair those hours were endless. The winter sun sank lower, while the plane's long shadow crept farther and farther out across the ice .. but at the end of two hours she gave a gasp of relief—Colin's tall, familiar form was riding the toboggan toward her. But she had never seen his face so sternly set, and when he spoke his voice was tight and strange.

"Let's get out of here!" With racing fingers, he stripped the harness from the dogs. "Take off straight south and keep low. I'll tell you all about it when we're in the air."

And not until they had put miles behind them did Colin let Blair gain altitude. "We were closer to them than I thought." His straining eyes cast a last look behind. "If they'd ever heard us—"

"You mean—"

"Bombers!" His voice was still tense and strange. "Two four-motor bombers, and men working on them. They were testing the motors—that means there's not much time to spare."

Colin saw her unbelieving eyes. "I know. It's like a nightmare. German bombing planes within five hundred miles of Winnipeg. In six hours they could be over New York!"

He looked out at the setting sun. "We can't make Winnipeg tonight, but I've got to get word to Colonel Dowling to come direct to Trappers Lake." He drummed with his fingers on the window, then asked, "Can you drop me at Moose Lake?"

Blair shook her head. "It's too tight a squeeze with this wind."

"Then land me at the cabin. I'll mush over to Moose Lake and radio Winnipeg from the company post. Colonel Dowling's got to know about this air base before the night is out."

Her eyes flinched. "Colin, don't go to your cabin until the Colonel gets here. You're most dangerous to Dove now—and I think Dove knows it."

He raised her mittened hand to his lips. "I promise. I'll keep out of sight until the Colonel gets here. Tonight I'll sleep at Moose Lake, and some time tomorrow I'll be back at the cabin with Selkirk, waiting for Dowling."

"But Dove may look for you at your cabin."

"I hope he does. I'm going to produce Jonathan Dove if I have to bring him in on a toboggan."

Blair landed at the school just before dusk, every nerve in her body crying out for rest. Crossing the clearing, she went directly to her father's office in the Hall. In the half darkness of the room she caught the smell of cigarette smoke; then suddenly she gave a quick gasp of surprise—a dim figure was seated in the dusk, watching her.

Hurriedly Blair switched on the light—Irina Meredith sat looking up at her from her father's chair. Beneath the light, Blair saw that Irina's face was white and drawn. With an effort she smiled. "Too bad you had to sit here in the dark. Were you looking for Father?"

"For me the dark is better." Irina laid down her cigarette. "No. I was waiting for you. I need your help. I recalled that you were the first woman I saw when I came here, and you may be the last I shall see when I go."

"You're going away?"

"With your help, yes. I want you to fly me out of here. Anywhere. The farther the better—the farthest place won't be very safe."

Blair searched the haunted face. "I don't quite understand."

"Will you if I tell you this — I'm a German agent."

"A spy!"

"You could call me that."

Incredulously Blair burst out, "And you are to marry Rodney Selkirk!"

"Don't judge." Irina raised one small hand. "You love your father very much. I love mine. What I've done, I did to save his life — just as you would."

The tired face turned toward the window, and the voice went on. "Last summer, when Rod came to New York, I introduced him to a German radio engineer — an old friend of father's. He saw at once that Rodney was in love with me —it wasn't hard to see—and when he heard that Rod was in charge of the company's work for the Hudson Bay territory, he was very friendly. He had us to dinner, put Rod up at his club, took us to shows. He won Rodney's sympathy by telling how he had been hounded out of Germany when the Nazis came to power."

Irina lighted another cigarette. "After Rod went back, this man came to me and told me openly he was a member of the German Gestapo, working with the American fifth column. He reminded that my father was in Austria and showed me a letter saying that father was under surveillance for helping three friends, wanted by the Nazis, escape into Switzerland Then he gave me a choice: I was to go to Canada, marry Rod Selkirk, and carry out the orders of a man he would later designate. If I refused, my father would die an accidental death and his ashes be shipped to me with a note of deep regret from the Reich Government.

"I tried to stall, but I learned then what pressure could really be. They wore me down, knowing there was no one I dared go to without endangering my father's life. Day and night they were at me; a phone call, an unsigned letter, a message lying on my bed, a word from some absolute stranger on the street. Then at last he brought me the ultimatum; either I say yes at once or my father dies.

"I said yes." Irina raised her head. "Wouldn't you? For your own father?"

Blair's hand touched Dr. Benedict's frayed coat hanging beside her. "Yes," she half-whispered. "Go on."

"I came here. But before I left New York I did one thing. I sold every jewel I owned and gave the money to any official of father's company who was going to Europe. I begged him to find my father and get him to bribe his way out of Nazi territory. Yesterday I learned father was in Lisbon."

Irina stopped, and Blair whispered, "But you—what will you do now?"

"That depends on you. Get me out of here. I've been killing Rodney Selkirk's very soul, and your Colin is in danger — real danger. Warn him, and then fly me away from here, where I can lose myself in some city. Even then" — the voice caught—"even then the Gestapo may find me."

For a second the swift contagion of fear reached out to Blair. Her first impulse was to follow Colin to Moose Lake—but it wasn't there that danger lay. It was here in Learmonth. For tonight at least, Colin would be safe enough.

She turned to Irina. "Beat Colin's cabin tomorrow by early afternoon. I don't know when he'll be back, but wait for him." She flung both arms about Irina and kissed her. "You may not have to fly away, but if you do, I'll take you anywhere you want to go." At the door, Blair asked the question she dreaded most to have answered, "Is my father—"

Irina shook her head. "Your father has no idea of the truth. I swear to that! Good-by until tomorrow."

In a darkened room above them a little man with gold-rimmed glasses slowly closed a panel in the floor, while his fingers made curious motions in the empty air. "Until tomorrow," Dove murmured.

Von Mannstein Probably Relieved Of His Command

Stockholm, Jan. 10 (AP)—The Swedish newspaper Aftontidningen quoted a private informant today as saying Field Marshal Fritz Von Mannstein has been seen on Jan. 2 in civilian clothing in Vienna, an inndication he no longer is in command of German forces on the southern front in Russia.

In the last week there have been a number of rumors that Von Mannstein had been relieved of his post after a dispute with Hitler, but confirmation so far has been impossible.

Aftontidningen said it was rumored that Field Marshal Karl Von Runstedt, heretofore in command of the invasion coast of France, would be Von Mannstein's successor. Marshal Erwin Rommel has been taking an increasingly prominent role in German preparations to counter an Allied invasion from the west.

It was recalled here that Field Marshal Walther Von Brauchitsch, former German commander-in-chief of the army, and Marshal Wilhelm Ritter Von Leeb, a former German commander in the east, first turned up in Vienna after their dismissals where it was presumed their appearance would attract less attention.

Spooks Disappoint Crowds of Curious At Eastern Passage

Eastern Passage, N.S., Jan. 10 — (CP) — Crowds of superstitious or just plain curious people converged on the Louis Hilchie home here over the weekend — hoping for a glimpse of the mysterious and spooky happenings the family says have been going on ever since Christmas Eve — until finally police had to be called to clear them away from the weather-beaten 1½-storey dwelling.

Saturday night nearly 75 people crowded their way into the little house to see some ghostly manifestations. But the fickle spirits, awed perhaps by the gaping, jostling crowd, refused to do their stuff.

Last night a regular patrol was established about the house by Royal Canadian Mounted Police to keep away the curious and any possible pranksters.

The whole weird affair started Christmas Eve, the Hilchies say, when three loud knocks resounded through the house from no apparent source.

Since then, tables have tipped over by themselves, a washing machine and chairs slid eerily across the floor, a bowl of soup sailed through the air and spilled in the lap of one of the children, kettles of boiling water, alarm clocks and other objects fell from their places, a frying pan fell from a shelf, an egg followed and nearly smashed in the pan.

The mother and her two older children went to visit her mother near Kentville, N.S., but the 'spirits' followed them, Mrs. Hilchie said.

The oldest girl, Rita, 20, has been suffering from weak turns and fainting spells for several years as the result of a fall, and since the start of the phenomena she became much worse. She was removed to hospital in Halifax and may have to undergo a brain operation, doctors report.

Congress Members Cannot Serve In Armed Services

Washington, Jan. 10 (AP)—President Roosevelt instructed the Secretaries of War and Navy today that members of Congress "may not serve in the active components of the armed services."

Mr. Roosevelt said in a formal statement that Attorney-General Francis Biddle had advised him that the constitution forbids simultaneous service in the armed forces and in Congress.

Presidential Secretary Stephen Early said that in issuing his instructions to Secretary of War Henry Stimson and Secretary of the Navy Frank Knox, the President was closing out a matter that had been dragging along for some time. A number of members of Congress have gone into uniform. although some have given up their seats to do so.

No Objection in Canada

Ottawa, Jan. 10 (CP)—No objection has yet been raised to members of parliament in Canada joining the armed forces.

Some 22 members of the House of Commons are now in uniform, a considerable number of them overseas. Until recently a member of the Senate was in the army and a good number of members of provincial legislatures are in the forces.

When service requirements permit they may obtain leave without pay to attend to their parliamentary duties but otherwise they are granted no special consideration as compared with other members of the forces.

Severe Shortage Of Wooden Egg Cases

Ottawa, Jan. 10 — (CP) — The Agriculture Department said today a severe shortage of wooden egg cases threatens to handicap movement of eggs into the domestic trade and to egg-drying plants where egg powder is made for the United Kingdom.

The department said the shortage is due to "some neglect in the return of egg cases to wholesalers, some careless handling, a shortage of lumber and other incidental causes." An appeal was made to all persons handling egg cases to return them promptly to shippers and avoid damaging them.

SAYS 60 MILLION MORE COULD LIVE IN DOMINION

Editor of Le Jour Believes Immigration is "Our Salvation" Against Aggression

OUTSIDE PRESSURE

Toronto, Jan. 10—(CP)—Canada, in the end, will be conquered either by immigration or by invasion, Jean Charles Harvey, editor of the Montreal French language weekly Le Jour, said here today in an address to the Canadian club.

"Canada," Mr. Harvey asserted, "now is one of the few countries where another 60 million people might live comfortably, and we must either be prepared to open our doors or to keep constantly under arms sufficient forces to withstand all aggression, armies, incidentally, which we cannot raise in sufficient number today, owing to the numerical weakness of our population."

Saying that "immigration is our salvation," he added:-

"By the means we can guarantee ourselves thirty years at least of immediate prosperity; we can avoid all the social and political crises and the revolutionary movements which we hear rumbling around us, for we can, in this way, set ourselves on a path of development, where private enterprise can have a free chance, and where democratic institutions, which can not be separated from gfreedom of enterprise, will once again show their efficiency and superiority.

"The arrival of a thousand immigrants in this country means a thousand more houses to build; many thousands more meals each day; thousands more shoes, suits, shirts and everything else; thousands more pay envelopes to be spent, and, in short, a general increase in the industrial and commercial activity of the nation."

Hog Marketing 14.6 P. C. Up In 1943 Over 1942

Market in Britain for All Good-Quality Hogs, Says Gardiner

Ottawa, Jan. 10 —(CP)— Agriculture Minister Gardiner said today that 1943 hog marketings were 14.6 per cent higher than in 1942, the previous peak year, and cited reasons why farmers should seek to maintain the highest possible production:—

1. There is a market in Britain for all good-quality hogs Canada can produce;
2. Continued high production not only would help Britain maintain her four-ounce weekly bacon ration but would help Canadian farmers, by demonstrating Britain could depend on them for supplies in peace or war;
3. It would inspire confidence that a long-time contract to supply the British market with a greater amount than the minimum of 900,000,000 pounds for two years, now promised, can be fulfilled;
4. The future of the hog-producing industry could be made secure if highest production were maintained by farmers in 1944.

Mr. Gardiner said that last year Canadian farmers marketed through inspected packing plants 11 hogs for every five they sold before the war.

The 1943 marketings totalled 7,147,546, representing a gain of 120 per cent over 1938.

The Minister said most of the increased production had been in the western provinces, where hog marketings last year were more than 3½ times 1938.

The increased production had been accomplished in spite of a farm labor shortage resulting from the wartime movement of about 500,000 men and women from farms to the armed forces and industry.

Stockholm View Bulgaria Prepares To Attack Turkey

New York, Jan. 10. (AP)— The Stockholm newspaper Social Demokraten said in an article reported to the United States office of War Information today that there are "signs that Bulgaria is preparing an attack on Turkey, which is not expected to be able to remain neutral until the end of the winter".

"During the last week, military patrols searched people on the streets of Sofia", the article said. "The radio station, war ministry and government palace have special guards with machine-guns ready for an attack.

"In any case, Bulgaria gives the impression of a country preparing itself for war. Several names are discussed in connection with a government change. As presidents are named Tetsjankov, leader of the Bulgarian Fascist Party, Peter Gabrovski, a former interior minister, and Slaveki Vasiljev, president of the Reserve Officers' Association".

IMPROVE QUALITY OF CHOCOLATE BARS

Because their formulae did not conform with the requirements of the Administrator of Confectionery, some manufacturers have been ordered to discontinue the manufacture of certain types of chocolate bars which were of inferior quality and the cause of numerous complaints being received from consumers. It is believed that, as a result of an order issued not long ago by the Prices Board the quality of various chocolate and confectionery bars will be visibly improved. Their weight, moreover, must conform to that part of the order regulating the production of these bars.

OTHER TINNED FISH

It is emphasized by the Prices Board that while tinned salmon will join the list of rationed foods on January 17, after which it may be obtained by consumers only in exchange for meat coupons at the rate of one coupon for every one-quarter of a pound, other tinned fishes like pilchards, tuna fish, herrings and sardines are not to be on the ration.

Two Charges Read At Opening Of Court-Martial

Fredericton, N.B., Jan. 10 — (CP) —Two charges, one of them alternative, were read today at the opening of a general court-martial case against Capt. Ner Littner of Toronto, attached to No. 7 Military District Depot medical staff here, who pleaded not guilty.

The first charge is that he negligently failed to assure proper medical attention was given to Pte. Charles Fraser Smith, "the omission of such attention endangering the life" of the soldier.

The second and alternative charge also alleges failure to assure proper medical attention, but makes no reference to "the omission of such attention endangering the life of the said Private Charles Fraser Smith."

Capt. Littner is the second Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps officer to be tried by general court-martial since the proceedings opened last Thursday. On Saturday, Capt. G. G. Alleyn of Quebec, was acquitted on a charge of failing to have a further examination made of Smith after the latter stated he was suffering from diabetes. The 41-year-old resident of Woodside, Sunbury county, N.B., called up for military service, died a few days after he was admitted into the army last September.

The case of Lt.-Col. H. E. Baird, Chipman, N.B., Officer Commanding Fredericton military hospital, where Smith's death occurred, will be tried after Capt. Littner's hearing.

Glider Trip

By Dr. Basil Walden

(B.B.C. Press Service)

Twelve aeroplanes stood on an airfield—six bombers and six gliders. Each glider was attached to a bomber by a rope about three hundred feet long. I clambered aboard the glider I was to fly in and found, much to my surprise, that it was occupied by a large number of men, soldiers of an airborne division. The sergeant in charge of the airborne troops helped me to put on a parachute harness, then the parachute, and finally, the strap to hold me in my seat. I sat down just by the open door of the cockpit so as to have a good view of the glider. Leaning forward I could hear the radio telephone wheezing and crackling away orders, "Red leader calling Red 2, are you ready?" We were. From the bombers in front of us came the noise of accelerating engines.

The towing ropes tightened, the glider lurched forward, leaped and bounded, and suddenly, we were airborne. But though we were in the air our bomber was still taxiing, and then it too was airborne. We rose steeply, flying steadily, the bomber twenty feet below. Now that we were in flight I unstrapped myself and left my seat to look through one of the port holes, and there they were, the other 'planes in beautiful formation, the bombers keeping their course, their wings sometimes almost touching, with their gliders straining at the leash behind them. Then I went back and crouched in the cockpit behind the two pilots, a warrant officer instructor and an army sergeant. We were now back over our airfield and I could see other gliders way down below on the ground, looking strangely unreal, like decoy pigeons at the edge of a field.

• •

The radio telephone started again. The flight commander was ordering, "prepare to release," then "now." The bombers, or "tugs" as they are called, zoomed away almost vertically, and we were free. For a moment the glider shuddered, then, as if finding its wings it steadied itself—we were gliding, silently, smoothly, with no sound save the gentle swish of air. We were back over the country, over the yellow-green and golden pattern of fields and meadows, over tiny villages, cattle, dark green beech woods, their tips tinged red with autumn colour, the wet roofs of an old mansion glisten in the sun, and then the airfield again.

Now there is no nonsense about landing a glider, no opening the throttle again, circling the airfield and having another go. You either land your glider or else, well—in the language of the R.A.F. — "you've had it." But actually, accidents are very rare occurrences indeed.

• •

The moment had now come, for us to be released from our bomber and the flight commander of the gliders gave the order to land. The next instant all six gliders dipped in unison, and then at an alarmingly steep angle we rushed towards the ground. At the last moment (or so it seemed to me at any rate) we flattened out, landed, and came to a standstill, in perfect formation.

The pilots of these huge gliders are volunteers from airborne divisions, who have undergone a short training course in elementary flying. They then learn to pilot the light glider the "Hotspur" and this is followed by instruction in the flying of the big glider the "Horsa." On completing the course the Army pupil is awarded the wings of the Glider Pilot regiment. Of course military gliders, unlike the gliders used in peacetime, have no "soaring" properties whatever, that is, they cannot take advantage of the upward currents in the atmosphere.

• •

These pilots have to undergo a very thorough training which consists of taking-off and landing at night, singly and in formation, in all kinds of weather conditions. They must also know exactly how to load the glider, as it is most important that the distribution of the load be such that its centre of gravity be over a certain point in the glider. In addition they must be able to service and repair the glider and decide when it is airworthy or not. Navigation and signalling are also part of the training.

The ground organization of a glider station is very intricate on account of the fact that gliders cannot move on the ground of their own accord. Thus, tractors are required to haul them about the airfield, and towing aircraft, usually Whitleys, must be held in constant readiness to take them into the air. Towing ropes which have been dropped must also be collected. I watched night flying practice and was astonished at the ease with which young Army pilots land these immense craft within a few feet of a pre-determined spot.

• •

The recent towed flight of a fully loaded glider across the Atlantic has opened great possibilities, but at the moment a picture of glider trains being towed like aerial railway trucks across the seas and continents is rather premature.

None the less, when one considers that gliders have crossed the Alps, remained in the air for over fifty hours, flown a direct distance of 465 miles, and soared to a height of 22,560 feet, one cannot doubt that they have a great and very interesting future.

You can't go 'ALL-OUT' If you feel 'ALL-IN'

These days most people are working harder, worrying more, sleeping less. This strain on body and brain makes physical fitness easier to lose—harder to regain. Today's tense living lowers resistance—increases body and mental fatigue. Overwork; hasty meals; irregular hours; worry—any of these may upset proper kidney action.

When kidneys get out of order, excess acids and poisons remain in the system. Then backache, headache, rheumatic pain, disturbed rest or that "tired-all-the-time" feeling may soon follow. To help keep your kidneys in good order—to help guard against physical let-down—use Dodd's Kidney Pills, for over half a century a favourite remedy for faulty kidneys. Ask for Dodd's Kidney Pills at any drug counter. Look for the blue box with the red band. 126

Premier Orders Roads Cleared Of Refugees

Istanbul, Jan. 10 (AP) — Premier Ion Antonescu of Rumania was reported today to have ordered the Governor of Bessarabia to clear refugees from all roads and railways leading into the interior of Rumania in order to facilitate the movement of troops.

Antonescu was said to have acted after receiving a sharp complaint from the German minister, Baron Manfred Von Killinger, that refugees fleeing from the threat of the Russian advance toward the Rumanian border were clogging communication lines. Von Killinger was reported to have threatened severe measures.

The Budapest correspondent of the Turkish newspaper Aksam said many of the Bessarabian refugees were selling their farms for trifling sums in the belief they would never be able to keep them.

The same source said that leaders of the Rumanian opposition parties had sent a message to King Michael opposing the war.

NO SOURCE FOR INFORMATION

New York, Jan. 10 (AP)—The Berlin radio, quoting what purported to be a Rome dispatch, said yesterday that King Victor Emmanuel had conferred on Joseph Stalin the Order of the Annunziata, which makes him a "cousin of the King." The broadcast gave no source for information of the award, highest distinction conferred by the Italian monarchy.

Looking Ahead in Ottawa

(By The Ottawa Staff of The Canadian Press)

Ottawa, Jan. 10.—(CP)—Foreign exchange note: Banking circles consider it most likely the present exchange rate with the United States and Britain will be continued at its present level for some time.

They contend the Canadian dollar now is pegged at the right spot to do the greatest good to the greatest number—halfway between the American dollar and British pound. In Canadian money the U.S. dollar is worth $1.10, the pound $4.43.

For instance, they say the Canadian producer who sells in the United States and gets paid in American funds is helped by the existing discount; and the Canadian consumer isn't hurt as much as would be the case in normal times because subsidies from the federal treasury and wartime duty relaxations help keep the price of essential imported goods under the price ceiling.

There is virtually no complaint from either side of the border at present over the exchange rates, officials said.

House business: Taxation concessions to Aluminum Co. of Canada and the prices charged for aluminum—which goes almost entirely for war purposes—are expected to come under further review at the new session.

Extensive hearings on aluminum production costs and power developments undertaken in Quebec by the Aluminum Company were held last autumn by a war expenditures sub-committee, after M. J. Coldwell, C.C.F. leader, criticized aluminum prices in the Commons.

While the sub-committee report, to be presented at the House this month, probably will endorse government arrangements to obtain maximum aluminum output, there is little expectation Mr. Coldwell and his C.C.F. colleagues will be satisfied to let the matter rest and further House discussion is anticipated.

Food conservation: the government is expected to announce soon a program of public education in saving foodstuffs.

Canada—One of the largest food exporters — is trying to meet growing demand of the armed forces, the civilian population and other United Nations. She will later help feed nations freed in the impending invasion of Europe.

No great increase in 1944 food production can be expected because of the manpower situation. To help meet the demand Canadians will be asked to cut waste to a minimum.

Vegetable outlook: During the past two years interest in new Canadian crops has centred largely on oil-bearing plants like sunflowers and rapeseed. But agricultural authorities said today the big enthusiasm in 1944 will be for dried peas and beans.

At the recent Dominion-Provincial agriculture conference, federal advisers laid emphasis on the need for enlarged output of these products, valuable sources of protein. When meats are scarce peas and beans become more important in the diet.

In setting objectives the conference asked for 93,900 acres of dried beans this year — an increase of 10 per cent — but it is no secret federal authorities would like to see a 50-per-cent boost or more. The conference decided to ask a 15-per-cent increase in dried peas to 119,845 acres, but an increase of up to 100 per cent will be welcome.

Model city: Drafting plans to turn swords into plowshares after the war, members of the government-sponsored war assets allocation committee are pawing over many problems these days.

Many suggestions have been offered. For instance, a plan has been advanced that semi-permanent military camps like the officer's training centre at Brockville, Ont., might be changed into "model cities" as an answer , to post-war housing problems.

Brockville's camp has paved streets, a hospital, fire station and community halls. It has a central-heating plant and many other modern utilities. For study purposes the residential blocks have been divided into rooms and the various buildings comfortably spaced.

The renovating process, it is suggested, would not be great. Some officials think this would be an economical way of disposing of such centres. They say the resale value of timber and other materials from torn-down barracks of this type would be little.

York, England,, Jan. 10 (CP) — L. S. Amery, Secretary of State for India, said in a speech here last night that one of the chief reasons for Indian rejection of Britain's offer of Dominion status after the war, made by Sir Stafford Cripps, was a belief that the offer came because of Britain's consciousness of her weakness, and that Britain would not honor her obligation when victory became assured.

Taxi Operators Dissatisfied With Low City Rates

A meeting will be held in the very near future by the taxi operators of the city to discuss among themselves the existing conditions and problems of operating under war-time restrictions. The major topic of the meeting is expected to concern the 25c rate for city calls. It was explained by one of the operators that the low rate is the reason for the controversy and that it is practically impossible to operate at a profit unless more attention is given to longer distance runs. It was pointed out that the average daily consumption of gasoline is four-and-half gallons with a city mileage of ten miles per gallon With this condition, a call coming from a residence on the West Hill with the hospital, or another residence on the East Hill as the destination, a distance of approximately four miles is covered for the sum of 25c. Two and a half such calls may be made with the amount of gasoline consumed with a revenue of approximately sixty cents and an operating expense of approximately forty cents. The time involved to make these trips is about twenty-five minutes. Ten calls such as these are all that can be made during a day.

As against this there are the out of town calls to the Air Stations at Trenton and Mountain View which average $2.50. The vehicle will operate at a much greater mileage per gallon on these calls and, when the trips are made during the day, or early evening, often times the taxi carries a return load, making the single journey as valuable as ten city calls. The problem facing the city taxi operators is a delicate one. They have no wish to neglect the civilian public of Belleville but they realize that existing conditions will not permit them to conduct a profitable business unless some other solution can be found to favor the city people.

Appoint L. Finkle S.S. Superintendent Marsh Hill United Church

The annual congregational meeting of Marsh Hill United Church was held in the home of Mrs. Frank Finkle on Thursday, January 6. In spite of very icy roads there was a good attendance. Mr. Berson Mitts resigned as Sunday school superintendent after twenty-two years in that office. He nominated as his successor, Mr. Leslie Finkle, a young man who has grown up through the Sunday school. This was unanimously endorsed. Mr. Clayton Marisette was continued as assistant. The income was $90 with a balance of $15.

The W.M.S. with Mrs. E. B. Finkle continued as president, has 18 members and sent $100 to the branch treasurer.

The church treasurer, Mr. E. B. Finkle, reported an income of $875 with all accounts paid and a balance on hand of $204.

No change was made in the officers of the church. Miss Dorothy Mitts was re-elected as organist. A committee was appointed to look into the matter of church renovation. Two young men of the congregation have just recently enlisted, Don Bleecker and Cyril Hermon which has been fittingly recognized and the secretary was asked to write to all who have gone from this congregation on behalf of the church.

A vote of appreciation was passed and tendered to the minister, Rev. E. M. Cook, for his services and the hope expressed that the relationship would continue.

Mr. Leslie Finkle reported for the Missionary and Maintenance Fund which again showed an increase, the total being $114.

There are thirty-two families and seventy-five members. One aged and respected member, Mrs. Benjamin Horton, passed away during the year. Twelve young members were received.

RUSSIANS THREATEN ODESSA-WARSAW RAILWAY

12,000 Nazis Slain Near Kirovograd And Around Sarny

German Command Declares Soviets Launch New Attack North of Kerch

CAPTURE 116 TOWNS

By HENRY C. CASSIDY
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow, Jan. 11 — (AP) — Russian spearheads, steadily bringing war nearer to Rumania, drove toward the Odessa-Warsaw railway today, and advance scouts felt out the eastern bank of the southern Bug river after capturing a long stretch of land southeast of Zhmerinka, a junction on that main railway line.

To the rear, the 2nd Ukrainian Army of Gen. Ivan S. Konev fought within 15 miles of the Dnieper Bend rail town of Smela, after wiping out 8,000 Nazis encircled north of Kirovograd.

The German high command declared the Soviets had launched a new attack from their bridgehead north of Kerch in the Crimea, with fighting still continuing. There was no Soviet confirmation. Berlin also said fighting raged all day yesterday for possession of Sarny, rail city 35 miles within Poland.

The 1st Ukraine Army hourly increased the threat of severing the Odessa-Warsaw railway, a disaster for the Germans that would throw them back upon Rumania for supplies and use of railways and highways, and put the biggest burden yet upon that satellite nation.

The danger to the Germans in the Smela Gap also mounted steadily.

List 12,000 as Dead

Listing yesterday's advances a Russian communique said more than 12,000 Germans were slain during the day.

In addition to the 8,000 wiped out by Konev's forces, Vatutin's veterans accounted for 4,000 more as they drove toward Sarny. Advance units of the Red Army were reported five miles east of Sarny yesterday.

Berlin dispatches to Stockholm newspapers said the Germans had evacuated Sarny and that Vatutin's army is threatening to encircle Rovno, another rail junction 50 miles to the southwest.

Vatutin's left wing, operating about 70 miles to the west of Konev's army, captured Voronovitsa and Nemirov in a drive for Vinnitsa and the Warsaw-Odessa railway. A junction of Konev's and Vatutin's forces would isolate thousands of Germans already outflanked in the Smela-Konev sector of the Dnieper Bend. Konev's advance guards were within 15 miles of Smela, the communique reported.

Seven Miles of Bug River

Capture of Voronovitsa, 13 miles southeast of Vinnitsa, severed the Voronovitsa-Khristinovka rail line and put the Russians within seven miles of the Bug river, and 21 miles from the Odessa-Warsaw railway. The Bug forms the last natural Nazi defence line before the Dniester river.

Russia's guerilla forces were reported lending invaluable aid to the regular Red Army forces, the Soviet communique reported. They were marching with Vatutin in his thrust into Poland and were active on the Black Sea coast near Odessa, where they were wrecking German rail facilities.

The two armies captured 116 towns and villages in their westward sweeps yesterday, the war bulletin said, and one column was converging on Sheptovka (a rail junction which commands the gateway to the southern half of old Poland). Soviet spearheads were less than 20 miles distant on three sides of the junction the communique added.

Capture of Yarovatka, 80 miles southwest of Smela, by Vatutin's forces, severed the important Smela-Khristinovka railway also leading to the Odessa-Warsaw line, thus drawing the net tighter around those German armies caught between the two armies.

Chief Says Deer Skated on Ice

Rockaway Township, N.J., Jan. 11 (AP)—Dewey Pott, police chief of Boonton Township, had to pinch himself the other day when he saw a deer skating on the ice.

The animal glided gracefully across the ice, he said, swaying as if to the tune of a waltz, and it looked as if it were wearing old-fashioned grandfather skates which curled up at the ends.

Pott lassoed the deer and turned it over to the New Jersey state game farm at Rockport. Officials there described the animal as somewhat of a freak with hooves that grew out sideways almost six inches. They said the deer might have been sick during the summer and may not have walked for several weeks, thus allowing the hooves to grow so long.

Experimental Sub Launched in 1898 Brought to Surface

Denver, Jan. 11—AP)—An experimental submarine that sank when it was launched in a mountain lake 9,000 feet above sea level in 1898 near the historic mining town of fCentral City was located and brought to the surface yesterday, the Rocky Mountain News said today in a copyrighted article.

Fred De Mandel supervised salvage operations through the ice. The News said the submarine was anchored with chains until more equipment can be obtained. De Mandel, it was said, had spent weeks locating the undersea craft which had become almost legendary in the district.

Oscar Williams, sheriff of Gilpin County—"the little kingdom of Gilpin"—for more than 22 years, told the news of the launching one Sunday afternoon when he was a boy.

The boat, he said, was the brainchild of R. T. Owens, a Central City contractor.

Williams said the ship was constructed by two carpenters in secret. It was made of wood and sheathed with either lead or zinc. It was 20 feet long and 5½ feet wide.

Willis said Owens at first planned to enter the craft on its trial trip. His friends dissuaded him and finally the boat was ballasted with rock and slid into the water.

"I guess they got too much ballast in her," said Williams. "She sank with a splash and never came up."

Residents of Central City could not remember how Owens proposed to propel his ship. They said Owens left the district shortly after the ill-fated launching.

Warns of 'Dangerous Optimism' About Early and Easy Finish of War

Ottawa, Jan. 11—(CP)—The next few months of the war "will be the grimmest and bloodiest we have ever known," says Lord De La Warr, chairman of the Agricultural Research Council of the United Kingdom.

Addressing the annual dinner of the junior board of trade here last night, Lord De La Warr said persons who believe in an early and easy finish of the war are in for a "terrible shock."

There is a "dangerous optimism" regarding the early and easy finish of the war, he said.

"That optimism can be extremely wrong, and it is certainly extremely dangerous. There is a terrible shock coming to those who believe it. There is a great deal more fighting and heavier losses ahead than we've ever seen, and we'll need all the fortitude we can muster to bear the sacrifice."

He paid tribute to Canadian soldiers overseas and said he hoped that "you are as proud of them as we are fond of them."

"They have waited for action more than four weary years, yet they have never kicked over the traces. You can rest assured that they have been a real credit to Canada, just as they will be when the real fight begins, and as they have already proven in Sicily and Italy.

"I bring you a message of gratitude and affection from my country, not only for the numbers, but for the quality and fine type of boys you have sent overseas."

The "great comradeship of war" between Britain and Canada should not be wasted, he said. It was not blood ties, nor material and economic ties, which bound the two countries nor even the sense of security found in the commonwealth as a protector of ideals and freedom.

"It is because we know we are members of a family that has already given richly to civilization and will again, and that the commonwealth constitutes the only true and successful league of free nations that has ever existed."

Reds Affirm Intent To Keep Territory Taken From Poles

BERLIN STABBED BY MOSQUITOS WITHOUT LOSS

British Fighters Also Busy Over Europe, Intruder Patrols Being Carried Out

BOMB WEST REICH

London, Jan. 11 — (CP) — Allied heavy bombers, mediums and fighters swept across the English Channel today in a renewal of the daylight offensive against Europe a few hours after R.A.F. Mosquitos attacked Berlin and western Germany during darkness.

Berlin radio asserted that "strong formations of four-engined American bombers" attacked localities in central Germany around noon and claimed "heavy losses" were inflicted by Nazi defenders.

The Mosquitos attack last night was their ninth foray of the year and it was executed without loss. Save for Berlin, other night targets were not specified.

British fighters also were busy over the continent Monday night Jan. 10, on intruder patrol, the Air Ministry said, shooting down one German plane during these operations. One British plane failed to return.

Only light aerial activity was reported over the continent Monday, small formations of Typhoon and Mosquito bombers co-operating in attacks on the coastal area of Northern France. Two Allied planes were lost and one German craft was shot down.

Daylight Raids Continue.

Daylight raids continuing today were indicated in a Federal Communications Commission report that the Hiversum radio station had gone off the air this morning, and the German Bremen and Friesland radios had failed to go on the air as scheduled.

The consistent Mosquito raids by night have set off sirens in dozens of jittery German cities, and last night marked the third consecutive visit to the shattered Nazi capital.

A Paris radio broadcast declared that four United States four-engined bombers were downed in Northern France during attacks yesterday, but there was no U.S. Air Force announcement of any operations.

2 Traffic Deaths In Toronto Monday

Toronto, Jan. 11 (CP)—There were two traffic deaths in the Toronto area yesterday. Lee Chang, 50-year-old Chinese, died in hospital during the day from head injuries suffered when struck by a car early Sunday. Everette Beer of suburban York Township was arrested on a charge of dangerous driving in connection with the case.

Seven-year-old Donald Stroud died in hospital after being struck by a car. Police said the accident occurred after his nine-year-old cousin, Jean Briton, had warned him against suiding on the roadway near his home.

National Service Law Is Urged on Congress By President Roosevelt

Washington, Jan. 11 — (AP) — A five point legislative program, headed by enactment of a National Service Law, was recommended to Congress today by President Roosevelt.

He proposed a National Service Act for the duration to "prevent strikes" and, with some exceptions, to "make available for war production or for any other essential services every able-bodied adult in this nation."

These were his other points:

1. "A realistic tax law."
2. Continuation of the law permitting renegotiation of war contracts.
3. A "cost of food law."
4. Re-enactment of the economic stabilization act which expires next June 30.

In his annual message to Congress, which he was prevented by the grippe from delivering in person, Mr. Roosevelt dwelt largely on domestic problems, but he spoke also of the war and its progress.

His legislative program was proposed "in order to concentrate all our energies and resources on winning the war and to maintain a fair and stable economy at home."

His five measures, the President said, "form a just and equitable whole."

Must Have Total effort

The president said he was convinced a National Service Act was necessarq

"Although I am convinced," he said, "that we and our Allies can win without such a measure, I am certain that nothing less than total mobilization of manpower and capital resources will guarantee an earlier victory."

Supporting his arguments for a National Service Act, he said millions "are not in this war at all" and that the act would be a means by which every man and woman could make the fullest possible contribution to victory.

Mr. Roosevelt described "a realistic tax law" as one which would tax all unreasonable profits, both individual and corporate, and reduce the ultimate cost of the war.

The revenue bill now in Congress, which would yield only about a fifth of what the administration had sought, does not start to meet this test, he said.

CIANO EXECUTED, GERMAN AGENCY D.N.B. ANNOUNCES

Along Italian Border Are Heard Reports of Four Others Shot

13 TRIED IN ABSENCE

London, Jan. 11 — (CP) — Count Galezzo Ciano was shot to death today, the German agency D. N. B. announced, after his conviction on charges brought against him for voting to oust his father-in-law, Benito Mussolini, as Italian dictator.

At the Italian Frontier, Jan. 11—(AP)—An unconfirmed report said a Fascist firing squad at dawn today executed Count Ciano, former Italian foreign minister and son-in-law of Mussolini, and four other members of the Fascist Grand Council sentenced to death at Verona for high treason.

Eighteen members of the Fascist Grand Council were convicted because they voted to oust Mussolini last July 25. The only ones in custody were the Count, Marshal Emilio de Bono, Giovanni Marinelli, Carlo Pareschi and Luciano Gottardi. The others were tried and sentenced in absentia.

Frontier reports continued contradictory and confused.

One such advice asserted that Pope Pius XII asked clemency for the condemned men.

No Mention in Fascist Press.

The Fascist press and radio did not mention either the trials or the sentences. The only definite report received here about them was a brief German D.N.B. dispatch dated Milan.

Corriere del Ticino of Lugano said the trial in Castel Vecchio actually was a mockery held in secret and attended by only a few trusted followers of Mussolini. The newspaper said, it had been rumored that Mussolini was supposed to attend and accuse Ciano and De Bono.

It was learned definitely, however, that Mussolini was unable to leave his villa on Lake Garda where his health is steadily declining.

Another report said Ciano was shot while attempting to escape but this was generally discredited.

German Attempts To Break Yugoslav Partisan Lines Fail

London, Jan. 11 (CP)—Yugoslav Partisan troops are taking a heavy toll of German forces pressing a determined offensive in central and western Bosnia, a communique from the headquarters of Marshal Josip Broz (Tito) reported today.

Tito's war bulletin, which was broadcast by the Free Yugoslav radio and recorded by The Associated Press, said the Germans were attempting to break the Partisan lines from five different directions, so far without success. The Nazis were employing strong tank and motorized columns, in addition to their infantry detachments, in the drive to wipe out Tito's forces.

Nine American Missionaries Believed Dead

Buenos Aires, Jan. 11—(AP)—The great hinterland of the Amazon valley aparently has claimed the lives of nine American missionaries who entered the Bolivian jungle near the Brazilian border last November.

The missionaries, eight men and one woman, refresenting the new tribes mission, left the village of Robore, last outpost of civilization 300 miles east of Santa Cruz, Bolivia, in the direction of the Brizilian frontier and the unexplored Matto Grosso region further east.

They plunged into a region inhabited by wild Indian tribes who are completely untouched by civilization.

Disregarding the advice of Bolivian frontiersmen, the missionaries refused to carry arms, explaining they did not wish to antagonize the Indians.

Two days after they left Robore, three members of the party were reported to have returned to the village, where they notified the authorities that the missionaries were being followed by a tribe of hostile Indians. A detachment of soldiers was sent out on the trail of the party, but it faded out near a jungle landmark known as Sant Corazon, 80 miles from the Brazilian border, where traces of an Indian camp were found. It now is believed the missionaries died at the hands of these savages.

5TH ARMY PINCERS CLOSE IN ON NAZI CASSINO BASTION

One Arm Reaches Outskirts of Cervaro, Seventy Miles From Rome

TAKE MOUNT PEDRO

By WES GALLAGHER
Associated Press War Correspondent

Algiers, Jan. 11 — (AP) — A 5th Army pincers closed in on the German bastion of Cassino, 70 miles from Rome, today with one arm reaching the outskirts of Cervaro, fortified village four miles to the east, headquarters announced.

British troops completed capture of Mount Pedro, five miles southeast of Cassino, and continued to forge ahead. Americans threatened the German mountain defences of Mount Trocchio, less than three miles from Cassino.

As the tentacles of the Allied offensive stretched out to take Cervaro, American troops captured Mt. Di Piperia, 1,500 yards from the village and then pushed down toward the heavily-defended town itself.

American infantry established a foothold on the mountain in the morning against stiff resistance, and then launched an afternoon attack which met no opposition as the Germans had withdrawn.

No Sign of Slackening

There was no sign of slackening in the Allied 5th Army advance, which started a week ago and is progressing steadily. However, there was no evidence of weakness in the German defence nor any indication that the Allies will be able to make a break through for a big gain.

Only patrol activity marked the 8th Army front, where New Zealanders, operating inland from the Adriatic, ambushed a German patrol of 30 men, inflicting casualties.

Air and sea activity flared over the Italian and Balkan areas, as night bombers returned to Sofia to pound the Bulgarian capital in a swift follow-up to yesterday's daylight raid, and British destroyers sank three German schooners and damaged four others trying to run the blockade to Civitanova, Ancona and San Benedetto.

American heavy bombers devoted their attention to a key Nazi rail bottleneck in the Balkans by attacking Skoplje in Yugoslavia, encountering no opposition.

Communications Attacked

Two-engined bombers hit San Benedetto, 35 miles north of Pescara, the 8th Army's objective on the Adriatic coast, while dive-bombers attacking communications north of Rome destroyed six German vehicles, a large ammunition truck, a tank and locomotive.

R.A.F. and American bombers and fighters supported Allied troops in the battle area, while R.A.F. Wellingtons bombed an airfield at Villorba, 30 miles from Venice, and R.A.F. Mosquitos and Marauders shot up trains in the Po Valley and near Bordeaux and Toulouse in France.

Nine German planes were destroyed for a loss of three Allied aircraft, headquarters said.

Pilot Having Met Jap and Nazi Airmen Says Japanese Is Toughest Opponent

By ALLAN NICKLESON
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Jan. 11 — (CP) — Only Canadian in the Mediterranean war theatre to have met both Japanese and Germans in air combat, Flt.-Lt. Hedley Everard considers the Japanese as the tougher opponent of the two.

"Both the Germans and the Japs are good in the air," said the 23-year-old flight commander from (101 Tamarack St.) Timmins, Ont. "But the Japanese consider it an honor to die for their Emperor and will fight to the end — if it is practically suicide. Once they start coming at you, they keep on coming.

"The German fights well but he has no hesitation in turning and running for home when things get tough.

Hedley had just returned from a front-line patrol over the Sangro river when three touring Canadian war correspondents now back in London cornered him in the squadron mess tent on a muddy plain in Italy. He hasn't seen many Nazi planes — except wrecked ones on the ground — since he joined the City of Windsor Squadron last summer after a year in India.

"I think German planes are slightly better than those of the Japs, mainly because they carry more armor," he said. "However the Jap planes are very good. Take the Zero, for instance. It's fast and manoeuvrable, and there are plenty of them."

Now approaching 300 hours of operational flying, Hedley was posted to the Far East a year ago and flew Hurricanes in Burma. His squadron was the only R.A.F. fighter unit on that front.

1919 'Curzon Line' Offered As Basis For a New Border

Gov't Says Poland Can Be Rebuilt With Areas Taken From Germany

OFFICIAL DECLARATION

London, Jan. 11 —(CP)— A clear warning that the Russians will not yield the Ukrainian and White Russian territories incorporated into the Soviet Union in 1939 came Tuesday from the Soviet government, which at the same time reaffirmed its desire for a strong, independent Poland to be rebuilt with areas taken from Germany, assuring her an outlet to the Baltic Sea.

In an official declaration broadcast by the Moscow radio, the Russians offered the "Curzon Line" of 1919 as a possible basis for a new Russian-Polish border, a line which would leave the U.S.S.R. in possession of all but 3,800 square miles of the Polish territory the Red army occupied under the 1939 Soviet-German partition of Poland.

Against Polish Government.

The Soviet declaration, asserting that Russia was striving "towards the establishment of friendship between the Soviet and Poland on the basis of solid, good-neighborly relations and mutual respect," also suggested that Poland could join the Soviet Union and Czecho-Slovakia in a bulwark against the Germans by becoming a party to the Soviet-Czech mutual assistance pact recently signed in Moscow.

The broadcast, however, used strong language in referring to the Polish government in London, asserting that the "emigre Polish government, cut off from its people, has shown itself incapable of establishing friendly relations with the Soviet Union."

There was a wide but unconfirmed belief that the Moscow declaration had been known in advance to the British and American governments. It was learned that Britain, at least, knew of the recent Polish note to the United Nations before it was issued.

The principal obstacle to an early settlement and a resumption of diplomatic relations appeared to be Moscow's outspoken opposition to Poland's government in London which thus far has refused to talk, openly at least, of any compromise of the eastern boundary.

Except to say that an early meeting of the Polish government is expected, Poles declined immediate comment on the declaration.

Will Expressed by Plebiscite

"As is known," declared the Moscow broadcast, "the Soviet constitution established the Soviet-Polish border in accordance with the will of the population of the western Ukraine and western Byelo-Russia (White Russia) as expressed in a plebiscite which was carried out on a wide democratic' basis in 1939...

"The inclusion of the western Ukraine and western Byelo-Russia in the structure of the Soviet Union not only did not violate the interests of Poland but on the contrary created a reliable basis for a solid, permanent friendship between the Polish people and their neighboring Ukrainian, Byelo-Russian and Russian peoples."

The broadcast asserted, however, that while the 1939 incorporation corrected "the injustice permitted by the Riga agreement in 1921," the Soviet government "does not regard 1939 borders as unchangeable," declaring that corrections could be made in districts in which there is an overwhelming Polish population.

The declaration emphasized that Poland's western borders "must be extended by means of incorporating in Poland the primordial Polish lands previously taken away by Germany, without which the whole Polish people cannot be united to its state, which will receive by this means a necessary outlet to the Baltic Sea."

Poland Rejected Proposal.

This apparently would involve the cession of East Pussia by Germany to a reconstituted Poland.

Suggesting that the "Curzon Line" could be the basis of a Russian-Polish border, the broadcast recalled that this line was accepted in 1919 by the Supreme Council of the Allied powers and noted that it provided for the inclusion of the Western Ukraine and Western White Russia in the Soviet Union.

This line, proposed in 1919 by Lord Curzon, the late British Foreign Secretary, in seeking to end a Russian-Polish frontier war, would run from Grodno in the north, approximately 150 miles south to Brest-Litvosk, thence southeastward along the Bug River. This would have placed the Polish cities of Lwow, Pinsk, Vilna and Tarnapol in Russia.

An Allied council endorsed Curzon's proposal, but Poland rejected it. After two years of fighting, the Treaty of Riga was signed in 1921, establishing the border as it was known until the partition of 1939.

Poles Fall Victim To a New Phase Of German Terror

London, Jan. 11 —(CP Reuters)—Tens of thousands more Poles have fallen victim to a new phase of the German terror which began in October, Polish Home Minister Wladyslaw Banaczyk said in a broadcast last night.

"Up to Dec. 10, 617 persons had been shot in 23 public executions in Warsaw alone," he said. "In Cracow and neighborhood up to Dec. 5, 596 persons had been shot publicly. In Torun 400 have been shot and the same thing is happening all over Poland.

"The Germans are murdering thousands of Poles daily in Pawiak Prison in Warsaw and in hundreds of other prisons and concentration camps. These murders, unlike the public executions, are done secretly in prison cells and 'interrogation rooms' of the Gestapo headquarters."

Mayor Advocates Committee to Meet Returning Soldiers

Members of Belleville city council, together with the personnel of the various city boards, city hall and other civic officials, were guests of the local Rotary Club at the regular weekly luncheon held Monday noon. Presence of city officials at Rotary is an annual event at their first meeting of the new year.

Members of the city hall staff were introduced by Rotarian Wilfred Holmes, city clerk, while members of the various city boards were introduced by their respective chairmen. Police chief Walter Probert and Deputy Chief Arthur Harman were also guests.

Introduction of city council members was by Mayor Harry Rollins, who expressed his appreciation to Rotary for the invitation. All council members, with the exception of Alderman William Harvey were present.

Graciously accepting the offer of Rotarian co-operation with the city council from President Jack Deacon, Mayor Rollins paid tribute to the fine atmosphere of good fellowship evinced in the club. He was proud of the work done by service clubs in the city he said.

Turning to matters pertaining to city interest Mayor Rollins advised his respective committee chairmen to prepare their estimates for the year with a view to maintenance that a policy for strict economy be practised. "Keep in mind that you have the interests of the city at heart," he said.

Must Welcome Boys Back

Reference was made to the post war rehabilitation program, the Mayor indicating every effort must be made to have a program ready to go into action upon the close of hostilities. He particularly urged that a committee comprised of city officials and representatives of Service Clubs be formed to meet trains on which boys from overseas would be returning.

"We must welcome these boys back home to show that we appreciate what they have been doing for us," he said. "True, it will take effort on our part to meet all trains, but they have sacrificed their all for us."

Alderman Clarence Clapp, as chairman of the Regional Planning Committee, told Rotarians that this department was "very important." He especially advocated, that the city esplanade along the Moira River be completed and asserted, that the parks in the city were in a terrible shape. The regional planning in the mind wof Alderman-elect admitted, but it was intimated lowering of taxes below operating costs was poor policy.

The uppermost point of city planning in the ind of Alderman-elect Lorne McDougall was the matter of beaches. First, however, there must be a clean-up of the water in the Bay of Quinte, which was now in a poor condition. As member of the Post War Planning Commission he had urged that council set aside funds for preliminary work, that would lead to the construction of a much needed sewage disposal plant in the city, but this had been turned down by council.

"I do not advocate that the tax rate in the city of Belleville be lowered," he said. "I rather urge for the present rate to be maintained Taxes must not be lowered at the expense of the city services."

Other Members Speak

Other newly elected council members to speak briefly were Alderman Newton Wilbur and Alderman Trudeau. Mr. Wilbur intimated that as chairman of labor he had been told there would not be much to do during wartime but expressed the hope that with the help of council members he would be able to handle any difficulties, which arose. Mr. Trudeau stated, that he had already collaborated with Mr. Owen Herity in the matter of publicity for the city and indicated, that before the year was completed something concrete in the way of a program would be forthcoming.

Alderman H. J. Clarke, chairman of Finance, indicated the debt of the city had been cut in two during the past four years and explained in brief several changes recently instituted in city sinking fund procedure.

$88,000 Surplus

Investigation by the auditor into the city sinking fund had shown there was a surplus of some $88,000 beyond legal requirements and representation to the Municipal Board had resulted in certain rates either being reduced or discontinued. Levy for debentures on King George School had been reduced, while as of 1st January, 1943, it had become permissible to cease levying for sinking fund purposes against unpaid city debentures.

President Jack Deacon welcomed Rotarian Grant Proctor back to the weekly luncheons. It was Mr. Proctor's first appearance at Rotary since he took ill some months ago. It was also announced that the application of Rev. Dr. A. J. William Myers into Rotary had been accepted by the club. Leo Riggs acted as pianist for the sing song period with "Sandy" Burrows acting as song leader and Charlie Dolan as sergeant-at-arms.

Don Cossack Chorus Inspires Audience by Supreme Artistry, Atmosphere of Wide Range of Song

Colorful and dashing best describes the appearance of the General Platoff Choral unit at the Belleville Collegiate auditorium on Monday evening as they marched across the stage dressed in the picturesque and authentic garb of the Don Cossacks who all fought for the Czarist Russia in the last war. Conducted by Nicholas Kostrukoff, the twenty-seven voices raised in song "made live again" the folk ballads, heroic war songs, lullabies and mystical church music of their native land and transformed the stage, the very atmosphere of the auditorium, into a Russian phantasy. Their wide range of repertoire was extended to include Negro spirituals, operatic excerpts and songs in English and Spanish.

This versatile chorus, all of whom possess fine and resonant voices of ample breadth and weight, blends itself in perfect and effective harmony under the excellent direction of its leader. Their voices of glowing quality emitted and controlled with taste and assurance and demonstrating deep feeling and dramatic fervour are the qualities, the sparks, which set their audience afire and turned the polite applause into a burst of enthusiasm. Singing with fresh, fervent and noble feeling, they portray with expressiveness their intense dramatic characters. As a conductor, Nicholas Kostrukoff proves himself capable, inspiring and masterful.

But it was their rendition of "Dark Eyes," a Russian Gypsy song, and their musical-comedy interpretations, which proved the determining factor of their success with their listeners, and brought them back in several encores.

A part of the program was invariably given over to the brilliant dances of their native land, dances which harmonize with the music of Russia. These included the authentic dances of the Cossack regiments, national and provincial dances from the various parts of the great Russian territory, and one of their great, great specialties, "The Sword Dance," with S. Tavasieff as dancer, the traditional and unique property of the Cossacks of the River Don and the Caucasian Mountains.

It was through the efforts of the masters and students of the Belleville Collegiate Institute and Vocational School and particularly through the work, unstinted time and fullest co-operation of the executive committee, comprised of M. H. Hancock as chairman; G. N. Maybee, in charge of publicity; W. E. Davies, ticket sales and S. B. Pallett as treasurer, that the people of Belleville were given the opportunity of hearing the Platoff

Pte. J. P. Seames Lost Left Arm In Sicilian Drive

Having suffered the loss of his left hand and arm when blown off his motorcycle by a shell burst from a German 88 millimetre gun, Pte. Joseph P. Seames, 32, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Seames, 61 Foster Ave., is back in Belleville after seeing battle action during the invasion of Sicily. He returned to Canada aboard the Lady Nelson and after a brief period in military hospital in Kingston came home over the weekend.

Enlisting in the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment early in the war Pte. Seames went overseas with the 1st contingent and after extensive training in England went to the Mediterranean war theatre for the Sicilian invasion. A despatch rider with his unit, he was wounded at Assoro when the big German anti-tank gun shell knocked him out of the war.

Back in Belleville after four years overseas, Pte. Seames met old friends, when he was guest at Monday evening's Kinsmen Club meeting. He wears on his shoulder the white shoulder flashes of the British Eighth Army, indicating he was one of General Montgomery's men. Fire Destroys Trenton Home

Trenton, January 11.— Fire, which completely destroyed the roof of a two-family residence at 263 Dundas Street West, early Monday was the means also of destroying the household effects of Flt Lt. W. Staveley and Sergeant C. E. Sayles of the R.C.A.F., the latter married just six months ago.

Wakened by a crackling sound Mrs. Sayles, alone in the upper apartment, while her husband was on duty watch, rushed to the hall only to be met by a blast of flames. She rushed downstairs, awakened the Staveley's and fled with them from the house, still attired only in night clothes.

Firemen were called and were quickly on the scene and with their new pumper were able to get the blaze under control in a short time but not before great damage was done. The roof was completely demolished and contents of both apartments were damaged either by fire, smoke or water. It is thought the fire might have been caused by defective wiring as it appeared to have started near the roof.

The building, it is understood, is owned jointly by Mr. J. Berry and Miss C. Shannick and is partly covered by insurance.

'Conchie' Given Month in Jail

Convicted of failing to report to the Chalk River conscientious objectors' camp after being ordered so to do by the Alternative Service Office, Raymond A. McCoy, 156½ Church St., was sentenced to serve one month in the common jail by Magistrate J. L. Lloyd in police court here today. At the request of E. E. Follwell, special prosecutor, McCoy will be turned over to the Chalk River conscientious objectors' camp authorities at the expiration of his jail sentence.

Mr. W. J. Hysop, Alternative Service Officer from Kingston, testified that McCoy had appeared before the Board as a conscientious objector in October, 1943, at which time he was ordered to the Chalk River camp.

"My son is willing to work. He was taken from service station work by the Selective Service and promised another job by the Selective Service. That job did not materialize," stated McCoy's father in protest. A Sidney Township farmer was called and admitted he would not employ the accused under the circumstantial surroundings. "The Selective Service refused him a job," added the father.

"We'll look into that," replied Magistrate Lloyd, as he called Eric Nayler, of the local Selective Service Board, as witness. "This man refused to sign over a portion of his wages to the Canadian Red Cross, in accordance to the Governmental regulations," explained Mr. Nayler.

McCoy conducted his own case and cross examinations. His Worship stated he could find no excuse whatsoever to substantiate the accused man's actions and passed the jail sentence with the order that he be removed to Chalk River at the expiration of the term.

Dinner Party.

A dinner party was held in the recreation hall at Batawa on Wednesday evening in honor of Mr. W. J. Miller, government inspector. Mr. Miller has been with the Bata Co. for the past three years. He left Friday to take over new duties in the West.

Mr. Thomas Bata was chairman for the evening. In a few words Mr. Bata expressed sincere regret at Mr. Miller's leaving and also paid high tribute to the thoroughness of his work. Mr. Louis Stojan made the presentation of a Gladstone bag and a fully equipped travelling kit.

In response Mr. Miller paid tribute to the spirit of co-operation he had received in his work while here and the pride he felt in having completed a good job. He expressed the hope of returning to Batawa soon as he feels that he has become a permanent resident since he is a property owner in the district.

During the evening two outstanding visiting industrialists were introduced, Mr. J. Bartos of Batagaanar, India, General Manager of the Bata Shoe Co. of India, introduced to the gathering by Mr. Anthonk Cekota, and Mrs. J. Tusa, General Manager of the British Bata Shoe Co., at East Tilbury, England, introduced by Dr. K. Herz.

As a part of the program of the evening Mr. Jerry Solmers led in community singing. Managers of the different departments of the factory and members of the department in which Mr. Miller worked were present as guests at this special occasion.

Personals.

Miss Doris Duncan of Toronto was a guest at the home of her uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Duncan of Batawa for the New Year's weekend.

Canadian Fliers Most Efficiently Dressed Airmen in the World

In this second of a series of four stories on research developments in the R.C.A.F., a Canadian Press staff writer tells of the scientific energy that goes into the design and production of clothing and other supplies used by airmen on the war fronts.

By JACK BRAYLEY
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Ottawa, Jan. 11. (CP)— The big airman from Calgary piloting a bomber over Berlin is about as comfortably and efficiently dressed as any airman in the world. So is his fellow Canuck from Fredericton back in the ice-box tail. And the groundmen, grooming planes in Alaska or the African desert, aren't forgotten.

For behind the flying equipment of the R.C.A.F. are weeks and months—and some times years—of scientific research that have produced marvels in functional clothing design which have, in many cases, been copied by other United Nations.

Take the curve-fingered flying glove, now used by most Allied air forces.

Flying scientists, searching out problems, noticed the old standard glove gave Airmen little comfort in sub-zero temperatures and greatly reduced efficiency.

A glove was needed that combined warmth, flexibility, durability, economy and efficiency. Quiet men like Group Cap. Ed Hall, chairman of an Air Force Research Committee, got around a table and talked things over with a physiologist, physicist, geologist, textile chemist. Textile engineer, medical officer and a member of air crew—the latter for practical advice.

Model in Curved Position.

The investigating scientist presents the problem and his colleagues —civilian and service—do the work. Skin and blood temperatures are measured at sub-zero temperatures and clothed in various thicknesses of material. The ideal material is of little use when the fingers, in assuming their natural bent position, cause a pressure at the joints and subsequent loss of warmth. Then one scientist hit upon the idea of modelling the glove fingers in the natural curved position.

But the glove must be easily removed in case of emergency in temperatures down to 40 below. So a zipper is installed from forefinger and then to wrist. A thin form-fitting rayon glove and wool glove, smooth on the inside, completes the assembly.

Now the airman can yank the zipper, and pull off the wool insulating glove. The rayon affords enough protection in the chilling cold for the two minutes emergency work required with the slide rule, instrument panel, jammed gun, radio knob or engine gadget. Then back goes the hand into its snug covering and the guy from Winnipeg or Toronto is nearer top efficiency than his poorer equipped opponent.

The one-piece, teddy-bear flying suit was found lacking in many respects. So a two-piece utility flying suit was devised after another exhaustive scientific research program.

Will Not Compress.

Among its features are double-pile, carpet-like lining which is both flexible and does not compress so as to loose its insulation value; quick-release zippers— handily installed—so that in case of a crash the suit can be easily discarded; special shoulder and elbow joints so engineers and gunners can reach their gadgets; water repellant in case of use on life dinghies after a crash on water and flash resistant as a protection from burns.

To develop a utility flying helmet that is perhaps the best now in service anywhere the head measurements were taken of 1,000 Canadian airmen and six standard sizes evolved.

And the ground crews and airwomen have not been forgotten. The world has been zoned by the scientists and surveys made and a schedule of appropriate equipment drawn up for each area. It includes everything from anti-glare glasses, ice-creepers, and eskimo-like mukluk boots to special super-absorbing hankies for dripping noses in cold climes, kneelets, sand puttees and special ankle length drawers for airwomen serving in wintry jobs.

Skater, Friend Break Thru Ice

While skating on the bay adjacent to Cow Island Monday afternoon, Frank Sparks, 12 Willard St., and a companion, broke through the ice into water well beyond their depth. However, the two young men managed to secure a hold onto the solid ice and later other skaters, who were nearby, formed a human chain and managed to save the pair, who were in the water some considerable time before being rescued.

According to reports received at the police station through P. C. Thomson, Sparks held onto the ice with one hand and grabbed hold of his companion and held him up until assistance came through the medium of the human chain. The pair were skating towards Cow Island where they observed a bon fire, when they broke through the ice. Their cries were heard by skaters on the island.

The water-soaked pair had to skate back to Belleville with their clothes wet and freezing. P. C. Thomson assisted Mr. Sparks, whose skating boots were frozen to his feet, when the officer drove him home and assisted in thawing the ice off.

J. WILLIAMS ELECTED TO HIGH POST IN MOOSE

The regular meeting of Quinte Division Ontario Legion No. 187 of the Moose was held in the lodge-room Monday evening. The meeting was well attended and H. Allison was in the chair. Much business was transacted after which the election of officers took place. H. Allison, Past North Moose, J. Williams, North Moose, Fred Gouthier, South Moose, G. Benedict, East Moose, C. McCormick, West Moose, O W. Pierce, Assistant Herder, G. Silverthorn, Guiding Moose. Past North Moose H. Allison delivered a splendid address on the work of the Moose in Britain. Council Members Entertained By Kinsmen Club

Twelve members of the City Council were the guests of the Belleville Kinsmen Club at their first meeting of the New Year held in the Hotel Quinte Monday night.

His Worship the Mayor, himself a Kinsmen, introduced the Aldermen individually, and expressed his regret, that two members of the Council were unable to attend. He reported, that he and his Council had attended the weekly luncheon of the Rotary Club on Monday noon and that he had appealed to that body to appoint a representative committee to unit with the City Council committee, Kiwanis and Kinsmen Clubs committees and other organizations in organizing a reception committee to meet returning veterans, who are invalided home from overseas.

The subject was introduced at last night's meeting by Kin 'Bouncer Holway, who couthed his speech in a firm and determined manner, saying, that it was inexcusable to permit the men, who had served their country, and by serving their munity, to return to the city to muniuty, to return to the city to an indifferent reception. He urged that more than plans be made, that a citizens' representative committee, headed by the Mayor, be put into shape and perform immediately. The Mayor replied, that he would promise, that he would be at the train each time one arrived in Belleville carrying wounded veterans or repatriated local men.

Refers to Youth Movement.

Following his introduction of the City Council to the members of the Club, Mayor Rollins stated, that there was another important job to be done in the city, which must have priority rating on the list of civic welfare activities. He referred to the youth movement in the city and asked that the Kinsmen, as well as the Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs give their support to the City Council in the promoting of skating rinks and juvenile hockey teams in the city this winter. Mayor Rollins stated that the City Council would do everything in their power to perfect the plans in formation but said, that the job would be so much easier and better with the co-operation of the Service Clubs. He referred to his Council as "The greatest Council in the history of Belleville".

President Matt Currie replied to the Mayor' speech and extended the thanks of the Kinsmen Club to the City Council for their presence at their meeting. He thanked them for the co-operation they had shown during 1943 in the endeavours of the Club to raise funds to carry on their Fag Fund and Milk for Britain Fund. He asked for the continued support of this civic body for 1944, which he said he hoped would be a bigger and better year than ever before.

Tells of Party.

Immediate Past-President, "Boiler" Lloyd was called upon to tell of the Kinsmen Christmas Party to underprivileged children of the city and county. Kin Lloyd passed a number of photographs among the members, which were taken in the Shelter Home at Shannonville. He described the emotional reaction of several of the members, who were present on the occasion and said that it was the most worthwhile thing he had done since he had been installed as president of the Club in January, 1943. Inadvertently, in the account of the Christmas party reported in the paper, the name of one of the volunteer entertainers. Mr. Bruce Sills, was omitted from the story. Not only was he present, but his musical entertainment went far toward making the children happy on that occasion.

J. O. Herity, Guest Speaker.

The guest speaker for the evening was Mr. J. Owen Herity, manager of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce. He selected as his subject theme, "Politics and Politicians". After a brief introduction by Kin Tom Mascaro, who said that Mr. Herity was too well known to everybody present to need a complete biographical introduction. Mr. Herity replied to the introduction in a jocular manner and carried his listeners through several well chosen stories before launching into the more serious side of his speech.

He opened his subject by stating that "Politics is the science of Government, which," he continued, "is the dictionary definition of the word, and a good definition. But, it is something more than just that, although a lot of people are coming to the opinion that there is something low and mean about politics and politicians are classed with the scoundrels. I wish to take strong exemption to such a description of politicians, or politics. Politics has to do with the clothes we wear, the food we eat, our relations with our own family, it has to do with the building up of our children, it enters the home, our relations with our neighbors. It has to do with our Government and with all our public and social relations as well, the religion we may profess. It is just about the most important thing in this world, and to say that you are not interested in politics is to say that you are not interested in the things of this world or in this life.

Men of Fine Character.

"Think of the men in the Government, and think of their predecessors. They were all politicians, but let me tell you this, that all those men whom we have learned so well by name, our local representatives, both in Provincial and Dominion positions, our Prime Minister and his predecessors, are men of the finest character and of the highest integrity, and do not let any of us cast aspersions on any of them. Think of the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Winston Churchill; he is an astute politician, and he has not been a hard and fast party man. He was brought up a Conservative, but he left the Conservative Party when he thought it was necessary and joined forces with Mr. Lloyd George, and he went back to being a Conservative when he thought it was time, and is now leading a Coalition Government.

Mr. Herity then remarked upon the character of Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt, asking whether there was a shrewder politician in this world. He called him a politician par excellence. Mr. Herity referred to the origin of the Party System in England and urged that every young man in Canada should attach himself to some political party and to become active in the interests of whichever party he chooses. He referred to the privilege of the secret ballot and likened it to the ancient Roman citizen who thought himself a king among men by being a citizen of Rome, stating that the privilege of citizenship in Canada was greater than it ever was in Rome, that Canadians were truly kings among men.

The regular business meeting of the club was held following the address by Mr. Herity. An amusing comedy skit was performed by Kinsmen Rollins, Lloyd, Farrar and Knott, which was enjoyed by everyone present. Other club business was brought up for discussion with any member permitted to formulate his opinion, and several distinct opinions were expressed.

MYSTERY SURROUNDS BREAKING OF POLE

Mystery surrounds the breaking off of a telephone pole at the intersection of Foster Ave. and Dundas St. sometime late Monday night. The damaged pole was discovered by a telephone employee and the accident reported to police authorities this morning. The pole was undoubtedly struck by a motor vehicle that apparently skidded on the icy pavement prior to collision with the upright.

Quinte Skating Club Elects D. Bews As Pres.

Favored with perfect skating weather a vastly increased interest is being shown in figure skating this season it is indicated by officials of the Quinte Skating Club who point to a practically doubled membership over last year. At present there are well over 100 members, all taking full advantage of the opportunities offered to practise and enjoy regular skating periods.

Election of officers for the Quinte Skating Club held recently saw Mr. Douglas Bews named as the president with the following being appointed to the executive: Steve Licence; A. F. Y. Leslie, Bill Davies, George Wishart, Norm Reid, Roy Ridley, Kaye Martin, Enos David, Mrs. Georgia Smith, Lillian Sprackett, Mrs. Olivia Weese and Mrs. Frederick Andrews.
